THE following letter with respect to the recent Summer School convened by members of the Society of Friends at Scarborough appears in last week's Friend :—

To the Editor of The Friend.

Dear Friend,—Those who, like myself, were unable to hear the lectures and addresses at the Scarborough gathering may be glad, through thy columns, to get some idea of the nature and tendency of the teaching given. So far as appears from these reports, the utterances of our own members seem to have been cautious and well balanced; and although, probably, going further in the acceptance of modern critical opinion than some of us could go, still, in the main, conforming to the admirable advice of this year's Epistle, to be careful as to the words used in reference to Scripture truth, lest we inadvertently sow the seeds of unbelief in young hearts, and thereby cause some of them to stumble. But I doubt whether the same can be said of some of the other lectures reported or summarised in The Friend. Already some Friends have been made very uncomfortable by what they have gleaned from the brief notices supplied day by day to the Yorkshire Herald—an uneasiness which I have endeavoured to allay by the assurance that the Friends mainly responsible for the arrangements, so far from wishing to unsettle the faith of their fellow-members, were honestly desirous of enabling them to meet the cavils and objections which in the present day are so widely circulated in current literature.

But while I still fully believe that this was their intention, I must, after reading what has already appeared, express my great regret that some of the lecturers assumed that much of the Bible history, as we have been taught to believe it, is allegory, or myth, or even pious fiction. I may acknowledge that the modern teaching about the books of Daniel and Jonah leave me not only unconvinced, but absolutely indignant, and send me back for comfort to the books themselves; and, as a counterblast to the learned theories of Drs. Farrar and G. A. Smith to the scholarly commentaries of Pusey. What is supposed to be gained by destroying our belief in the historical character of Jonah and Daniel? Surely the real objection to it lies in the facts being miraculous, and it is one of the most disquieting characteristics of the present time that good, earnest Christian people are so ready to accept theories and statements which in earlier ages were the recognised mark of avowed opponents of Christianity. From denying or doubting the Old Testament miracles to calling in question those recorded by the Evangelists as wrought by our blessed Lord, and even to explaining away his own bodily resurrection, is a fatally easy transition, as may be seen from the painfully interesting life of the late Master of Balliol.

As many of the outside public have been following with interest—some of them with surprise and pain—the published notices, it seems only right that we who strongly dissent from some of the views propounded should be allowed to make known that dissent, and to explain that the Society of Friends is not committed to the views put forth by some of the Scarborough teachers and lecturers.—Thy friend sincerely, Fielden Thorp.

York, August 20, 1897.

The Desecration of the Sabbath west of the Rocky Mountains is very great and trying to the faithful Christians. The holy day has become a holiday for excursions and pleasure parties, for balloon ascensions and shooting matches. Hunting and fishing and sparring matches are very common on the Lord's day, and a great multitude do not remember to keep the Sabbath holy. Many places of business are open, and the saloons are always running, and enticing people in the way of death.—The Pacific.

The Caterpillar's Experience.

THERE was once a caterpillar, which could feel and think, and speak almost like a human being. As it was crawling about on a cabbage leaf one autumn day, something very peculiar overcame it; it got what we should call a higher revelation. It was as if a crown of higher light shone around it. It was as if a foreign power, descended to the very inmost part of its being, would tear it away from the ground and raise it into the air. It was as if an angel on white wings descended and whispered something like music, a sweet prophecy, a promise, a mysterious promise, a promise of butterfly life and butterfly glory. It lasted but a moment. Then the whole revelation was entirely passed. Everything went on as usual.

But the marvellous revelation had made a deep impression on the little caterpillar, which it could not possibly shake off. It felt itself another creature—a creature with a future. And, with all the little strength of its frail caterpillar existence, it kept hold on what the angel had whispered of butterfly life and butterfly glory. What it was exactly it knew not. It yearned so to understand, so earnestly it desired clearly to comprehend. But succeed it did not; the more it exerted itself, the more mysterious it became. And, ah! this brought on doubt and perplexity, and caused the sigh: "It is all fancy, all fancy."

It told it to other caterpillars; these, of course, comprehended it as little. What was worse, the most of them began to mock and say that the poor little fanatic was doting, and would return to its senses if it would only make proper use of its caterpillar's understanding again. With all sorts of questions they began to trouble it. They asked, "What is a butterfly?" and it was obliged to answer, "I do not know." They asked, "What does glory mean?" and it was obliged to answer, "I do not know." They asked how the transition to such a higher position could take place, and it was obliged to answer, "I do not know." Thus they kept on asking for a whole hour. It was entirely shut up, and so tired from continually answering, "I do not know," that it remained silent; and they merrily crawled away, and began to gnaw at the half rotten cabbages, whispering, "This is our glory."

Thus the revelation was a source of pain to our caterpillar; but although the promised glory was not realised, still she continued steadfast; and when it began to freeze at nights, and she began to stiffen, and to weave her own shroud, she became distinctly conscious that every thing seemed to point to a foolish mistake. But then also she continued steadfast, waiting for butterfly life and butterfly glory.

And she was not put to shame. She was withered, shrivelled, buried under snowflakes, lost for good; so it seemed. But at last spring came, and suddenly from the thorn hedge there appeared a beautifully-fledged creature, and it hovered from flower to flower where the cabbages had stood; its crawling had been changed into flying. Everyone who saw it was delighted over the splendid glittering of its wings, and then it needed no longer to stammer, "I know not!" Then it understood what butterfly life and butterfly glory meant.

"We know that when He shall appear, we shall be like Him" (I. John iii. 2). The end of our earthly existence is rapidly drawing near, and then—what then!

There are people who say that we must not thus ask, but rather eat and drink, labour and enjoy ourselves than occupy ourselves with such fruitless questions. Foolish people! As if we could avoid it, only because we wished to do so. As if the question were not powerful enough, even whilst we are eating and drinking, labouring and enjoying ourselves, to force itself upon us. As if God had not laid eternity in the heart. As if they, who would not take the question on their lips, do not feel it burning within them, burning as a question of conscience. As long as we have breath to be able to ask so long do we continue to ask, "And then—what then?"

To which the Psalmist replies, "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness" (Psl. xvii. 5). And the Apostle, "Now we see through a glass darkly, but then face to face" (I. Cor. xiii. 12).

Notice Boards.

YOU all know what a notice board is. It is generally put into a very prominent position, so that all who pass by may read. We find one in a public park stating that it is open during certain hours, and also telling us what rules we have to obey if we are to be allowed to enjoy it. We must behave ourselves in a seemly manner (Prov. xx. 11: Even a child is known by his doings), and we are told not to damage the flowers and the fences, etc.

Now, God has given us this world as his great park, which He wishes us to enjoy, and you young people are some of his flowers, for he has a special notice board to the grown-up not to damage you. He says (Matt. xviii. 6): "Whoso shall offend (cause to sin) one of these little ones which believe in Me it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck and that he were drowned in the depths of the sea." You see how jealously God guards you.

Many of you either live in the country or spend a portion of each year there during your holidays, and you have frequently seen notice boards there, especially on the outskirts of woods to prevent the disturbing of pheasants and other game. But you have also seen this—"NOTICE! No Footpath!" and if you go there you are trespassing. So, too, when we go with bad companions, tell a lie, neglect our work, despise father or mother, and many other things which make us feel a little uncomfortable and get a little red with shame, we are then trespassing, and had better get back to the King's highway as quickly as we can. The Holy Spirit says to our hearts, "No footpath." "My son walk not thou in the way with them" (Prov. i. 15). You know trespassers are prosecuted if they are caught, and we are all certain to be caught some day by that thing called Death, and if we are out of the highway then there is no getting back.

We have been talking of the notices telling us where not to go. Now turn to the others such as this, "This way to the Railway Station!" or "Bridle-path to So-and-so!" God, too, has notices very plainly pointing us to that far country and our eternal home. Here is one:—"Behold" (that is only another word for NOTICE), "the fear of the Lord that is wisdom, and to depart from evil is understanding."—Job xxviii. 28.

Now we count men wise when they construct engineering schemes, lead armies successfully, and conduct large businesses with great skill; but God calls the most insignificant creature wise who fears Him and departs from evil. This is quite possible for each of us.

Pray to God to give you this wisdom which is eternal, and is good for the life that now is as well as that which is to come.

The word Behold, or Take Notice, occurs over sixty times in God's Book. Try and look them up, and see how much is taught us by his Notice Boards,

Bible Study at Northfield.

FROM THE N.Y. "INDEPENDENT."

IT is said that one New York saloon has never been locked since it was opened, many years ago. When the first licence was secured the proprietor took the key which the carpenter had provided, and threw it into the sewer, this act implying that his place should be run "wide open." His intention has been realised.

It may seem unfair to compare a New York saloon with Northfield, and the proprietor of a New York bar-room with Dwight L. Moody, whose name is a household word in nearly every home in Christendom; but there is a similarity after all. Northfield was begun twenty years ago, and from that time till the present, in winter and summer alike, streams of blessing have been pouring forth from this hillside, in the northernmost town of Massachusetts, within walking distance of Vermont and New Hampshire. Now it is a school for girls, who otherwise would not have the educational advantages within the reach of their more fortunate sisters; now it is a school for boys, likewise unable to secure scholastic training; again it is a training-school where thorough Bible study is combined with practical lessons in sewing and cooking; still again it is the output of thousands of volumes of good literature, published cheaply but attractively, to supplant, so far as possible, the trashy literature of the day; and once more it is a summer resort, where one may take his family without fear of contamination and without needing a bank account with four or five figures.

The Bible conferences in the summer occupy the greater part of July and August. Two of them are for young men and young women respectively, while the third, which began July 29 and continued until August 16, is more general in its character and more intense in its application of spiritual truths. In the meetings held for the young people, and often in charge of them, there are special evangelistic services; but in the Bible Conference, as the one now in session is called, it is taken for granted that the people are all Christians; and the aim of Mr. Moody and the principal speakers is to deepen their spiritual life rather than to create the new life; in a word, to make Christians all that it is possible for them to become, rather than to have people begin the Christian life.

Mr. Moody illustrates this idea in various ways. He says that he often sees buildings advertised in New York to let "with power" or "without power." He thinks that many Christians unite with the Church and begin the Christian life "without power." One time in London when he wished to go to the Crystal Palace, he was asked whether he would take a ticket by the "high level" or "low level" road. Not being used to the London transportation system, he took a "low level" ticket, with the result that he was landed some distance from the Palace. "No more 'low levels' for me," says the evangelist, "either in railway trains or in religion. I will take the 'high level' every time in both."

The speakers at the Bible Conference are also "high level" men, but they have a pretty difficult task to get some of the travellers to stop using "low level" tickets. Oftentimes they seem to be on one line, and many of their audiences on the other. But after the first two or three addresses of the intensive style so characteristic of the Keswick School it is easy to see that an impression is settling upon the audience. The conversation changes and the meetings and the topics discussed are on everyone's tongue; little interest is taken in current events; newspapers are purchased not for what they contain about Klondike or Thessaly, golf or yachting, but for the reports of the Conference; and after they are read they are sent broadcast over the country and to local papers, that the seed sown at Northfield may be scattered as widely as possible. Mr. Moody believes in the printing-press, and he urges his friends to use it wherever it is possible to do so. The prayers in the hotels and seminary buildings, in tents and in the public meetings, grow more and more spiritual in matter and more intense in manner as the meetings proceed.

Another characteristic of the impression which the meetings produce is seen in the desire of the people to be alone as much as possible. The guests at the Conference are obliged to sleep two or three or more in a room, so great is the crowd at times; but Mr. Moody urges them to try to get a part of every day when they can be alone for prayer and meditation. He does not press his friends to attend all or many even of the meetings, believing that they will receive greater good from less spiritual "cramming." For instance, last Sunday there were sixteen stated services and many not appointed, and Mr. Moody said that it would make a person crazy to attend them all. The reason for crowding so many into a single day is that some of the people cannot attend the meetings many days, and they wish to receive all that they can while they are here.

The leading speakers at the present Conference are two young London pastors, one an Englishman by birth and the other a product of the Highlands of Scotland. Each of them is thirty-three years old, and, while they hold different views regarding the distinctive tenets of the Keswick school, both are extremely direct in their message to the churches, or rather to church members. They preach in the main to those only who are professed followers of Christ, and endeavour to have them make a full surrender of themselves to Him, renouncing every known sin that they may forsake it and become channels of blessing to the world. So strict are they in their ideas that they would not advise, or scarcely allow, a person to engage in Sunday-schoool teaching or any other form of Christian activity unless his spiritual life was vigorous. They would not let a person undertake Christian work in order to raise the tone of his religious experience. It is simply appalling to sit day after day and listen to the recital of the sins of Christians, general and specific; the profane man, according to a recent sermon in this series, is not the working man, using the name of the Lord in frightful oaths and curses, but the professed follower of Jesus Christ, who is in a lapsed condition and is unconscious of that fact. Jeremiah and Malachi are their favourite prophecies, although frequent references are made to other parts of the Bible for texts and illustrations.

The Englishman, Rev. George Campbell Morgan, is not dependent upon the reputation of university or theological hall for what he knows, as he has never had a collegiate education. But his scholastic training was sufficient to make him a successful teacher of mathematics and the classics for a number of years. For eleven years he has been a regular preacher, but he began his efforts in that direction when he was thirteen years old. He was ordained in 1889, and has held important pastorates, the one previous to the present having been in Birmingham. There and in London large congregations and large accessions to church membership have resulted from his ministry. Like Rev. F. B. Meyer, both Mr. Morgan and his companion speak with great solemnity, as though they felt the importance of the message which they have come so far to bring. Mr. Moody has arranged the meetings so that these two preachers come every morning; one day Mr. Morgan will speak first, and the next day he will be the second speaker.

Rev. George H. C. Macgregor, the Scotchman, is more strict, if one may so speak, regarding the life of the Christian in matters not recognised as sinful. His strictures upon those who smoke or indulge in excessive eating or sleeping, while not unkind in their tone, are uncomfortably frank. He thinks that men and women lose a great deal by sleeping too much and eating too much. Both of the British speakers look as though they ate sparingly and slept only a few hours a day; but there are speakers and singers connected with the Moody and Sankey meetings here and elsewhere who do not show any signs of undue fasting or sleeplessness. Mr. Macgregor is also disturbed by the general conversation which he overhears in Northfield; it is too general to please him. Perhaps, if one heard him preach every Sunday, he would hear different phases of the Christian life presented; but the picture presented here the first week made the Christian life a terribly severe one. One longed for the preaching that taught that

> Religion never was designed
> To make our pleasures less.

Dr. Arthur T. Pierson, of Indianapolis, Detroit, Philadelphia, and London, has given two impressive sermons, one on "The Holy Spirit," and one entitled "In Christ." Dr. Pierson has a summer home not far from the Northfield grounds; and as soon as he returned from England he was invited to speak here. There are few preachers who can find as much in a passage of Scripture or get so much out of a text as Dr. Pierson does. He has been studying the Bible recently to find out the meaning of the various references to the Holy Spirit, and he began his address with announcing the result of his study. He finds some eighteen or twenty references to the Spirit of God which have distinct and symbolic meanings; there are about as many references to Satan, or the evil spirit, also with distinct and symbolic meanings. Is the former the Spirit of Truth? The latter is the spirit of deceit. The Spirit of Holiness, or the Holy Spirit, is met with the spirit of wickedness, or the evil spirit, etc.; and every person is under the power of either the Spirit of God or the spirit of Satan.

Bishop John P. Newman delivered four addresses, which were termed "wonderful productions" by those who heard them. It was the Bishop's first visit to Northfield, and doubtless when he comes again he will bring something equally interesting and about half as long and twice as simple. The people learned more of ancient history and modern travel in the five hours which his four addresses occupied than they would hear from Mr. Moody in a lifetime. The last address of Dr. Newman's, on the Bible, was liked very much. Any man can score a success here who will say a good word for the old Book; but woe to the speaker who suggests the word fable or hints at possible errors. Mr. Moody was asked to speak on this subject one day, and he came out as clear and strong on the authorised lines as if Lyman Abbott had not settled all of the vexed problems the other way within a few months. Jonah does not receive the same treatment at Northfield that he does in Plymouth Church; the Northfield audiences would not tolerate the methods of the critics. The Bible as we have it is to the people who come here the very Word of God, and a penknife preacher never gets two chances to air his views; it is very seldom that he gets one.

Rev. R. A. Torrey, Mr. Moody's representative in Chicago, is giving an interesting series of addresses. In one of them he made a slight reference to the fact that the Salvation Army does not observe the Lord's Supper as the several branches of the Christian Church do; this statement appeared in a report of his address, and the next day he received a savage attack from a man representing the Salvation Army, asking him to read the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians before attacking the Army again; the fact that he had carefully refrained from saying anything which the Army does not admit did not appear to the critic, who had apparently not read the chapter to which he referred.

Dr. A. C. Dixon, of Brooklyn, pastor-evangelist, has given one rousing sermon to Christians. He is to speak here for a week after the regular meetings close. Rev. Teunis A. Hamlin, of Washington, was heard last Sunday. His Bible expositions are always instructive and interesting. Prof. J. M. English, the acting President of Newton Theological Seminary, has spoken with great acceptance.

Mr. Ira D. Sankey, Mr. and Mrs. George C. Stebbins, Mrs. Frank T. Pierson and other singers, help in this branch of the meetings. A large voluntary chorus and a student male quartet also assist. Meetings under the leadership of Dr. W. J. Erdman, of Philadelphia, H. M. Moore, of Boston, and others, are held on Round Top, not far from the Auditorium.

An interesting feature of the services last Sunday was the fact that two of them were conducted by Mr. Moody's sons, and a third by the father. An evangelist from India, "Tamil David," speaks frequently at Camp Northfield and at Round Top. Dr. H. Grattan Guinness, of London, and other missionaries have spoken at several of the meetings. Mr. Moody considers his list of speakers this year the strongest that he has ever had. It is a helpful Conference, is largely attended, and has been a source of blessing to thousands of individuals; its power will be felt in scores of missions and chapels and churches and schools during the coming year.

FROM THE "N. Y. OBSERVER."

Northfield on an August Sunday is an ideal place. The valley of the Connecticut stretches out to its bulwarks of low but picturesque mountains, and the peaceful river broadly flows in graceful curves through the green meadows. On the plateau above the stream, the old town and the new extend for two miles on either side of a long avenue, which is shaded with majestic maples and branching elms. The sunshine is brilliant, but a cool breeze draws through the valley. All is serene and still. From the early hour of six people can be seen moving to the places of prayer. From six to seven, from seven to eight, and from eight to nine, these meetings were held in the Auditorium, each meeting being conducted by a different leader and varying in its constituency. From nine to ten a young men's meeting was held in the Congregational church, whose pastor is now absent in Europe seeking refreshment after a winter of exhausting labour. The only man who never seems to grow old or to need to recruit is Mr. Moody. He is stouter and greyer than when he began his campaign years ago in the Madison-square Garden in New York, but he verifies the promise, "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength." While the young men's meeting was in progress at the church, a young women's meeting was held on "Round Top," a wooded knoll near the seminary buildings.

At ten o'clock the Auditorium was half full, and Mr. Sankey began to sing, leading a chorus choir and the congregation. By half-past ten the building was full. It seats twenty-five hundred, and every seat was taken. People had come from all the hotels and cottages, from the neighbouring towns, from the hillsides and the far-extending valley. Hundreds of wagons, brakes, and phaetons were ranged under trees and in farmyards, and their owners were in the meeting. Mr. Moody came in with several clergymen, and after Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins had sung a beautiful duet he took control of the meeting with his calm and executive hand. He directed some hymns and prayers, and then called upon the pastor of a great church in Washington, D.C., to expound the Scriptures.

The fifth chapter of John was the passage, and the divinity of Christ the leading thought. Power to cure gave authority to teach. If we accept the miracles of Christ we must receive his teachings. Christ claimed to be divine. This was the controversy which ended his life. He claimed power over death and resurrection, the right to judge men, and absolute union with the Father. He did not act of his own distinct motion, but in identical union and will with the Father. He gave legal testimony to his divinity by furnishing witnesses; John Baptist and the Father, and the Scriptures testified of him. Yet the Jews believed not, and Christ said of them, "Ye will not come to Me." The application was terse, but pithy; there must be a consenting heart before there can be a changed heart.

After the exposition of Scripture came singing and a collection, and then Mr. Moody introduced Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, of London. He is a thin, wiry, earnest-faced man with piercing eye and earnest utterance, and a sincerity of speech and manner which at once secures attention. He has no mannerisms, no catchwords, and none of the devices of the platform orator. He began at the beginning, by saying that he should speak of the attitude towards Christ and its results, and should present three pictures which would illustrate the subject—pictures alike, yet different—a kind of series of dissolving views. These pictures were drawn from Luke x. 38; John xi., and John xii. [For notes of this address see p. 10.] The service closed with a prayer and the crowd dispersed, some to a children's meeting on Round Top.

Every hour from one to five in the afternoon was occupied with meetings held at Round Top, in the auditorium, on Mr. Moody's lawn, or at some other consecrated place. Two missionaries who had seen the Armenian massacres told their story in thrilling words, and gave instances of God's answer to prayer and his great deliverances, at one place; Mr. Stanes and Miss Wood addressed the Junior Endeavourers on the lawn; Mrs. Scudder led the mothers' meeting at Marquand; while in the auditorium Mr. Morgan conducted a praise and Bible reading service for a thousand people. The evening saw the auditorium packed with people who came to a regular evangelistic meeting, where the endeavour was to bring sinners to accept Christ as their Saviour and to become his disciples. There was singing by Mr. Sankey and by Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins, earnest appeals and a hopeful result.

Besides these public meetings, the voice of prayer and praise could be heard from many houses by the passers-by, and the atmosphere seemed to be pervaded by a spirit of devotion and religious feeling. The many meetings were designed to give all an opportunity. No one was expected to attend the whole or even a majority of them, but they gave expression to a variety of Christian work and experience, and were intended to provide religious culture and enjoyment for all who had gathered at the Convention. Mr. Moody was the organiser and active manager of everything, and yet there was no anxious cloud upon his brow, nor any appearance of worry or undue excitement in his manner or movements.

When I said to him that there seemed to be a note of discouragement in some of his later utterances, he said that he thought that Christians were backsliding and worldly, but their Master was never more earnest in his calls and admonitions to them; next day at his Bible talk he referred to the conversation, and added: "No, I can't be a pessimist, I believe in the triumph of the Gospel, in the glory of the Redeemer, in every knee bowing to Him, and every tongue confessing to Him, but I say that it is a mistake for the Church to get hand and glove with the world." This Bible talk was one of the characteristic and most useful of the exercises of the Convention. Other speakers may be more moving in their eloquence, and more finished in their rhetoric, and more subtle in their dialectics, but for sense, pungency, mother wit, and a thorough knowledge of the Bible, in happy combination, none are his superiors, and very few are his equals. This work has been tried by fire; where "Ingersoll on Hell" has one reader, "Moody on Heaven" has a hundred; and the number of those who have found the way to heaven through the instrumentalities which he has invented and used under the guidance and power of the Holy Spirit will only be known when the multitudes gather from the east and the west and from the north and the south and sit down with Abraham and Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven.

FROM THE BOSTON "CONGREGATIONALIST."

The Northfield conferences have never yet taken a backward step; and in the numbers attending, in definiteness of aim and breadth of influence, this year shows a distinct advance. One of Mr. Moody's difficulties now has come from the ever-increasing appetite for meetings and addresses. After beginning with three meetings a day, and bluntly asserting that he thought there was danger of spiritual dyspepsia in hearing too much, he has extended the programme, in answer to the popular demand, until one may be listening nearly all day long if he so wishes.

Those who have watched the conferences from year to year from the inside note the growth in attendance. It begins to fill the galleries in the great auditorium. It taxes the accommodations of the hotel, of the seminary buildings, which are all used as temporary hotels, and of the village houses. More campers come and set up their white tents, which add so much to the pilgrimage aspect of the wide campus. The number of country teams hitched along the roadside in the shade, and of bicycles lining the outer wall and the corridors of the auditorium, tell of the influx from the neighbouring towns. From 1,200 to 1,500 people gather twice a day, and more on Sunday, in this little inland town, with its imperfect means of communication with the outside world, to hear plain, pungent, and exceedingly personal Gospel teaching; and the demand is so insatiable that it is proposed this year to extend the work by a series of post-convention addresses continued six times a week well into September.

Watching the quiet inner working of the Conference, it is hard to see whence the rumour of Mr. Moody's impending abdication could have come. There is no change in his beneficent dictatorship, and no abatement of the vigour with which he speaks upon his favourite themes. He still arranges the programme, keeping expectation at its height by never making announcements more than a day in advance. In answer to the question what the subjects for the following day would be, one of the most prominent of the foreign speakers said: "Ah! but we never know. Mr. Moody never tells us beforehand who is to speak. I know that I am not to preach to-night, but I don't know about to-morrow." It must be a trying experience for the speakers, who must be always ready and are never sure when they may be called upon, but it answers the double purpose of keeping expectation on the stretch and allowing the leader to shape the course of thought and study according to the changing need of the moment. A mistake may be rectified, an extreme utterance modified or offset, a false start headed off or withdrawn.

An interesting proof at once of the latent enthusiasm of the audiences and of Mr. Moody's cool good sense came almost at the close of the Conference. After the evening sermon Dr. A. T. Pierson, in one of his most intense and eloquent moods, spoke of the embarrassment of the Mission Boards and the number of young men and women who are ready, but who cannot be sent to foreign fields for lack of money, and then impulsively proposed that there should be a Northfield supplementary fund to be used in spreading information and in sending out workers whom the Boards had no means to send. The audience responded instantly; large sums of money were offered, and larger sums pledged. The whole new movement was apparently launched, but through it all Mr. Moody sat quietly and said never a word, except to tell people who came to him to give him their names but not their money. After the meeting was over he pointed out in private conference that the plan involved the setting up of a new Mission Board in Northfield, where there was no provision for it, and that it was likely to be misinterpreted and taken to imply lack of confidence in the Boards. In the morning the whole plan was withdrawn by a rising vote proposed by the mover of it, and Mr. Moody was cheered when he proclaimed his entire confidence founded on personal knowledge in the agents of the American Board and the other Boards, and urged people to send the money they had offered, and yet more, to these recognised and honoured agencies.

It is the devotional life which is the crown of the Northfield year. There is intellectual stimulus; abundant opportunities for social enjoyment and out-of-door life are provided, but a stranger must yield to the devotional spirit or feel himself out of place. For spiritual help and sympathy, for opportunities of devotional—not critical—Bible study and meditation the opportunity is unique in America, if not in the world. It already attracts visitors from the ends of the earth. Those who have tasted its feast return again and again. It ought to become a retreat and an inspiration for many more.

Things Pertaining to the Spirit.*

By Rev. Dr. A. T. PIERSON.

IN 1 Cor. xii. 1 the Apostle Paul is, without doubt, referring to the entire range of matters which pertain to the Holy Ghost—his Person, character, office, administration, and indwelling in the human soul. What, then, is our individual attitude towards the Holy Spirit, in whose dispensation we now live? Much of the power of his inworking and outworking may depend upon our intelligent apprehension, worshipful disposition, and obedient frame in this connection. God's latest gift embraces former ones, for the Spirit illumines the Word and shows us Christ.

The Spirit of God is presented in the Word under eighteen aspects, with associated symbols; and a brief review of these may serve as an introduction to certain vital truths which I desire to emphasise this morning.

We have, then, the Divine Spirit, the eternal Spirit, the Spirit of truth, of witness to Christ, of conviction, holiness, life, adoption, help, witness in the believer, liberty, wisdom or revelation, promise, love, a sound mind, grace, glory, and prophecy.

Now, for every character which the Holy Spirit sustains to the believer, the devil has an opposite relation to the unbeliever. He is the spirit of lies in contrast to the Spirit of truth; he is also the spirit of denial, delusion, evil, death, apostasy, hindrance, doubt and fear, bondage, blindness, remorse, hatred, perversity, despite, blasphemy, false divination.

Let us not shrink from the truth that every one of us is inhabited by one of these two spirits. There is no middle ground. One of the most awful forms of present-day heresy is denial of the express teaching of the Word of God concerning the personality of the devil. We might just as well deny the existence of the Holy Spirit. Surely "our own evil inclinations" would not be called by the name of "the prince of the power of the air" (Eph. ii. 2); and this is only one of many testimonies on the subject in the Epistle.

The evil one being our adversary, we are to stand and resist him, and not to give place by an inch (Eph. iv. 27), but, standing on the finished work of Christ, we are to defy Satan. If, while I am speaking, you resist the truth, if you are indulging a frivolous mood, and if in any wise you are absorbed in the things that perish, you are giving place to the devil. In Eph. vi. 10-12 we have the most remarkable of all passages about Satan. "Principalities, powers, rulers of the darkness of this world, spiritual wickedness in high places." Is that the "evil inclinations of our own hearts"?

"I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven." He has ever been the accuser of the brethren in that High Court. They cannot be vindicated on the ground of innocence; but One like unto the Son of Man rises and says, "This child of God is linked with Me, and the accusation is therefore against Me." When Jesus Christ ascended as the accepted atonement for human sin Satan fell from heaven; for Christ then became the vindicator in that great Court of Equity. Hence Satan, who cannot stand before the pierced hand of the Great Advocate, and who cannot deny the beauty of his life, the grandeur of his obedience, and the all-sufficiency of his suffering, turns all his malice, hatred, and bitterness against the believer on earth, seeking to lead him astray by false doctrine and ungodly practice, by appeals to fleshly lusts, and by temptations to apostasy.

We may justly say that the ascension of Jesus Christ was the scene of the greatest conflict ever known between the forces of darkness and the powers of light; for therein Satan saw a ransomed humanity ascend in the person of the Son of God, to take its place on the throne of the universe. But Christ prevailed as a mighty Conqueror over the principalities and powers of the air, leading death itself captive in his train, and the blessed fruits of that triumph are ours.

There is a terrible reverse to the picture as regards "the children of disobedience," who are indwelt and controlled by the evil one, though the fact may not be patent in flagrant forms of awful iniquity. Nevertheless, they who are disobedient in not receiving the Gospel prove themselves under the influence of him who pollutes the very atmosphere we breathe with his diabolical suggestions.

But let us consider some few relations of the Holy Spirit to the children of God. First, He is the breath of the believer; and if He be absent from our religious life it is a thing abhorrent to God. Creeds, orthodoxy, elaborate ritual, are poor substitutes for a heart full of spiritual worship. God is not to be deceived by a beautifully engraven censer without spiritual incense.

There is a strange expression in Hebrews about purging the conscience from dead works. What are they? Works of apparent charity, mercy, and self-sacrifice, with no real love of God or man behind them—giving because others give, and because it would not do for you to be out of such company; asking men to social functions, that you may be asked of them in return. Churches and individuals really dominated by the Holy Ghost will bear sound if simple fruit of a godly kind.

When we are alive unto God the Spirit brings knowledge; for we only have clear perceptions of and growing acquaintance with Divine things as the Holy Ghost opens our inner eyes. Then the Spirit witnesses with our spirit that we are the sons of God, and becomes the earnest of full redemption. When much so-called work of God is done under constraint, how blessed is the influence of the Spirit of liberty! A great many Christians are dry pumps out of which you get nothing unless it has first been put in; but the progression of Psa. i. from cleanness to ripeness, holiness, and liberty, is a blessed picture of the operations of God's free Spirit. Again, as John says, he that is born of God feels that he cannot go on sinning; and this is the effect of being indwelt by the Spirit of holiness which conforms us to the image of Christ.

Holiness is succeeded by love as a fruit of the indwelling Spirit; and then comes his manifestation as the Spirit of power. If we come into conflict with the forces of nature, we suffer injury. Light then blinds, heat burns, electricity kills, gravitation crushes us to atoms. But suppose we obey the law of these elements, what then? They become our obedient servants, light becomes our artist, heat melts our metals for manufacture; electricity becomes our illuminator, motor, and messenger over the earth; magnetism guides our vessels over the trackless waters of the deep. Obedience taking the place of resistance, these forces become the genii of the universe to do our bidding. So, if we do despite to the Spirit, we seal our own condemnation; but if we obey the laws of the Holy Ghost, we may reverently say He becomes our servant, for God says, "Concerning the work of my hands, command ye Me."

The solemn question, then, presses for immediate settlement, whether we are to yield to Satan's control, or whether we should acknowledge the beneficent sway of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, through the Spirit.

A Warning Cry.

Many will recognise a once well-known and much-blessed witness of Jesus Christ in the writer of the following letter:—

Spiritually things are in a dull, low state. The complaint is, the Lord's people live at such a "poor, dying rate," and that there are so few conversions. So far as I can see numbers of professing Christians really do not know what they are saved from or what they are saved for. I have tried again and again, in conversation, to show our standing in the first Adam and our glorious standing in our Lord, the second Adam. How wide it is.

There seems to me, too, a great, a vital need for setting forth the truth—very plainly showing clearly the dividing line between those who are really Christ's and those who are unsaved. For instance, I read the clear statement in Rom viii. 9, "Now, if any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his." I ask myself the question, "If not his, whose is he?" I see but two—the Lord Jesus and Satan. Passages which make me tremble come to mind: John xii. 31 and xiv. 30, Ephes. ii. 2, 2 Cor. iv. 4, 1 John v. 19, Heb. ii. 14, Acts xxiv. 18, 1 John iii. 10, John viii. 44; Matt. xiii. 38, etc., etc.

I praise the Lord more and more for the grand assurance, Isa. liii. 12, "He shall divide the spoil with the strong." The Lord Jesus is the alone mighty Deliverer, God's free, full, perfect Remedy. May we rejoice and glorify Him for his great salvation.

"Deal Gently."

"Deal gently, for my sake, with the young man, even with Absalom."

HERE is a hint to the worker to deal gently with the sinner for the Lord's sake. The Christian worker is the messenger of the Lord of Hosts, entrusted with the word that can waken the dead, with the most stupendous message that man ever heard, and life or death eternal depending on his faithfulness. The Holy Spirit is ready to give accent and emphasis and power to the Word. To speak the Word of God is to put a force in motion that will never stop, and to tell the love of God is to put an infinite force in action.

How can we be humble enough in the service of Him who is so "meek and lowly in heart"? "He that goeth forth weeping, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him." Faith can see without a light, and there are insights that can turn the worker's prayers into tears.

There is a sympathy that no sinner can despise; emotions that are stronger than words; there is such a thing as the ministry of tears. It is the heart that wins the heart. Man cannot get rid of his humanity; as long as he has it he is vulnerable and accessible to the Word of the Spirit; and "love never fails."

If we follow the lead of the "Man of sorrows," we shall have to drink of the cup of his sorrows too. If we carry the burden of the Lord, we shall find that there is the weight of eternity in the burden of even one single soul; but the strain will be adjusted to the strength of the worker. How often the heart of the Lord Jesus was melted to tears, and truly they were the saddest tears that love ever shed!

How often that heart was bleeding afresh with sorrow, like a wound that would not heal! If we could hear the rush of time, as we can hear the rush of the wind, how earnest and tender we should wish to be! We should look on with pensive eye and a sad heart at the wrecks of men. We often stand by, with power unused and grace running to waste, whilst blinded men drift on to eternal death, with its locked door, its everlasting chains, and its endless woe. How few of us can say, "Rivers of waters run down mine eyes, because they keep not thy law."

As the worker grows in grace he may get into deeper waters, into deeper depths, more solemn exercises of soul, for in much wisdom is much sorrow; but though he have deeper sorrows he will have sweeter joys too. If the worker knew what is the harvest that he is sowing, he could hardly weep at any sorrow at all. Dr. Bonar mentions the remark of someone that "very few men and very few ministers keep up to the end the edge that was on the spirit at the first."

Mr. Hewitson, a missionary at the Azores, said on his dying bed, "Oh! the sins of my ministry, how appalling do they seem to me now; for when I have preached with what I thought a measure of tenderness then, I see that I did not know what the tenderness of the Lord Jesus was." Can we ever be earnest enough? B.

Blackheath.—A most happy conference on the Lord's Coming, full of interest and profit, was held on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday of last week, in the Alexandra Hall. There were afternoon and evening meetings on all those days, and the attendance was large. Many friends came from long distances, and on the last day, which was devoted to the consideration of Jewish subjects, the hall was very full. The speakers were Messrs. Henry Varley, Jas. Sprunt, Samuel Wilkinson, W. Hunter, Bergmann, Aschkenazi, Isaac Levinsohn, Hillman, Goldstein, Kitchin (from Melbourne), and Mrs. Osborne-Howe. Dr. McKilliam presided over the meetings. From six to seven, open-air meetings of a conversational character were held, which were most enjoyable and helpful.

The Earthquake in Assam.

THE following graphic description of the recent alarming and destructive earthquake in Assam is from the pen of Mr. A. J. Parker, a worker at Nowgong in connection with the Arthington Aboriginal Mission:—

Saturday, June 12.—The afternoon was hot and fine; the sky blue; the air still. Men were living and cattle browsing and trees growing as on a thousand previous days. There seemed no likelihood of anything unusual or terrible. The earth looked green, and stable and serene, as though indeed it "could not be moved." At 5.15 p.m. I was preparing a dose for a patient. I became conscious of a trembling agitation possessing all things. This increased, and a low rumbling sound accompanied it. Soon the rattle of window and door-frames and the increased shaking of the ground warned us that it was time to get out of the house. Mr. Johnson and I rushed to an open space, some forty yards from the house (as the other two brethren did on the opposite side), and the FRIGHTENED SERVANTS FOLLOWED WITH SPEED.

Then followed an experience that my senses yet will hardly credit. We turned to watch the fate of our home. Suddenly a groaning rumble rose from the earth, and the surface, as far as the eye could see, assumed the motions of a troubled sea, heaving and sinking in thorough liquid fashion. I glanced at Mr. Johnson, and involuntarily broke into laughter to watch him vainly spreading his legs and poising his arms in the effort to keep his feet. He says I did the same. The trees waved, creaked, and rustled frantically. The whole air was full of dread mysterious sounds. I saw banks, roads, and tracts of ground sink mysteriously down, and houses rend asunder and subside; and still the billowy motion increased.

Then all eyes were on the bungalow. Ominous rending, crashing noises came from the reeling structure. The house seemed bent on twisting and wrenching itself free from the threatening earth. It has survived many a hurricane, being low and broad—but what a mighty force is tossing it now! We have made our prayer, and now we look on with more or less composure of mind. Still, we WONDER HOW LONG THIS WILL LAST.

Our Mussulman cook and bearer are on their knees, prostrating their foreheads often to the ground They tell us this is the wrath of Allah against their sins. Above the low rumbling and groaning of the travailing earth ascend cries of terror and of prayer! I see the station is alive with natives, hurrying they know not where. But now the quaking earth is quietening, and we are thinking the terror nearly past. But what is that strong sound of rushing water? And what means this crowd of terrified natives, flying and swarming towards the European centre? There is the answer! A black column of water, three feet high and broad, is bursting from the broken earth, and the natives fear a fatal flood. Away roars the flood to a neighbouring hollow, where a muddy lake is formed in a few minutes. Excited natives rush by with news of disasters in the station, and as soon as our servants are a little reassured, we leave them in charge and go to see how friends have fared.

What desolations, what miracles of power meet our eyes. Imagine the damage to the land of our station alone! Imagine a flat, smooth tract of green grassland, intersected with straight parallel grassy roads, and all this bounded at length by the beautifully kept Strand-road, which lies along the river bank. We begin to find long, deep rents in the earth, and confused piling and pitting of the ground. How can I describe the scene as we approached the river? Here we go down the familiar flat, well-ditched road between the verdant trees. We come to a great yawning gap, many feet deep, and some two feet wide, running athwart the road, and stretching far to the right and left.

This is only a hint of what follows. As we get near the river bank, where hard-pressed earth would find room to spread itself, these vast cracks became numerous, line by line parallel with the river. The beautiful "Strand-road" is a chaos. There is no road now. There are gaps you could almost bury a church in. There are huge ridges of earth from the tops of which you gaze into dark, unknown depths below. Some gaps are several yards wide. This is a common account of many other parts; and where a rent has occurred under a building the result has been utter ruin. In very many parts, from the gaps, and sometimes from the surface, great volumes of black, muddy water have boiled up, in some places rising several feet into the air. By this means great surfaces have been pasted over with unsightly grey-black mud. The holes from which the water came are now an interesting sight—perfectly circular, some very large and deep, and formed in the grey mud, which makes a beautifully smooth tube and graceful top piece. Looking from to the buildings, our excitement further increased. The plain about the Court-house is very badly broken and water-worn, and what a sight is that fine building—its massive pillars bulged and broken; its walls in parts thrown down; in other parts denuded of plaster; windows and doors shattered, and at strange angles. What a ruin! The floor upheaved and down-sunk, tons of masonry covering furniture and floors; huge bookcases face down on the ground. The great deserted halls are silent in ruin and desolation. The interior of the Dep. Commissioner's beautiful brick house is also hopelessly wrecked, and presents an impressive sight. Other bungalows are badly damaged. The doctor's son is staying with us; their house will not be habitable till October. Other missionaries' bungalows are damaged to the extent of 1,000 rupees each.

Perhaps the following days brought, on the whole, more terror and discomfort than the great shock itself occasioned. It is, as I write, just six complete days since the first calamity; and a minute ago my chair was quaking, the house was rattling and shaking. Through that awful night succeeding the earthquake, through the Sabbath, and all Monday, the earth kept quaking, generally every fifteen minutes. So violent were many of these after-shocks that we had to run several times at dead of night from the shivering building.

The calamity has fallen with much more serious results in other parts of Assam and India. Many lives are lost; whole towns wrecked; railways and great bridges destroyed. Calcutta itself was visited with desolating destruction.

I have seen that even the educated Hindus have no hiding-place of safety in danger. They have shown, and have confessed to me, abject terror in these recurring shocks. They cannot turn to Him who is "a hiding-place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest, as rivers of water in a dry place, and as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land." It is glorious to realise that "man is immortal till his work is done."

Saturday, June 19.—A week has gone, and still the earth is troubled and we are having shocks every hour, night and day.

Letters to the Editor.

CARING FOR PRISONERS.

Dear Sir,—For many years now the writer has longed that some far-reaching tongue or pen would take up the case of the most needy and most neglected class of our fellow sinners, for whom so few seem to care, and whose case is so beset with difficulties of a special kind that it seems as if nothing could be done for them. It is cheering and encouraging to read Mr. Moody's appeal, and I earnestly hope that some definite aggressive effort will be made, but many will be surprised at the serious obstacles in the way.

None of the cases mentioned by Mr. Moody could have occurred in England, as no effort for the salvation of the prisoners can be made except through the chaplains, who in not a few cases are men having little sympathy with evangelistic work. Tracts and books are not allowed to be given to the prisoners, nor can one kind or sympathetic word be spoken to them except once in twelve weeks, when their friends may visit them, and see them at a distance with a warder and two partitions between them. Routine, uniformity, discipline—so dear to the official mind—are almost the only consideration, and it will be no easy task to get any change made.

Surely there must be some way of showing pity and sympathy for the offender without palliating the offence, and I trust the matter may engage the prayerful consideration of some whose hearts are stirred and who desire with Mr. Moody "that Christians shall be more active in bringing to men the Gospel while they are behind the bars."

Valuable beyond degree as work like that of the various prison-gate missions certainly is, it cannot use for good the solemn and important period when the man has brought home to him his guilt, his need of mercy, his solitariness, and when he is obliged to think. Many at such times are very amenable to kindly Christian influence, and it might be so exerted as not to lessen but deepen their sense of what sin has brought in its train and what it will eventually lead to if still persisted in. And I believe that no circumstances on earth are more calculated to prepare the ground for the good seed, and to enable a poor sinner to see and admire that wondrous plan of redemption whereby justice is fully vindicated, and yet mercy can flow to the guilty because of the obedience and sufferings of a God-appointed and God-provided surety substitute. Earnestly praying that some may be led to move in this important matter, and that the Lord Himself will clear the way.

Yours in the best bonds, Grace Truster.

OFFICIAL OUTRAGES IN INDIA.

Sir,—Owing to absence from England I only yesterday saw your article of August 19, headed "Official Outrages." A very few words of autobiography are necessary to explain and justify this letter.

I am the son of a missionary, and remained till the age of nearly fourteen in India, learning several of the native languages, and sharing in all my father's interests. I afterwards was for more than thirty years in the Bengal Civil Service, and during two years of this time I was magistrate of the district containing the largest military cantonment in India, namely, Rawal Pindi. During the last four years of my service, that, and three other military cantonments were under my official cognisance, namely, Jhelum, Sealkote, and Attock. I then left the Civil Service, and became for seven and a-half years a missionary of the Church Missionary Society, and am now a member of the committee of that Society in London.

I think you will allow, therefore, that I have had exceptional opportunities of knowing every side of matters affecting Indian life, and am not likely to shield oppressors. In all this most varied life I never heard a whisper of one single case such as is described in the extract from the Bombay Guardian, which I believe to be absolutely untrue.

I will not deny that a certain proportion of the poor child-widows in the cities of India do voluntarily join the ranks of unfortunates. There are very few of this class in villages certainly in North India. Again, there are, sad to say, girls belonging to the prostitute tribe, whose mothers have brought them up to nothing better. There are also in every community in all countries of the world unfaithful and runaway wives, who in India gravitate to the same depths. From these and such like sources the melancholy demand is no doubt supplied, and some Government officers have far more to do with it than is right. Never would I palliate the sin of any concerned in this loathsome traffic.

But the statements of the Bombay Guardian say that commissioned officers in Her Majesty's Army systematically practise the most ferocious brutality. Do you believe that if this were true they could retain their commissions for a week? Do you believe that the native press, searching out every manner of insult to hurl at Government, would not take up each single case of such wickedness?

I will conclude by one more argument, which will clinch the matter in the minds of any person who knows aught of Indian society; namely that young and innocent girls over fourteen years of age scarcely exist in India, save amongst the Parsees, some of the Mohammedan pastoral tribes in the north, and a few of the higher classes in cities, whose fathers are wise enough to keep their daughters unmarried till they have completed a good education. The immense majority of Indian girls, whether Hindu or Mohammedans, are married before they are eleven years old; probably 99 per cent. are married before they are fourteen. Every such marriage means a large expenditure. Is it possible that any people would tamely submit to the loss of the whole of this money, to say nothing of all the other most obvious considerations? No one can shoot a peacock in a village without being mobbed. How could he steal two or three girls? I cannot but feel deeply grieved that you should have cast such a slur upon your fellow-countrymen as to publish without the fullest inquiry the palpable misrepresentations of the Bombay Guardian.—Yours truly,

H. E. Perkins, M.A.

[We should be only too delighted to think that the "outrages" mentioned in the Bombay Guardian do not exist; the account in our contemporary, however, was most specific and circumstantial.—Ed.]

A Church in the Alps.

Sir,—My observation and experience of the congregations which have assembled from year to year at the Riffel Alp have at length led me to the conviction that the church must be enlarged. For many years, in the month of August, I have seen many standing on the steps outside the church all through the service, and I know of many having turned away. The railway will be in full work next year. More hotel accommodation is certain to be provided. With this the church will be still more inadequate. On a pouring wet day last week I called a meeting here to consider the advisability and necessity of enlarging the church, and to open a subscription to effect it. The proposals were unanimously agreed to, and £45 was then and there subscribed. The work will cost about £250.

I hope that such of your numerous readers as have visited this place, or, not having visited it, yet believe in the message which is here delivered, will help me to complete a work which is urgent, necessary, and which, I gratefully add, God has owned and blessed, especially to men, who crowd the church. Our services are hearty, popular, helpful, and frequent. We have daily prayer at 8 a.m. It is keenly appreciated. It was but yesterday a gentleman assured me of the joy and blessing the services were to him.

I shall be thankful if subscriptions are sent to me to the Deanery, Norwich.—Most truly yours,

William Lefroy, D.D.

Moravian Missions.—The barque Harmony has been temporarily superseded by a small steamer, chartered for the purpose, until sufficient funds have been collected for a new mission ship. For thirty-six years the Harmony (the fourth vessel of that name that has been owned by the Society) has annually accomplished the voyage to and from Labrador, carrying safely her precious freight of missionary agents, their children, and the supplies for the six stations on that bleak, inhospitable coast, braving many a storm and many a danger arising from fogs, ice floes, icebergs, rocks, and shoals; experiencing, too, like all her nine predecessors, marvellous Divine protection on her many journeys.

International S.S. Lessons.

September 12.

Christian Living.—Romans xii. 9-21.

Golden Text.—"Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good."

THE Church at Rome was not founded by an apostle, but probably by the "strangers" (Acts ii. 10) who were in Jerusalem on the Day of Pentecost. The tradition that it was founded by Peter was not originated until the fifth century, and all the evidence is against the theory. The Church, therefore, needed the instruction of one who knew the inner meaning, and the wide application of the Gospel as well as its historical facts. So this Epistle is a mixture of doctrinal and practical teaching. The latter commences with chapter xii. The portion of this chapter which forms the lesson deals with Christian duty to others, and the motive power which will enable us to do that duty.

I. The inner spirit. All our relationship with others should not be a mere veneer put on for show, but something which springs out of our very life and soul. We are to love without hypocrisy, and that because we hate all evil and are inseparably bound to that which is good (9). Our love for Christians should be such as exists in a family, and without waiting for our brother to do honour to us we should do honour to him (10). Not possessing a sluggish zeal which makes us render the honour and all other good tardily and unwillingly, but a spirit boiling over in the service of God (11). The Christian is to be full of life and love in all his work, whether in the church or out of it. Tameness, insipidity, "icy regularity," "chill respectability" are the vices which Paul rebukes, and calls for a fervent devotion to all that is good. Being always in communion with God, we shall rejoice in the hope of immortality, and this will give us patience to bear the "light affliction which is but for a moment" (12). Such is the inner mood which Paul inculcates. Out of the heart are the issues of life, and no man can do good for long unless he is good. He may make a Christmas tree of himself and hang all sorts of beautiful fruit on his branches, but he cannot continually grow the fruit unless he has the peculiar life of the tree in him.

II. Practical sympathy. The inward spirit will manifest itself in our conduct towards others. Relieving the wants of the poorer brethren: Hospitality in its literal sense is one of the first of Christian duties. Most of our hospitals are named after saints, showing that they are the product of the Christ Spirit (13). Although it is most difficult to sympathise with those who criticise and persecute us we must pray for them as Christ did (14). We must try to put ourselves so actually and really in the position of others that we shall think their thoughts and feel their experiences, and so be able to rejoice with the glad and weep with the sorrowful. This is true sympathy (feeling with). Probably it is more difficult to rejoice at the successes of others than to pity their failures (15). We are to strive after unity, magnifying the points where we agree and minimising those where we differ; accommodating ourselves to those beneath us in rank and learning and manifesting that humility about our knowledge and wealth so that all may feel that the Church is a home and its members a family (16). If a brother of higher rank should slight us or be rude to us, we are not to answer his rudeness with insult, for that would be neither dignified nor honourable, and every Christian gentleman should see to it that his conduct is honourable (17). This is the relationship that should exist between the members of a church. Differences of opinion, of social position etc., there must be, but in the home we are brothers and sisters, children of our Heavenly Father.

III. Treatment of enemies outside the Church. Paul now speaks of their duty to men generally (all men), and with these they were to strive after peace, but not peace at any price. No compromising the truth in thought or conduct. Still, the spirit must be so subdued in its selfishness that there shall be no attempt to use the devil's weapon of revenge for wrong done. They professed to follow Christ. Seeing that "God is angry with the wicked every day," and "Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord," we can afford to stand on one side as mere spectators witnessing his wrath, exerted upon all unrighteousness

Revolt in Uganda.

A REVOLT broke out recently in the Uganda Protectorate, but was successfully suppressed. On July 6 King Mwanga left Uganda secretly to organise a rising in the Buddu district against the Government. Mwanga's forces were defeated. The king escaped to German territory and surrendered himself to the Germans, by whom he is detained. Order was restored throughout Uganda, the whole of which, except the Buddu district, remained loyal. It is intended to proclaim the infant son of Mwanga as King, with a regency.

The London correspondent of The Manchester Guardian says:—"The news of the revolt of Mwanga, King of Uganda, will cause no surprise to those who have followed the history of that monarch. He has never been trusted by those in authority in the country. During the civil war of 1888 and 1889 Mwanga was extremely fickle. At one time he sided with the English, or Protestant, faction; while at another he declared that the French, or Roman Catholic, section of the population were his friends. He threw in his lot with the party which seemed to be the stronger. If in later years he has seemed to have English sympathies (the presence of a British Resident with a considerable military force no doubt contributed to this result), his 'loyalty' has been of the feeblest possible character. The Buddu district, whither Mwanga resorted to organise his rebellion, has always been more or less disaffected. It was one of the provinces assigned to the Roman Catholics by the agreement or treaty arrived at between the rival chiefs drafted by the late Sir Gerald Portal. More recently the number of Protestant natives there has increased, but the real power and influence of the province has been anti-English. The infant son and heir of Mwanga, who is to be proclaimed King, with a regency, was born about twelve months ago. The Queen-mother was a Protestant catechumen, and the King consented to the child being brought up as a Protestant. Both mother and child have since been baptized by the English missionaries. The infant prince was in the first instance named Cua, after a former King of Uganda, but his baptismal name is David. In accordance with the custom of the country, the child was committed to the care of the Katikiro, or Prime Minister. Mwanga has for some time been making a profession of Christianity, but many of the natives insist that he has been keeping up his old habits, and his 'conversion' has never been believed in."

New Barnet.—An interesting fraternal experiment has been repeated for the third or fourth time in New Barnet, the Presbyterian Church and the Congregational Church there uniting for six Sundays. Several years ago the two churches joined together in a ten days' Evangelistic Mission, conducted by Rev. Robert Balgarnie—a mission which brought to decision a good many of the young people of both churches. The combination of forces then was so pleasant and helpful that in several ways it has been continued, and the united services just held alternately in the two places of worship have again drawn the two peoples together in kindly bands, giving the preachers, besides, a large congregation even in the height of the holiday season. On Sunday week the last of these services were conducted with much acceptance by Mr. Maclagan, of Swatow.—The Presbyterian.

Working Men's Mission.—In Collingwood-street, New Cut, is the spot where this mission was commenced some twenty years ago, and the borders of the work have wonderfully extended. Continual reminders are on every hand of the dire need for faithful preaching of the Cross of Christ; for the neighbourhoods where the many-sided operations of the mission are diligently prosecuted week in and week out are teeming with the works of darkness. Much poverty, too, abounds, even among steady, respectable folk, and the help given through the mission's supporters (none too many) frequently carries the sufferers over times of temporary need and saves them from despair. The halls are so situated and the members are of such a class, that the poorest and most wretched are made to feel "at home." Moreover, it is a pleasing fact that the members and workers themselves contribute no inconsiderable share of the expenses. The work is superintended by the brothers T. and J. Young, 33, Nelson-square, Blackfriars-road, S.E.

Scandinavian Students.

THE fourth conference of the Scandinavian University Christian Movement was held recently at Herlufsholm, Denmark. Two hundred and thirty-five students from Denmark, Norway, Sweden, and Finland were present, and had as their chairman Pastor Steinthal, who expects to sail as a missionary for India next October. The following subjects were discussed: "Personal Truth," "Faith and Unbelief," "Christianity and Culture," "Christ our Life and Light," "Light and Shade in Student Life." During the discussion of the last subject selfishness and personal impurity were fearlessly handled. One session was given to Bible study. A Norwegian, a Swedish, and a Finnish student spoke upon the theme "It is Written."

An open-air testimony meeting proved helpful. At another session "The Relation of Students to Home and Foreign Missions" was considered. Several took part in the discussion, among whom were three or four volunteers. Much joy was expressed because of the missionary interest among British and American students. The united communion service was a time of great blessing.

The last session of the Conference was opened by three short addresses upon "The Sacrifice of Self." The first speaker was a Danish student, who expects to go soon to Greenland, where self-denial can be put into practice. He was followed by a Swede. The third speaker was a Norwegian student volunteer, who expects to give his life to the evangelisation of Madagascar. In the praise meeting which followed there were abundant evidences of a deep work of the Spirit during the Conference.

One result is a forward movement to reach the students of Iceland, which belongs to Denmark. There is a college for medical and theological students in Reykjavik. It was suggested that the Conference raise 500 kroners to send two representatives to organise a student movement in Reykjavik, and to start a Young Men's Christian Association movement in Iceland. Within three minutes 619 kroners were collected. The two representatives are an Icelandic student in Copenhagen and a Norwegian student.

The next Conference is to be held in Norway. Finland would like to entertain it, but the Russian Government will not allow any Scandinavian assemblage in Finland. The Finns are one in religion with the other three Scandinavian lands, and their enthusiasm for this student movement can be judged by the fact that twenty-one delegates came from Helsingfors to Herlufsholm.—Men.

Chinese in London.

VISITING the Chinese Mission in West India Dock-road, one gradually recognises that though the institution is small it is intensely interesting. Founded by the Rev. George Piercy on his return from work as a Methodist missionary in the province of Canton fourteen years ago, and still conducted, not to say entirely worked, by him, it is the only institution in the kingdom intended for the sole benefit of Chinamen who come hither. The need of it among the London docks is great, for between 5000 and 6000 "Celestials," few of whom speak English, land there every twelve months, the number having doubled in the last five years. They are mostly young men of good conduct, though a few smoke opium. The ships which go to and from China are rapidly increasing the number of Chinese they employ. Formerly Chinese were only shipped as cooks and stokers. Now they are taken as sailors. The other day Mr. Piercy, on boarding a British vessel, found that among the crew of fifty-nine there were forty-two Chinamen.

The missionary's work is largely practical. Should one of his protégés be haled before a magistrate Mr. Piercy interprets and explains, for these children of the East oftener get into trouble through ignorance than through wickedness. He does them the same service at hospitals, arbitrates among them when necessary, and saves them from unscrupulous money-changers.—Manchester Guardian.

The Indian Famine.

SIR,—The telegram in The Times quoted by you needs a word of explanation. "The famine is over" in the sense that the coming crop is generally safe in most districts, though not in all. But it must be remembered that no crop will come in till September, and then only a small proportion. Other crops may be expected in October, some in November, some in December, and some not till January.

Meanwhile, the existing stores being diminished day by day, prices are so high that multitudes can scarcely purchase anything. By last mail several correspondents describe the suffering as being worse than ever. Those who have gone off relief works to till their own land naturally get less help than they did before.

Besides, large numbers, we fear, will not have had seed to sow. There are large numbers of sick and aged who must be helped, and, above all, many thousands of orphans ought to be taken in; and missionaries have been very inadequately supplied with means for these objects. From different reports of Mr. James—the Government official deputed to visit provincial committees—it appears that half the Mansion House Fund would be needed in North-West Provinces for seed alone; in other provinces the lack of fodder has caused the death of large numbers of cattle—in one division about three-fourths have died. Therefore thousands of poor cultivators need not only seed but cattle, if they are not to starve. Some of my correspondents, who are feeding 300 to 400 a day, say they have to turn away some bad cases.

I therefore think that, while the great pressure of famine will be over in two or three months, there will be many hundreds of thousands who will be destitute for some time longer, and for orphans there will be needed many thousands a year for some years to come. In Madras Presidency there is a great increase of distress, which will call for help for some time, as there were some 700,000 on relief. 600,000 are still on relief in Bombay and Central Provinces.—Yours truly,

42, Eccleston-place, S.W. RADSTOCK.

The Lovedale Mission.

I LEARN from South Africa (writes a correspondent) that the Lovedale Missionary and Industrial Institution, in Kafraria, has arranged for the founding of a medical department for the Kafirs. It is surprising that the Government of Cape Colony, which has provided a university as well as a primary system of schools, has hitherto neglected the instruction of the natives in questions of health and materia medica. Dr. James Stewart, himself a medical graduate of Edinburgh, has never ceased to urge the creation of a medical faculty, and now it is about to be instituted. A hospital is being built at Lovedale, to which the Government of Sir Gordon Sprigg has granted £1000. Honorary nurses have gone out to prepare for their duties on the spot. Mr. D. A. Hunter, who has received medical training, lately volunteered to organise the new movement, and now Dr. James M'Cash, a Glasgow graduate, has been appointed by the Free Church of Scotland to take charge of the hospital, and to conduct medical classes of Kafirs in the institution. Dr. M'Cash, after special training during the winter session, will go out early next year, at his own charge, to co-operate with Dr. James Stewart and Mr. Hunter.

Only Kafirs trained in European medicine will effectually destroy the all-powerful influence of the witch doctor over their countrymen. It is a pity South Africa has not at an earlier period followed the wise example of the Government of India, which began sixty years ago to give the natives a medical education and then to admit them to its Covenanted Medical Service, with the best results. In their bush and kraal life the Kafirs violate all the laws of health, so that consumption and fever result in a startling death-rate. The native herb doctors of South Africa have made valuable contributions to its materia medica, and the new college should utilise their experience.

Russian Reform.—The Daily Chronicle states that the Russian Government has resolved partially to abolish the system of Siberian exile for political and other prisoners. The change will come into force a year hence.

Temperance Jottings.

Here is the latest description of Toronto, taken from The Christian Advocate:—The law disqualifies a saloon-keeper for membership in the City Council. The saloons (and, curiously enough, there are just as many saloons as churches—200) are under rigid oversight, and are closed every night at eleven o'clock and all day Sunday. There are no Sunday newspapers, and the Press generally is strongly on the side of law, order, and decency. There is an utter absence of drunkenness and of aimless loafing.

In The Westminster Gazette there was a striking article entitled "A West End Avernus" resulting from investigations in Notting Dale. The conditions disclosed were dreadful and discouraging; but the cause was pretty clearly indicated by both policeman and priest who were interviewed. "It's drink at the bottom of it," said the former, and said the latter: "I can give you the reason for this fearful death-rate in a word—the dreadful habits of the people. It is drink and the consequences of drink." The article vividly describes these consequences. We are glad to know that there is some good reformation work going on in Notting Dale.

One of the leaders of the temperance party in Australia has passed away at the age of fifty-four in the person of the Hon. Ninian Melville, for many years Chairman of Committees in the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales. A cabinet-maker by trade, he personally constructed the chair in which he presided over the deliberations when the House went into Committee. He entered public life at the very early age of nineteen as a "Domain orator," which is Colonial English for what we would call a "Hyde Park Sunday lecturer." Mr. Melville was repeatedly returned by the miners of Northumberland as their representative mainly on the strength of his powerful advocacy of protection and temperance. His end was sudden. On the evening before his death he addressed a large tee-total gathering.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. James Sprunt has returned from six weeks evangelistic tour in Norway. He visited Christiania, Drammond, Vikesund, Kongsberg, Skien, Porsgrund, Kragero, and Moss, preaching and teaching in chapels, halls, rooms, and in the open-air. There were many signs of blessing. Mr. G. Hübert, of the Evangelical Colportage Mission for Norway, accompanied the evangelist, and did good service as interpreter.

Mr. Ernest Bailey, of the Evangelisation Society, has been holding a Gospel tent mission of nearly eight weeks' duration at Stotfold Baldock. The attendance at the services increased week by week. The practical help and sympathy of Christians of several denominations helped much to its success. Many have been influenced with great good to their souls. Some of the hearers have scarcely been absent from a single service; occasionally men have come straight from the fields in their shirt-sleeves. The mission has been a refreshment and blessing to the village at large, and it was with great reluctance that the work was closed.

J. A.

Special Tent Services are being held under the auspices of the Belfast Central Mission. The meetings are bright, and already a good many conversions are reported.

Rev. Thomas Waugh has lately concluded a ten days' tent mission at Bolton-fell-End, in connection with the North Cumberland Mission. The meetings increased in power and numbers from the first, and although the weather was broken and unsettled, the tent, seating over 400, was filled. The people came in all directions, from a radius of twelve miles. The evangelist, says a correspondent, soon won the sympathy of the people in his native district. Some nights reminded one of a county election, the traps coming from all quarters. During the first week Mr. Waugh held no after-meetings, preferring to leave his message with the people, and give time for thought. On the last nights of the mission many came out openly for decision.

Gospel Missions will (D.V.) be preached by F. C. Spurr, as follow;—Sept. 4-13, South Shields; Sept. 18-26, Loughborough; Sept. 27-Oct. 3, Louth; Oct. 9-17, Swansea; Oct. 18-25, St. Anne's-on-Sea: Oct. 30-Nov. 7, Halifax; Nov. 8-12, Nottingham; Nov. 13-21, Newark; Nov. 27-Dec. 13, Bradford, Yorks.

Scottish Notes.

Dr. J. Guinness Rogers officiated at the re-opening last Sunday of Russell Chapel, Dundee. Dr. Rogers has been enjoying a holiday at Oban, of which he writes in The Independent in glowing terms.

Mr. J. M. Hall, of Killean, Argyllshire, is presenting to the town of Campbeltown a free library and museum. The Duke of Argyll, in laying the memorial stone last week, after a high tribute to the memory of the late Sir William Mackinnon, an intimate friend of Mr. Hall's, gave an interesting address on the influence of good reading.

Roman Catholics are apparently straining every nerve to recover popular prestige in Scotland. We learn that the negotiations which have been proceeding for some time between the Marquis of Bute and the Duke of Fife for the purchase of Pluscarden Priory, near Elgin, have been concluded. The Priory becomes the property of the Marquis, who is to restore it. The work of re-building will be on an extensive scale, involving, it is said, close on £100,000, and may occupy some years.

Personalia.

Rev. J. D. Kilburn is to contribute a further series of Memory Lessons to China's Millions, commencing with the October number.

Pastor Theodore Monod, of Paris, has promised to be present and speak at the coming conference on the spiritual life in Glasgow, October 25-29.

Mr. Henry E. Toye, of the Home for Fatherless, Lewisham-road, Lewisham, has sufficiently recovered his health to return to his work at the Orphanage.

Mr. Henry Varley is to preach at the Public Hall, Blackheath, next Sunday, and sails with his daughter on Tuesday, the 7th inst., for New York.

Mrs. Kirk, an active temperance worker in Australia, now on a visit to England, her native country, is sketched, with portrait, in the September Wings.

Sir Gordon Sprigg, Cape Premier, is a teetotaler and a thoroughgoing one. He made a capital speech lately, and poured unbounded contempt on the idea that the nerves benefited in any way by the use of alcohol.

Sister Lily, of the West London Mission, is about to cross the Atlantic, and will address meetings in some of the great cities in the Eastern States before attending the Toronto Convention of the W.C.T.U. She hopes also to visit some of the Canadian towns.

Mr. W. J. Williams, who has worked so hard to secure the victory of the Penrhyn quarrymen, is a man who has learned by personal experience the dangers and hardships of the quarryman's life. He is a great force in the religious life of the district and is the auditor of the Congregational Union of Wales.

Rev. Krikor Behesnilian has spent five months in Glasgow, Edinburgh, Dundee, and Aberdeen, at which places he has interested many churches in his life-work. Among others, Lord Polwarth, Lord Overtoun, Sir William Muir, and Professor Ramsay have expressed deep sympathy in his evangelistic and rescue work in Armenia. Mr. Behesnilian is in London at present, but he will very shortly visit some other parts of Britain.

The late W. J. Neethling.—The story of a brief but joyous lifetime is recorded in a booklet bearing the title Made Exceeding Glad. William James Neethling was born at Stellenbosch, near Cape Town, in 1866, and while at school formed a resolution to become a missionary. After having finished his course of preparation for the ministry he came to Britain for nine months of medical training at Livingstone College. It was at first decided that his sphere of labour should be in Banyailand, near Zimbabye, but this had to be abandoned in favour of Mochuli. Just within a year of his ordination he was killed by the fall of a gable of the church which was being repaired and enlarged. The sketch is all too brief of a beautiful and inspiriting life. (6d. James Nisbet & Co.)

Dr. Newman Hall, who was reported to be lying dangerously ill in Switzerland, has returned to London in the best of health, after an enjoyable holiday in the Riffel Alps. It appears he was prevailed upon to ascend the Gornergrat on a mule, and the consequence was he got baked by the sun. When he dismounted he felt something was wrong, and he had to lie flat on his back. But he dismissed the mule and his master, and after taking a sketch of the Breithorn he walked down 3000 feet to the Riffel Hotel. He had an attack of intestinal catarrh, but within a week he walked down to Zermatt. Messrs. Cassell and Company are negotiating with Dr. Newman Hall for the publication of his autobiography, on which he is now hard at work.

Obituary.

MRS. T. B. MILLER.

Mr. T. B. Miller, of Barnet, known in connection with the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, has, we regret to hear, sustained the loss of his partner in life. She fell asleep on August 23, and was buried at Abney Park Cemetery on August 27.

MRS. MEEK.

We learn from a letter by Mr. J. J. Meek, of the Othello Mission Station, Rorke's Drift, Natal, dated August 5, that he has been called on to mourn the loss by death of his wife and fellow labourer. Many friends will remember her as accompanying her husband on their journey to this country. Mr. Meek states that his wife never fully recovered from her visit to Ireland, where she contracted jaundice. She died peacefully and happily after a few days' illness.

REV. CHARLES ADAMA V. SCHELTEMA.

We regret (says The Temperance Record) to announce the death at Arnhem, Holland, at the age of eighty-two, of the Rev. C. S. Adama v. Scheltema, the most earnest and devoted adherent of teetotalism we have ever known on the Continent of Europe. On Aug. 11, he corrected the proofs of his paper, De Wereld Strijd, and looked over a circular he had just received from the press, when he suddenly became unconscious and remained so until his death, during the night between the 12th and 13th. It was characteristic of so strenuous a worker that he should die in harness. It was through Mrs. Wightman's "Haste to the Rescue," that he became an abstainer in 1861. He translated an immense number of English publications into Dutch including Sir B.W. Richardson's "Temperance Lesson Book," and may be regarded as the father of all modern efforts to promote temperance reform in Holland.

SIR G. O. MORGAN.

By the death of Sir George Osborne Morgan (says the Manchester Guardian) the country has lost a high-minded public man. For nearly thirty years he has been an active member of Parliament, and has been particularly active in promoting religious liberty and equality before the law. He was one of the most energetic of those whose efforts procured the admission of Nonconformists to the Universities, and to him more than to any other man was due the legislative recognition of the right of interment in parish burial grounds with services other than that of the Established Church. He carried through Parliament the Married Women's Property Act and the Act for abolishing corporal punishment in the army. He took a deep interest in education in all its grades, and the last speech he delivered in Manchester was made in defence of the School Board system when it was attacked in the first Education Bill of the present Government.

MRS. J. WILKINSON.

We have to record with much regret the death last week, at the age of seventy-one, of Mrs. Wilkinson, wife of the well-known director of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews. She was for many years a true helpmeet to her husband in every way. Early brought to know the Lord, she was zealous for the conversion of others. Even before marriage she took a deep interest in work for the Jews. Though a great and constant sufferer for years she conducted a large correspondence and carried cheer to a large circle of friends and helpers in the work of the Mildmay Mission to Jews.

She spent her usual holiday last month at Brentwood, and it was hoped that the rest had benefited her. A sudden change for the worse however came, and she was removed to London, where, after some days of restlessness and pain, she passed away last Saturday morning in the presence of her husband and family. They will have the sincere sympathy of many friends in the time of their deep sorrow and bereavement.

Basle Missionary Society.—The Basle Missionary Society, says the Evangelisches Missions Magazin, will shortly celebrate the jubilee of its fifty years' work in China. The founder of its Chinese Mission, Missionary Lechler, in spite of his seventy-three years of age, is still in the mission field and comparatively vigorous. In Cameroon the Society is beginning a forward movement. The long planned sanitorium on the Cameroon mountains, in a splendid situation, has at last become an accomplished fact. The mission spends its strength on four great fields: (1) The Gold Coast and its Hinterland to Coomassie, etc.; (2) the Cameroons; (3) the Hakka country in the Canton province South China, and (4) Malabar and Kanara land in, South India. At the close of 1896 its church membership in these four fields amounted to 33,840 whilst in its schools it had over fifteen thousand children. Last year its missionaries baptized 2,242 persons, leaving 2,158 on the candidates' list.

The Y.M.C.A.

Rev. John McNeill preached last week in the Dublin Y.M.C.A.

The Whitehaven Association will have a course of Gilchrist lectures for the winter season.

The growing demands of the Associations in Southampton and Exeter necessitate enlarged buildings.

A conference in connection with the North of Ireland District Union has been held in Bessbrook, extending over two days.

A second conference in connection with the Soldiers' Christian Association will be held at Exeter Hall early in December.

The latest statistics regarding the College Department of the Young Men's Christian Association of America, show that there are 475 College Associations in America, exclusive of those in the Coloured and Indian departments, and that 415 of these report a total membership of 25,284, of which number 19,696 are active members.

The Hyderabad Association now numbers seventy-seven members. A new building is being erected, the total cost of which when completed is estimated to be about Rs.15,000. The amount thus far raised is Rs.5,600. The site cost Rs.2,800, and the association is proceeding with the erection of the building as far as the balance in hand will permit.

The Bombay Young Men's Monthly has the following:—"Most of our members have doubtless learned ere now that the homeward mail of Friday, September 3, will bear away from India the president of this Association. This time it will be a final farewell. The high hopes we cherished on Mr. Henry Conder's return six months ago of such a complete restoration to vigorous health as would have permitted him to preside over our work for a year or two more, have been shattered, and the decree is as stated above. There will be but few earnest men in this city who will not contemplate Mr. Conder's removal with deep and unfeigned regret. There cannot be a single well-wisher of our Association who will not view it as, humanly speaking, an irretrievable loss."

Aphorisms on Man.

The more independent of accidents, the more self-subsistent, the more fraught with internal resources, the greater the character.

Who is open without levity, generous without waste, secret without craft, humble without meanness, bold without insolence, cautious without anxiety, regular yet not formal, mild yet not timid, firm yet not tyrannical, is made to pass the ordeal of honour, friendship, virtue.

He can feel no little wants who is in pursuit of grandeur.

Call him wise whose actions, words, and steps are all a clear "because" to a clear "why."

Lavater.

The Philosopher's Farewell.

Professor Tyndall, in his last interview with Carlyle, while he rested his aged head on his shoulder, asked for one final word of counsel. Carlyle replied slowly, "Give yourself royally."

"Give thyself royally"—the sage profound
Thus saying, leaned his rugged storm-bent head
Weary on his disciple's breast, and stayed—
While the death weakness visibly gained ground.

"Give thyself royally!"—no other sound
Broke the pathetic silence. Thus Heaven bled,
And thus each kingly soul that would be fed
With Heaven's last utmost vision shall be crowned.

O, give thyself right royally; outpour
Thy being's whole sublime oblation free
For the world's welfare! So shall God give thee
No stinted recompense; each day shall store
Eternity with time; faith's mute embrace
Shall miss no revelation of his face!

Charles A. Fox.

Zionist Congress.—The Zionist Congress has been opened at Basle to discuss the movement started by Dr. Theodor Herzl, of Vienna, to acquire Palestine by purchase from Turkey, with a view to establishing the Jews in the Holy Land. About 200 delegates were present, including representatives from Great Britain, France, Austria, Russia, and the Balkan States. Dr. Herzl warmly welcomed the assembled delegates, and Herr Nordau made an exhaustive report on the present position of the Jews, which was loudly applauded. Both addresses were ordered to be printed, and Herren Birnbaum and Farbstein then delivered speeches on the foundation and development of the Zionist programme, which evidently made a deep impression on the congress.—Reuter.

Magdalen Mission, Aldershot.—The first year of this effort to succour the betrayed and abandoned closed on June 30, and though the beginning has been small it has yielded much encouragement. Rev. Ellis Hewitt (The Manse, Aldershot) employs a lady worker in merciful work of a threefold nature. First, it is sought to prevent the unwary from entering the path that leads to shame and ruin; also to open a door of welcome to any imperilled ones till they can be restored to parents or friends; further, to take the Gospel to the homes of the neglected and fallen, to teach principles of purity, and to lead the abandoned to the fountain opened for sin and uncleanness. The work embraces outdoor services in the slums, and has been attended by many good results which have evoked profound thankfulness to God and to Christian friends who have supported an effort capable of considerable extension.

The Gospel Tent Mission.—Under this name Mr. Gerald R. Coultas continues to carry on the evangelisation of needy Welsh districts. The headquarters of the work are in the Mission House, Barry Dock, South Wales, and other centres of operation are Brynmawr, Nantyglo, and various places where short missions are held among some of our home heathen and the vast number of sailors who visit the docks. Steady advance has been made, amongst other departments, in work for the spiritual benefit of the young. The Gospel services held on Sunday mornings and Thursday evenings have been helpful in leading the children to understand some of the grand saving truths of the Bible, and the impression has deepened that, in some cases, the parents will only be reached by gathering in their children. It has been noticed, in the work of visitation, that the last soft place left in the hearts of the poor drunken parents is the love of their offspring.

Soldiers' and Sailors' Home, Colombo.—Christian friends visiting Ceylon will afford much cheer by looking in upon those who are carrying on this useful work. The popularity of the Home has been well maintained during the past year, amongst soldiers, sailors, and civilians; and very frequently the resident manager, Mr. W. Harding, has been able to co-operate with the charitable in housing and relieving stranded and distressed Europeans. The Soldiers' Christian Association has held occasional meetings in the Mission Hall upstairs, which have been well attended. Every seasonable opportunity is used to influence for God those visiting the Home, and the good done in furnishing counter-attractions against evil associations is very considerable. The annual rent charge upon the premises, in the shape of interest upon the debt and part repayment of principal, is a heavy item of expenditure which it is very desirable to remove. The chaplain and general manager is Rev. J. S. Corlett.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

"PEACE hath her victories no less renowned than war." This is the thought which rises to our mind when we read of President Faure's triumphal reception at Paris. The Franco-Russian Alliance is one more pledge and an important one of the continued peace of Europe. The peace of the world can never be assured while every nation is an Ishmael with its hand against every other nation. England can look on with gratitude at the approximation of Russia and France, if for no other reason than that it keeps an impulsive people in check and saves them from a course of action which might very possibly involve disaster to other European States. If the soldier who has slain his thousands be received with honour, more should he who returns home from a mission of peace which will probably save thousands of lives. It is good that the French nation recognises "glory" under the garb of peace.

The German Emperor has come in for a good deal of criticism in the Press for his recent speech asserting the "Divine right of kings." However much we may dissent from the doctrine in the absolute form in which he enunciates it, there is an important truth, too often ignored, in his estimate of kinghood with its weighty duties, its never-ending perpetual toil and labour, its fearful responsibility to the Creator alone, responsibility from which no man, no Minister, no House of Deputies, no nation, can release the Prince.

The tendency of governments is too much to ignore responsibility to God, and to put mere expediency in its place.

Men are often heard to say that they "have nothing to do with the morality" of the subject when discussing trade, politics, art, literature, or what not. Mr. John Morley's deliverance on Machiavelli has elicited from Mr. F. Greenwood in Cosmopolis the view that statesmen have to do, firstly, with forces as forces, and little, if anything, with their morality. The exigencies of State-life may become like the exigencies of war, in which morality is suspended. That men have too commonly acted upon this view is only too palpable, but neither the exigencies of statecraft nor of war can abrogate or annul the law of God. The Almighty neither slumbers nor sleeps, never descends from his throne, never throws the reins of government over to any one. The morality of every question is the question, its very essence and life.

The Engineers' Strike and Lock-out, which has hitherto attracted but little public notice, is beginning to assume grave proportions, for it is throwing allied and dependent trades out of work and will soon be causing widespread suffering. All occupations are so interwoven in these days of ever-increasing social complexity, that it is impossible for any considerable group of men to act in isolation, and attempts at independent action speedily affect widespread interests. This struggle seems to be rather a trial of strength between masters and men than the outcome of any serious grievance on either side. The present development is, therefore, a strong plea for a conciliatory spirit on both sides, if it is not a call on the Board of Trade to act on the powers recently given to it by Parliament and intervene for a settlement. The claims of humanity are above and beyond all sectional interests.

We learn much from failure. Will the men who think to redeem and save society by means of altering the framework of it, its outer conditions, learn from their manifest failure that the true regeneration begins with the individual and in the condition of his heart? Mrs. Besant seems to know that the thing tried has failed, but not what the better thing is that should be adopted. She has been telling the American people that Socialism, which she regards as the ideal state, can never be achieved while man is so selfish. "Our London experiment has degenerated into a mere stock-jobbing scheme. All other socialistic colonies have failed, and for the same reason —the grasping selfishness of man." Is it not therefore, self-evident that the great work to be done for humanity is to teach it to be unselfish, i.e., loving? And how can this be done but by preaching the love of God as seen in Christ Jesus?

Among many facts of an interesting and encouraging nature in the Report of the Commissioners of Prisons for 1896-7, there is a strong plea for the separate treatment of first offenders as distinguished from hardened criminals. Under the old-fashioned system there was no segregation, and the result of contact between those undergoing their first imprisonment and confirmed offenders was practically most disastrous. By keeping them apart, there is often every chance of reclaiming those who have only begun a career of vice before it has become a habit. The chaplain of Wormwood Scrubbs says :—

Frequent personal intercourse with this class as a whole shows that they are not thieves, neither are they criminals as this term is generally understood. They are of a better stamp, both socially, morally, and intellectually, than the ordinary prisoners, consequently one has better material to work upon. I find among them managers, bankers' clerks, insurance agents, clerks to solicitors, in mercantile and other offices, drapers' assistants, men employed in Her Majesty's Post Office, and similar posts of trust, most of whom have had a fairly liberal education. Now, to most of these imprisonment is a crushing blow, and, were it not for the fact that one is able to offer them some helping hand on discharge, would almost overwhelm them. I find them well behaved, free from serious reports, very ready to listen to and receive advice.

Nothing should be omitted that would tend to make punishment remedial in these sad cases.

Anti-vivisectionists have sometimes been charged by their opponents with exaggeration and undue pessimism, especially when they foretold, as a probable outcome of vivisection, the practice of experiments on human subjects. They were not so far wrong, however, if credence can be given (as there is no reason to doubt) to the official "bulletin" of the Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, U.S.A. In it Dr. H. Berkley describes some horrible experiments performed upon eight patients in the Asylum of that city, who were tortured in their last hours by continuous poisoning that its effect might be duly watched and recorded. The fact that seven of them had either passed or were about to pass (!) the limit of time in which recovery could be confidently expected will not make the matter more justifiable in the eyes of a right-thinking public, especially when it is noted that two became "frenzied," and of these "one died before the excitement had subsided." And this was deliberately done to point out conclusively that the administration of even the very best and purest of the commercial desiccated thyroid tablets is not unattended by danger to the health and life of the patient.

Most people would have taken that for granted. Shorn of medical euphemism it simply reads, "Scientific murder."

What is true heroism? Certainly not the cheap bid for notoriety which prompted a few "old Etonians" to essay to row across the Straits of Dover, and nearly cost them their lives. Some papers commend this paltry act as "showing what stuff Englishmen are made of." Far more heroic was the Eastbourne guard who in last week's accident refused to have his bleeding wounds dressed until he had succoured the injured passengers and placed all the luggage on a truck. Prosaic enough this last act, but indicative of a strong fidelity to duty. Or witness the heroism of three young Irish ladies, aged respectively thirteen, fifteen, and twenty-four, who recently received the Royal Humane Society's practical recognition for gallantry in saving life from drowning. Fearlessness with a purpose is one thing, recklessness is another.

The Westminster Gazette, in calling attention to the value of public-house property, points out how the London County Council acquired certain public-houses between 1889 and 1896 for the purposes of metropolitan improvements. "Thirty of these houses were acquired, and the licences allowed to lapse, and the total cost to the ratepayers of such abandonment is £30,900." That is to say, the publicans were so much richer than anyone else would have been simply because they held a licence to sell drink. Our contemporary pertinently remarks that it raises the question—

Why the community should, in return for comparatively small licence fees, bestow this gratuitous money gift upon a particular class of trade?

And how great the gift is may be seen in the prices paid for some houses, and in the marvellous development of others. In one London thoroughfare, in a distance of less than four miles, no less than seven public-houses have been enlarged or rebuilt within a few years, and made to look like palaces. It is a scandal that the public should have to pay for them.

According to Dr. Dawson Burns, in his little volume on "Temperance in the Victorian Era," the English stock comes from a mixture of temperate and imtemperate races, the Britons being a sober people, the Anglo-Saxon a nation of heavy drinkers. The Normans after their settlement took to the habits of carousal, so rife among the conquered, and even the religious orders, despite their vows of abstinence and fasting, pursued a rule of luxury fatally inconsistent with the old rule. This long-continued infusion of alcoholism into the blood is a strong argument for the crusade that has made so great a difference in the drinking customs of society, and helps to explain the stubborn difficulties that still bar the way to a sober England.

But that a great and salutary change has taken place within the last sixty years is unquestionable. The Queen's coronation was followed by what might almost be styled a drunken national revel lasting for days; at her Jubilee there was less apparent drinking than at an ordinary Bank holiday. When Victoria was a young girl the total abstainers of the United Kingdom did not probably exceed 150,000, including juveniles; now they number millions, without counting the multitudes who never indulge in strong drink except on festive occasions. Then it was at the peril of ridicule, abuse, and social ostracism that a man professed himself a teetotaler; now even "moderates" will commend abstinence in other people. Then there were few Christian ministers who abstained; now the vast majority do, and nine-tenths of the theological students preparing for the ministry. These are great facts, showing nothing less than a revolution in public opinion. Yet with the increase of population there is a terrible increase in the consumption of drink, especi ally by young people and women.

The Russian Government has gone in for the nationalisation of the drink traffic, "with a view of securing the sale of pure spirits, and under conditions least calculated to promote drunkenness." There will be no consumption "on the premises," and all intoxicants are to be sold under seal, the bottles bearing a ticket with particulars of cost, quantity, and quality. The Russian nation has been the victim of adulterated spirits, and drunkenness has been a crying evil there. It remains to be seen how far a "paternal Government" can cure the evil by taking it under its control. There are two ways of abating this vice: first, by making drink less accessible, and, secondly, by disseminating the true principles of temperance. It is only when both methods are pursued together that there is much hope of success.

We have more than once drawn attention to the way that publicans bribe children to frequent their beershops. We are glad to see that the Birmingham magistrates have passed a strong resolution not only condemning the practice, but intimating to the publicans that such corruption will in future be punished by forfeiture of their licence. The Liverpool authorities have done a similar thing, and, according to a pamphlet by Mr. A. T. Davies, it is now no unusual thing to see in the windows of publichouses of the city a large printed placard bearing the words, "Children under thirteen years of age are not served here." We wait to see London acting with equal zeal on behalf of its coming citizens. Meantime all the moral suasion possible must be used with parents not to send their children to fetch beer.

The Church of England in Wales has lost an excellent supporter by the death of Archdeacon Griffiths, of Neath. No man could move a popular assembly of Welsh people better than he could. When all others had failed to get a hearing at National Eisteddfodau the Archdeacon, with his manly, rugged personality, soon obtained silence and a sympathetic attention. He was no bigot, but was brotherly and generous to Nonconformist and Churchman alike. May God raise more men of the same stamp.

The English Churchman complains that the attitude of the Government towards genuine Protestantism raises one of the most urgent questions of the day. Since the election of 1895, no less than nine bishops have been appointed, and only two can be described as in any genuine sense Evangelical. "In imperial politics Roman Catholics are considered and consulted. In the ecclesiastical sphere Ritualists are sought and patronised." In many subtle but unmistakable ways it is shown that none but High Churchmen need seek countenance or promotion in the National Church. The recent appointment of a Ritualist to the See of Bristol—a stronghold of Evangelicalism in days gone by—is only the last of many acts that form an indictment against the present Prime Minister as well as Mr. Gladstone in this matter.

"Canon Streatfeild's withdrawal from accepting the vicarage of Clifton, and the reasons he has given for his action, have revealed a disgraceful state of affairs." So says a Church organ which is indignant at the action of an "inner body of trustees possessed of control over a portion of the vicar's income" which they proposed to exercise if the vicar abandoned the use of the black gown. Protestant Churchmen have had one painful experience in Bristol of the disappointing (not to use a stronger word) conduct of a cleric of their choice; and there are many moderate Church folk who do not attach importance to the black gown, but who feel a sympathy for evangelical trustees in finding it necessary in self-defence to act up to their strictest rights. The High Church party has only itself to thank for this.

A writer in the Standard has been advocating the granting of the courtesy titles of "honourable" to the children of bishops. As it is, neither the wife nor children of a bishop are recognised by any distinctive title, and we heartily agree with the Church Times that > a priestly "caste" is the last thing to be desired. The "caste" system of the Close destroyed the life and usefulness of our cathedrals in the past. A score or so of Mrs. Proudies with their "honourable" sons and daughters would reduce the Church to the close preserve of a few select ecclesiastical families. Even as things are there is a vast deal too much of this already.

Nor, unhappily, are cliques and "close preserves" confined to strictly ecclesiastical families. They are a hindrance to Christian fellowship in any community.

As an instance of the usefulness and adaptability of the Christian Endeavour movement may be mentioned its rapid spread through the great Empire of India. Among the rice-fields of East Bengal there are more than sixty active and efficient societies in as many villages of Bengali Christians. These, according to The Missionary Review, have gone far to solve many serious problems of mission work, and to show how a small band of earnest native Christians, under adverse circumstances, can maintain the holy fire of zeal and Christ-like devotion among themselves without the aid of a resident missionary, or even a native pastor. Anything that aids the independent development of Christian life among aboriginal converts prepares for the future when outside aid will no longer be required, which should be the aim of all missionary effort.

Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, who has been on a visit to the Mission of the L.M.S. in New Guinea, writes home a very encouraging letter on the state of affairs. He is surprised that outside influences have done so little as yet in the island, but he fears that in the near future all this may be very roughly changed. Reports of a gold-bearing stratum and the expectation that more discoveries of gold will be made have already brought over from Australia a considerable number of miners. If these are satisfied, thousands will follow. Thus we may have a repetition of Australia and of South Africa. It will make missionary effort both more necessary and more difficult. From the beginning of the Gospel, all the world over, the missionaries of the Cross have no sooner begun to succeed than new difficulties arise, but only to be conquered, for "He shall not be discouraged till He hath sat judgment in the earth."

Colonel Gildea, chairman of the Soldiers and Sailors' Families' Association, has given to a representative of Cassell's Saturday Journal an account of the hard lot of a soldier's wife, which ought to make Englishmen feel very uncomfortable. Only six per cent. of the men in each regiment are permitted to marry, and then only if they possess the requisite qualifications, i.e., they must have served at least seven years, have £5 in the savings bank, and have earned two good-conduct badges. The wives of these men have their quarters in the barracks and go abroad and return with their husbands at the Government's expense. A soldier is not punished for marrying without leave, but his wife, in that case, gains nothing, but has to try and live on her husband's wages and what she can earn. One sentence of Colonel Gildea's is of sad significance:—

> There are thousands of men and women trying to live on the soldier's allowance of a shilling a day, and I don't suppose I am far wrong in saying that at least a third of them are half starved.

Here is a fine sphere for the patriotism of men who are always ready to clamour for war.

The Friends' Quarterly Examiner has a suggestive article on "An Ideal Meeting, etc.," in which the writer speaks of "some fifteen or twenty minutes' impressive and comforting silence." To thousands of church-goers twenty minutes' silence, or five minutes, would be an intolerable bore; irksomeness they would find in it, but comfort none, which is not a good sign. The Quaker lady who asked busy Mr. Southey when he did his thinking might also ask when a great many so-called Christians do their meditating. All religion would be more impressive and more comforting if it had time and opportunity "to sink down into our hearts," as Jesus desired his words should do.

The Rand Commission which recently made its report to the Transvaal Raad gave one recommendation which is suggestive of a very serious condition of things in the Republic.

> Evidence has been given before your Commission that the sweepstakes and other forms of betting held in the betting circles in this Republic have a very injurious effect upon trade, and are especially injurious to the youth of this Republic. Your Commission is aware that this question is already before the Raad for consideration, and can therefore only give expression to the hope that that body will proceed to alter the law in such a manner that the holding of all sweepstakes and other forms of betting will be prohibited.

No evidence is given as to whether this gambling mania has attacked the Boer youths, or is the peculiar amusement of the Uitlanders, nor how far the rage for speculating on the Johannesburg Stock Exchange among the older folk is answerable for this outbreak among the young. It is useless dealing with results if causes are not removed.

The present Czar, according to a writer in The Quiver, has the gift of administering rebukes in an effective way. There is a great deal of luxury and extravagance among the upper grades of the Russian Army, and a young officer who had been guilty of riding in a tramcar for the sake of economy had been asked to send in his resignation by his colleagues. Hearing of this, the Czar one morning rode down to the barracks in a tramcar, and presented himself before his officers with the startling question if they desired him to send in his papers in consequence. The result may be imagined.

A Christless Bible.*

BY REV. HENRY VAN DYKE, D.D., NEW YORK.

THE thing that I want to try to do this morning will seem very strange to you; I want to take Christ out of the Bible. Of course, that is impossible. You cannot take Christ out of the Bible without destroying it, any more than you can take the mortar out of a building without having it fall down. But there are a great many men in the world who think that they can do the impossible; and there are some men in the world who think that they have done this very thing. They think that they have taken the Divine Christ, the Son of God, the Redeemer, out of the Bible, and yet left us a book which is worth reading and studying. I want to let these men speak out clearly and distinctly, with no prejudice. I want you to understand what it means to take the Divine Christ out of the Bible. I want you to get some idea of what the Bible and religion would be worth to us without Him; what inspiration, hope, instruction, or comfort we could get from this book without Christ.

Let us begin with the Old Testament. Go back to that picture of human origins which is given in the book of Genesis. It is a picture of human sin and suffering, Divine wrath and retribution, which corresponds to what we know about human nature and life from other sources.

Was there a Fall? I believe that there was. Unruly appetite, lustful passion, envy, discord, guilt, and terror are written in every history of the human tribes as well as in the book of Genesis. Towards such a race a pure, wise, and holy God must feel righteous anger and repulsion. They spoil his world. They mock the Divine image, just as a loathsome ape in his cage seems to be jeering at you, with every filthy gesture and every ugly grimace. This is the picture of humanity given in the Bible. Take away out of that picture the one ray of light that comes in the promise, "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head." Take away out of the history of the patriarchs the one golden thread that runs along in the promise that the Star, the Sceptre, should come out of Israel, and that Shiloh should come—take that golden thread away, blot that out, the one ray of light, and what is left? Sin, shame, struggle, lying, deceit, adultery, drunkenness, blasphemy below; and scorn, silence, condemnation above; expulsion from Eden, the mark of guilt on the brow of Cain, the destruction of Babel, the sweeping flood, the fire on Sodom and Gomorrah, wars, and famines, and captivities.

MAN A REBELLIOUS CREATURE;

and God so angry that He will not speak to him. A sin-cursed world; a silent, stainless heaven: and no way between.

Let us pass by Moses and the Ten Commandments, with the "Thou shalt not" rolling and thundering from Sinai. We can get little comfort there without Christ in the Bible. Every "Thou shalt not" in those Ten Commandments is written opposite an "I would like to" in the heart of man. The law given from Sinai is simply God's negative to what men are prone to do, and would do if they dared. The whole history of the people of Israel is just a commentary on the way to break the Ten Commandments. Have you ever heard of the "Wicked Bible"? It was a Bible in which the printer happened to leave out the "not" in one of the commandments. It seems to me as if the history of the people of Israel was almost like that "Wicked Bible"; and for every commandment they would blot out the "not" and retain "Thou shalt": "Thou shalt kill; thou shalt commit adultery; thou shalt steal; thou shalt bear false witness." There is little comfort and little help for you and me in the books of Moses if there is no Christ in the Bible.

Pass on to David in the Psalms. Here we seem to listen to a gentler and more beautiful voice. The thunders of Sinai have been softened and set to music. The Ten Commandments have been translated into experience and transformed into song. But what is their song? It is the song of the unattainable. What is their experience? It is the experience of failure, and shame, and penitence. Ah, those broken-hearted Psalms! How they ring the changes on human frailty, suffering, and remorse! David could sing divinely, but he could not live as he sang. Literature glowing with light and beauty! Life full of shadows and deformities! A book written with simplicity, and purity, and noble sentiment! A writer touched with vanity, and insincerity, and selfishness, and avarice! Have you never made that discovery in your studies of literature? David knew his own weakness, and guilt, and sinfulness, and disgrace, and he clung to the promise of the Divine mercy in the Messiah, and to the hope of the coming of that King who should reign in righteousness for ever. Take away that beautiful hope that God would bring help by One mighty to save, and what is left in the Psalms? A passion of love for inaccessible holiness:

> The desire of the moth for the star
> Of the night for the morrow;
> The devotion to something afar
> From the sphere of our sorrow.

Without Christ, the Psalms are simply a musical confession of the impossibility of escaping from God, and the hopelessness of keeping his commandments.

Turn to Solomon, and the books written in his name and spirit. Here we find the bare commandments of Almighty God transformed into an elaborate moral philosophy. Each commandment is cut and polished until it sparkles like a diamond. That is what makes them valuable; they are so small and compact that they ought to be easy to remember and keep. A hundred epigrams flash from the books like rays of light. The wisdom, beauty, and reasonableness of the law are exhibited from every side. We see how advisable, how profitable, how prudent, how admirable it is to be good—and how impossible; for the king who made these commandments trampled every one of them into the dust; the king who uttered these epigrams went straight against them, every one. Read 1 Kings xi. if you want to know what moral philosophy by itself amounts to. The lover of wisdom lay down with folly. The sage whose wise sayings rise like an airy ladder to heaven treads the path to hell. The wisest man in theory becomes in practice an adulterer, a sensualist, a slave to his own vices, a prisoner to his own despair. The Book of Ecclesiastes sums it up: "Vanity of vanities, all is vanity." It is the text-book of suicides. Close that book and write upon it this sentence: "The world by wisdom—even Solomon's wisdom—knew not God."

Follow on through all the history until you come to Isaiah. The loftiest and greatest man in the Old Testament is Isaiah. Here he stands amid the shames, and fears, and desolations, and disasters, and wrecked hopes, and on-rushing calamities of the chosen people. He looks around him, and what does he see? He says, "I saw no man, and wondered that there was no intercessor." There we must stop. All that follows must be blotted out. We must leave only the vision of darkness, iniquity, disgrace, resting like a black cloud over the doomed world. "A seed of evil-doers; children that are corrupters. They have forsaken the Lord. They have provoked the Holy One of Israel to anger. They have gone away." Burden after burden! Babylon, Moab, Damascus, Egypt—doom after doom! Doom of Israel! Doom of Judah! "The whole head is sick, and the whole heart faint; from the sole of the foot even unto the crown of the head there is no soundness in it, but wounds and bruises and putrifying sores."

Never man lived on earth who saw so clearly and felt so deeply the world's bitter need of a Christ and Saviour as Isaiah did. Man can never save himself. Humanity is helpless, hopeless, unless God comes to the rescue. He who gave the law must come and keep it. He who cursed sin must come and take it away. A divine Redeemer, divinely holy, loving and saving, must appear, or this world is lost for ever. Isaiah saw Him coming afar off. Lifted high in heart and hope, he saw afar off the advent of the Human God, the Kinsman-Redeemer, who should "bear our griefs and carry our sorrows"; "the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace," who should be "wounded for our transgressions and bruised for our iniquities." Beautiful exceedingly is that singing hope as it marches through Isaiah's soul. "He shall feed his flock like a shepherd. He shall gather the lambs in his arms and carry them in his bosom, and gently lead those that are with young."

Blot it out! It is unreasonable! It is impossible! The incarnation is a dream. God could not become man—that is a delusion; that is a vain, foolish vision. There is no Christ. There never was to be a Christ. God never thought of it. Man only imagined it. The "high and lofty One who inhabiteth eternity" never meant to come down to this world and live here. He could not. He would not share our pains and sorrows as a brother. He is too great. He is too infinite. He could not, He would not, die to take away our sins. Such a thing is incredible. There was no holy birth at Bethlehem. There was no redeeming death of the Son of God on Calvary. Man dreamed it all. It never happened. It never will happen. God is going to leave us to work out our own salvation; to redeem our own souls if we can; to live our life and

"DREE OUR WEIRD."

He will write his laws on tables of stone, and in the pitiless stars, and on our trembling hearts. He will reveal his judgments. He will make his way known upon earth, but not his saving health to all nations. He will never come to us. He will not help us. He will leave us without a Saviour.

Go back to Isaiah. Hear what he has to say to you. You have taken away his Christ, and you have broken his heart. No more does he sing: "Comfort ye, comfort ye, my people." He has no comfort to give. His cry is woe and desolation. "They shall look unto the earth; and behold trouble and darkness; dimness of anguish; and they shall be driven to darkness." "Your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you, and He will not hear." That is the last word that lawgiver and psalmist and philosopher and prophet have to say to us without Christ. Sinful man; a hidden God; a silent heaven; and on earth trouble, and darkness, and dimness of anguish.

* An address at the Students' Conference, Northfield. Published in "Northfield Echoes," No. 2.

The National Protestant Congress will this year meet at Blackburn from October 18 to 21 inclusive. There will be one meeting on the first day, three on each of the others. The subjects deal with the Church of Christ in its doctrine and character, passing on to consider the Bible and the Church, Protestantism and Romish propaganda, modern unbelief and religious indifference. Two of the meetings on the concluding day will be under the auspices of the Women's Protestant Union, and consider Romanism as it affects our educational system.

Suggestive Readings.

THE SONGS OF DEGREES.—III.

Psa. cxxv.—The Growth of Faith.

THE soul trusting in the Lord is conscious of security. The believer is steadfast and immovable, like Mount Zion, and Jehovah is round about him as the perpetual mountains are round Jerusalem. "Peace upon Israel." These words, which close this psalm and cxxviii., are evidently referred to by the Apostle in Gal. vi. 16: "As many as walk according to this rule, peace be on them and mercy, and upon the Israel of God."

Psa. cxxvi.—Witness and Service.

Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. "Jehovah hath done great things for us whereof we are glad." Then follows service. "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy."

"He that goeth forth and weepeth bearing precious seed"—even though he be sold, like Joseph, into Egypt; or taken, like Daniel, among the captivity to Babylon; or deported, like our faithful Stundist brethren, to Trans-Caucasian desolations; or, like the massacred Armenians, have not loved his life even unto death, for the testimony of Jesus—"shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him"—"redeemed from the hand of the enemy." Perhaps the largest sheaves will be brought by sufferers and martyrs.

Psa. cxxvii.—Power Cometh from God.

There may be much witness and service before we learn that the Lord doeth all our works in us and for us. The fruit also is all from him. See Isa. xxvi. 12; Zec. iv. 6; Hos. i. 7; Mic. iii. 8; John xv. 5.

Psa. cxxviii.—Promises.

In the previous psalm every blessing comes from Jehovah, their covenant God. In the present one, blessing and power come to him who fears Jehovah and walks in his ways. He shall eat the labour of his hands, and every individual and family blessing shall be his. He contributes to, and he shall see, the good of Jerusalem and peace upon Israel.

For fulness of blessing is not attained by the individual, nor even by the tribe, apart from Jerusalem, whither the tribes go up, and are one united Israel. Only "with all saints can we comprehend the love of Christ which passeth knowledge" (Eph. iii. 18). When Jonathan went with his armour-bearer against the Philistines' garrison, he said, "The Lord hath delivered them [not, into the hand of Jonathan and his armour-bearer, nor of the family of Saul, nor of the tribe of Benjamin, but] into the hand of Israel" (1 Sam. xiv.). When Elijah had made intercession against Israel, Elisha said, as he saw him taken up, "The chariot of Israel and the horsemen thereof." "God hath not cast away his people" (1 Kings xix.; 2 Kings ii.; Rom. xi.). So also all Christian service must be rendered, not as a single individual, but as a member of the body of Christ (1 Cor. xii.).

Under the Old Covenant, as in this psalm, blessing temporal and earthly is promised to him who fears the Lord and walks in his ways. But finding fault with that legal covenant, He made his Son the Mediator of a New Covenant established upon better promises. Under it "no condemnation," "death unto sin and life unto God," and "all spiritual blessings in heavenly places" and heavenly things are ours "in Christ" (Heb. viii.; Rom. vi., viii.; Eph. i.). The Epistle to the Ephesians has been called the Epistle of in-ness. This may be carried further: the Old Covenant was one of outwardness—the law written on stones; divers washings, carnal ordinances. The New Covenant is one of inwardness: the law written in fleshy tables of the heart; Christ in you the hope of glory; raised up together and made to sit together in the heavenlies in Christ Jesus (2 Cor. iii.; Heb. ix.; Col. i.; Eph. ii.).

Is My Bible Really True?

WHERE DID WE GET IT?

By Rev. CHARLES LEACH, D.D., Manchester.

No. XII.—AUTHORISED VERSIONS.

"THE blood of the martyrs is the seed of the Church." In the case of Tyndale this was truly so, and the seed sown took root and produced a golden harvest. Though every effort was made to wipe out the work of the old Reformer who gave his life to translating the Bible into English, and printing and circulating it among the people, the work he did lived on after he was dead. In three years after he was killed, an authorised edition of the Bible in English was printed and circulated far and wide!

There was a law which said that all who read the Scriptures in their native tongue should forfeit land, cattle, life, goods, they and their heirs for ever! They burned the books of William Tyndale, then they burned his bones, and many another brave man lost his life in housing and circulating the Bible. But in spite of it all, Tyndale's work took root. It is not in the power of man to hinder the work of God. "Potentates have proclaimed their edicts, tyrants have lighted up their pyres, and mercenary legions have shed rivers of human blood to destroy the Bible and its believers." But in spite of them all, it lives on. The more men have tried to eradicate the Bible, the more deeply it has struck its roots; and the more they have tried to blot out the name of Christ, the more legible and glorious it has become.

William Tyndale was put to death in the year 1536. His offence was circulating the Word of God in the English tongue. Strange as it may sound, it is true that in the year 1539 an edition of the Scriptures, called the "Great Bible," was published under royal authority, and thus became the first authorised copy of the English Bible. From the year 1535, one year before Tyndale's death, to 1539 several other editions of the English Bible had appeared, which bore the names of Coverdale, Matthews, and Taverner. These were for the most part based on the work of Tyndale, and the Authorised Bible itself was very little more than a revision of his work. Among the men who read the first national authorised edition of the English Scriptures at the king's command was Cuthbert Tunstall, Bishop of Durham ——— the very man who had refused to shelter and help Tyndale, and who had found the money to buy copies of the Bible for burning at Paul's Cross!

One almost wishes that the sturdy reformer had been spared for a few years longer to witness the triumph of his work. It was his lot to labour whilst others enjoyed, to scatter what others should gather, and to sow what others should reap. In it all, however, God's Word was honoured, the salvation of men furthered, and the glory of God secured.

After the publication of the first authorised Bible, in 1539, the work of revision still went on. It did not, it could not, stop. Hitherto nearly all those who had worked at Bible translation had been compelled to carry on their work under great difficulties — sometimes in hiding, often in exile, occasionally in prison. No doubt the men who worked under these conditions loved their work, but the circumstances did not allow them to produce such results as they would have done if they could have had free access to libraries and other sources of information—if they had been allowed that leisure and freedom which the best work requires. After the year at which we have arrived it was altogether different. Men could work at the Bible in open day.

It was only a little more than twenty years after Tyndale's death when Queen Elizabeth ascended the throne of England amid the universal rejoicings of the people. In her grand entry to the City of London she was presented with a copy of the English Bible, which she pressed to her lips and to her heart as a precious treasure. Among the first acts of this Queen we, may note that she set at liberty all persons imprisoned for religion, and the exiles were allowed to return home to England.

In less than fifty years from the accession of Elizabeth we find the King of England arranging for and directing the great company of scholars who prepared the splendid edition of the Bible which we now know, possess, and prize as the Authorised Version, than which no book ever had a larger circulation, a wider influence, or a more glorious history.

Of the many editions of the Bible which appeared between the year 1539 and the year 1604 we need only name two. The Geneva Bible was published in 1560. It bore this name because it was the work of many scholarly men who passed much time in exile at Geneva, which they devoted to this work. It was the most popular of all versions for more than half a century.

This was the first English Bible which laid aside the old black letter and appeared in Roman type, which divided the whole into verses, and entirely omitted the Apocrypha. The Bishops' Bible appeared in 1568. This work was undertaken by Archbishop Parker, who obtained the assistance of a number of bishops. It was not a success, and perhaps had less popularity than any other English version.

KING JAMES'S BIBLE.

The version of the Bible which was destined to eclipse all others, and exist down to our day, is the one honoured and treasured by Englishmen as the Authorised Version.

In the middle of the year 1603 James the Sixth of Scotland came to the throne of England as James the First. He was a man of many indiscretions, but was undoubtedly possessed of considerable scholarly attainments. When he ascended the throne of England three versions of the Bible were in use. Six months after his accession there was a conference on religious questions at Hampton Court Palace, at which the King presided. Here the question of a new revision was mooted, and warmly taken up by the King. He undertook the direction of the matter, and seems really to have shown great skill and judgment in the arrangements which he made and caused to be made.

A company of fifty-four learned men were selected to carry out the work. They were chosen from many parties and schools of Englishmen, and included some of the best-known scholars of the day. Instructions as to procedure were given to them, and rules formed for their guidance. After much labour and prayer their work was completed, and given to the world in 1611. That they did their work well we may see in the fact that for more than two and a-half centuries this version has remained in possession of the field. It is dear alike to the hearts of rich and poor. It has found its way into the palace and the cottage. Its sweet and simple message is welcomed in the home of the prince and peasant, and has been the light of life to countless thousands of souls.

"Striving According to His Working."

1 Cor. xv. 10.

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

IN early life Paul was one of Gamaliel's most promising pupils — strong, self-reliant, vehement, clear in thought, incisive in speech, swift in action. Among the men of his age few could outmatch Saul of Tarsus, who earlier than was customary became a member of the Jewish Sanhedrim. Would you recognise him in the weakness, the fear, and the much trembling of this broken man? Or, if you did, might you not be tempted to regret that he had opposed Christ in his strength, and had brought only his weakness into his service? But such regrets would be wholly unnecessary. Because he was weak he was strong; because he bore chains he was the great emancipator from chains; because he was poor he succeeded in making so many rich.

After this, let no one complain. The only thing of which we need to be sure is whether we have been called of God to certain work for Him. Then, if limitations and hindrances suggest the impossibility of ever accomplishing it, let us dare to glory in them, and discover in their presence the ground for believing that we have been selected for the work to which they might threaten to become a fatal barrier. In other words, let us do by faith the work which others do by human might.

Another element in the success of the Apostle's work must be found in his self-abnegation. He had large and liberal views of truth and life, and could probably have permitted to himself many things which he carefully eschewed, lest his influence for Christ should be impaired. In 1 Cor. viii. 13 he tells us that if meat should make his brother to offend, he will eat no flesh while the world lasts. In 1 Cor. viii. he explains that, though as far as his own conscience was concerned he could eat in an idol's house without condemnation, lest he should cast a stumbling-block before the undecided, halting feet of some weak disciple. In 1 Cor. ix. he alleges his determination to forego the delights of wife and child, though his was a very tender nature; to forego the support which his converts might voluntarily offer, though he had as much right to take it as oxen their corn, or priests their share of temple-offerings; and at the close of that chapter he explains how carefully he kept his body under, bringing it into subjection, all lest he should fail to do the utmost possible for the souls of men, and compel the Lord to substitute an instrument more suited for his purpose. Again in 2 Cor. vi. 3, he speaks of giving no offence in anything, that the ministry might not be blamed.

YET HE DARED NOT DO IT

This, too, is a path in which we may follow the steps of this great servant of Jesus. All Christian workers, zealous for the coming of God's Kingdom, must at once forego indulgences and practices which are not in themselves unlawful, that the ministry may not be blamed, nor souls hindered. Consideration of the effect which may be produced upon others is a very real and urgent factor in determining our action with regard to matters that lie in the great twilight borderland, between what is clearly defined as right and clearly defined as wrong. The more widespread our influence over souls, the more absolute the necessity of considering the effect on others of methods and actions in which we are left with large liberty of self-determination and choice.

In this enumeration let us not forget the eloquence of his tears. "Remember," he said to the elders of the Ephesian Church, "that by the space of three years I ceased not to warn every one night and day with tears" (Acts xx. 31). Each word is significant! Not content with appealing to them by day, he must needs invade his nights, when, worn by emotion, labour, and teaching, his tired body might surely claim repose. Nor was this a spasmodic devotion to be followed by spells of indolence and lethargy. He did not cease this ministry for three long years; but pursued it without relaxation, without interruption, without pause. Nor was this work prosecuted with the persistence of a zealot or the eagerness of a partisan, but with the tears of a soul lover.

Why is it that this fount of tears seems denied to us? We have tears for all things else than the infinite loss of those who have rejected the Gospel. For this, alas! no single drop trickles along the dry watercourses. We are smitten by a terrible drought: our heart a very Sahara, its water-springs frozen by remorseless cold or scorched by relentless heat. In losing the power of tears we have lost one great power of causing them.

IT IS BY BROKEN HEARTS

that hearts are broken; by wet eyes that eyes are made to brim over with the waters of repentant sorrow.

Lastly, let us not forget the Apostle's individual interest in his converts. "Warning every one of you night and day with tears," is one evidence of this; and for another we turn instinctively to Col. i. 28: "Whom we preach, warning every man, and teaching every man, in all wisdom; that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus." How he dwells on that phrase "every man." He had no sympathy with the reckless haste that shakes the boughs of the fruit-trees to obtain their precious harvest. He knew too well the peril of injuring the delicate bloom. All the fruit he gathered for God was hand-picked. He was more fond of the hand-net than the seine. Like his Master, he would go far out of his way if he might cast the demon out of one possessed spirit, or persuade an Agrippa to become a Christian. One soul, for whom Christ died, was in his sight of unspeakable worth.

But, underlying all these, there was the fundamental conception that it was not he, but the grace of God that was with him, and the power of God which wrought through him. He energised according to the energy of a mightier than himself, who energised in him mightily. He wrought, yet not he, but Christ wrought in him. Anything save what Christ wrought in him was wood, hay, and stubble, of which he dared not take account. He did not work for Christ, but offered himself to Him without reserve, that Christ might penetrate and irradiate the inmost recesses of his being, and then go forth to illuminate the hearts of men. All his care was to purify himself, that he might at all times be meet for the Master's use. His one desire was to yield himself to God, and that his members might be used as weapons in the great conflict against the powers of hell.

This is, after all, the first and last lesson for the Christian worker. Be clean, pure of heart, and simple in motive. See to it, that there be no friction between your will and Christ's. Be adjusted, in gear, well set and jointed. Subdue your own activities as much as your own natural lethargy. Stand still till God impels you. Wait till He works in you to will and to do of his good pleasure. Exercise faith that God should accomplish in you the greatest results possible to the capacity of your nature. Let there be no thought of what you can do for God, but all thought of what God can do through you. Nothing will make you so intense and ceaseless in your activity as this.

There will be an end of cowardice and of pride. Of cowardice, because you will find yourself borne along by an irresistible impulse. Of pride, because you will have no occasion to boast. As soon might Milton's pen have been proud of writing the "Paradise Lost" as you of what Christ may have done through you. "Shall the axe boast itself against him that heweth therewith? or shall the saw magnify itself against him that shaketh it?"

These words apply to us all, not least to those to whom God has given the ministry of suffering and pain, the care of little children, the daily round of familiar duty. In these we minister to Him, who judges not by the character but by the spirit of our work, not by its extent but by its depth, not by results but by the spirit that animates and inspires.

In all such there is the certainty of the gracious co-operation of the Holy Spirit. Whenever they stand up to speak, the Spirit of God bears witness to their words, so that they come with his demonstration to prepared hearts. Wherever they bear witness, whether by lip or life, the results that accrue testify to the presence and power of a mightier than they. And whenever they cross the threshold of some new soul, or home, or land, men become aware that the Gospel has come unto them, not in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance. Be it ours so to live, testify, and minister, that we may be workmen not needing to be ashamed, good stewards of the manifold grace of God.

A Prayer for Rest.

"Oh that I had wings like a dove, then would I fly away and be at rest."

Give me thy rest, O Lord!
Breathe on my restless heart and weary brain
With gentle soothing power.
Oh, touch the jarring springs of life,
Which burn with fevered longing's impotence,
And that Almighty touch
Shall bring me peace, and power, and rest,
Like tender childhood's sweet untroubled calm.

Oh rest! soft rest! sweet rest!
Why as a fleeting phantom flittest thou,
And lightest but an hour
Upon a toilworn heart that groans
And frets beneath the burden of unquiet days
And tossing feverish nights,
When slumber like a will-o'-th'-wisp
Eludes my passionate imploring grasp.

Oh, for thy perfect rest,
The rest that triumphs over human woe,
By Faith's clear vision
Of unending rest from pain;
Allied with powers to work and think;
And in that holy atmosphere
To find the goal we hoped to reach
In God's Divine hereafter.

Leytonstone.—Messrs. Borton Brothers are now holding services at the Leytonstone Assembly Rooms, and each Sunday evening the rooms fill up with a typical people's congregation. The work originated in a mission in 1894, and except for a short break in the summer, has gone steadily on since. In order to somewhat test the work, written testimonies were invited to be sent in by any who had been blessed, and a number of these were read out at last Sunday's service, showing in what a variety of ways the Holy Spirit has worked.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, September 12.

Obey, I beseech thee, the voice of the Lord, in that which I speak unto thee: so it shall be well with thee, and thy soul shall live."—Jer. xxxviii. 20. (R.V.).

OF many Christians it can hardly be said that their soul lives; it exists, but does not thrive. The food of the soul is in part the Word of God: but in part it is obedience. As we obey we are fed. Thus our Master said, "My meat is to do the will of Him that sent Me, and to finish his work" (John iv. 34). The same truth is suggested here; if we obey the voice of the Lord, it is well with us, and our soul thrives.

The voice of God speaks from the page of his Word. Let us not accept that to be his voice which does not come to us through Scripture, or is not corroborated by Scripture. But let us be very careful to obey God's Word, so far as we know it, even when, as in Zedekiah's case, it seems to contradict all the suggestions of prudence and common-sense. Better be with God in a minority of one, than have the plaudits of an immense host of godless men.

How well I remember, years ago now, entering the bed-chamber of an eminent saint, whose diminishing candles told how long he had been feeding on the Word of God. I asked him what had been the subject of his study. He said he had been engaged in discovering all the Lord's positive commandments, that he might be sure that he was not wittingly neglecting any one of them. Have all the readers of this homily been equally conscientious? It is very sad to find how many in the present day are neglecting to observe to do the Lord's precepts concerning his ordinances, concerning the laying up of money, the evangelisation of the world, and the manifestation of perfect love. They know the Lord's will, and do it not. They appear to think that they are absolved from that "observing to do," which was so characteristic of Deuteronomy. As though Love were not more inexorable than Law!

MONDAY, September 13.

"Because thou hast put thy trust in Me."—Jer. xxxix. 18.

What will not trust do? It will draw out of God for us the most wonderful exhibitions of his tender and mighty provision on our behalf. Who can put a limit on what God will do for the man who trusts him? Here was the whole city given up to bloodshed and fire. The utmost confusion prevailed. No quarter was shown to the hapless Jews, pursued from house to house, from street to street by the brutal soldiery. Yet because Ebedmelech trusted in God, and because he evidenced his faith by his loving care for the prophet, he was not given into the hand of the men of whom he was afraid.

Some who read these words may be greatly afraid. They dwell among lions, among men whose words are a sharp sword. But let them trust in the living Saviour; and, in the meanwhile, go on each day ministering as well as they can to God's Jeremiahs. It is not enough to let down ropes to help them; it is a great sign of the love of God to put some rags to keep the ropes from chafing. Too many are thoughtless in neglecting the use of the old clouts. 'Tis the hour of peril, God will surely save you, and He helps very tenderly.

Let us trust Him more. Too many resemble the stone-breaker who came into a vast estate, but was content to live in the lodge. When an old friend came to congratulate him he said: "There! It is all in those parchments, but I have never been to see for myself what there is." Let us possess our possessions, and learn how much God will do for those who trust Him.

TUESDAY, September 14.

"The captain of the guard gave him victuals, and a present, and let him go."—Jer. xl. 5 (R.V.).

This captain seems to have had a remarkable insight into God's dealings with Israel. In verse 3 he speaks quite prophetically, and in this treatment of the prophet he gives every sign of having been admitted into the secret councils of the Most High. Like the centurion of the New Testament, he may have had some further knowledge of God than those around him possessed.

But the interesting matter is the care exercised by God over his servant. During the siege his bread had been given him and his water had been sure. And now, in spite of all the plottings and devisings against his life, he was the one man of Israel who was treated with respect and provided with an honourable maintenance.

God is able to supply the need of his servants in very remarkable ways; now through ravens, or a widow, and again through a captain of Nebuchadnezzar's guard. If we will be all for God, God will be all for us. In the present instance the men who were so eager to save themselves perished in the capture of the city; whilst the one man who sought to do God's will, with a single purpose, not only saved his life, but found all things else added to him.

God would have us live free from care. He made the spirit, and will see that it gets its allowance of sustenance. He made the soul, and knows how much love and culture it requires. He made the body, and will provide for its food and clothing. Do not fear the rough servants whom He employs as the distributors of his gifts. Under the mailed armour a warm heart is beating.

WEDNESDAY, September 15.

"Then arose Ishmael...and smote Gedaliah... with the sword."—Jer. xli. 2.

This chapter is full of horrible atrocities. Blow on blow befell the already decimated remnant of Jews. Had it not been for Ishmael's ruthless vandalism, the vine of Israel might yet have struck her roots downwards and borne fruit upwards.

We must ask for more of that profound faith which, through all blinding mystery, sees the Divine purpose, weaving events and men into its plans, and compelling all to work together for the discipline or aid of his children. "Praise the Lord from the earth, ye dragons, and all deeps; fire and hail; snow and vapour; stormy wind fulfilling his word." "Surely the wrath of man shall praise thee; the remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain." (Psalms cxlviii. 7, 8; lxxvi. 10.)

What a comfort it is to know that all things in heaven, earth, and hell, all demons and men, all Nebuchadnezzars and Ishmaels, are under the control of our heavenly Father! They may hate us with all the power of their evil natures, but they cannot hurt us beyond his permission; and as soon as they have fulfilled what He deemed necessary they will be withdrawn. There are no second causes for us. We are always dealing first-hand with God, though He may employ many strange servants to bring us his messages. This does not make God the author of evil, but it enables us to believe in Him as supreme over what appears evil. "Wherefore in everything give thanks, for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you."

THURSDAY, September 16.

"We will obey the voice of the Lord our God, to whom we send thee."—Jer. xlii. 6.

Whilst they said this with their lips, they had already set their faces to go into the land of Egypt (15, 17). It is useless to profess our desire to know God's will, whilst in our secret heart we are determined to follow a certain course, come what may. Indeed it is worse than useless; it is blasphemous. How often do believers ask for prayer that their course may be made clear, when in point of fact they have already decided on it, and are secretly hoping to turn God to their own side! How often in our private prayer we profess to wait wholly on God, whilst the back-door is open to sin, or the iron sinew of the will is set on following its own path!

But what a solemn responsibility devolves on those who are sent to and fro between God and man, as Jeremiah was. He realised that he was sent by the people unto the Lord, and that he was sent back again by the Lord unto the people (v. 21). He knew, too, that their faces were set on having their own evil way, but he never flinched from declaring the will of God, nor turned to the right or left, to curry favour with man. By nature very timid and sensitive, see how God made him a defenced city, an iron pillar, and brazen walls. He stood in God's council, and caused the people to hear his words. What a contrast to the false prophets of ch. xxiii.

FRIDAY, September 17.

"Baruch the son of Neriah setteth thee on against us."—Jer. xliii. 3.

When men do not like the Word of God, they imagine that someone has set the speaker on against them. A poor woman came to us a few weeks ago, in a terrible condition. She had induced her husband to come to a service, and the address seemed so exactly adapted to him, dealing with his sins in the plainest terms, that nothing could convince him that she had not given the preacher a full and detailed account of his life. When they got home he ill-treated her awfully. But that service and her patient suffering have been overruled to work a great change in him. He believed that his wife had set the speaker on against him.

How strange it is that ungodly men always think the Word of God is against them, whereas they are set against it. The wind would not be so keen in their teeth, if they were not steaming so quickly against it!

But there is a solemn lesson here for us all. Whenever the Word of God makes us wince, or God's messenger presses sorely on us, we are apt to turn aside the point by some superficial and unreasonable excuse. We catch up the first foil we can lay hands on, in order to ward off the missile. We find some excuse to blunt the edge of the sword. It is easy to impute a bad and personal motive. There is always a Baruch the son of Neriah in the question. It is not we who are wrong, but the prophet who is prejudiced against us. As Ahab said of Micaiah, "I hate him, for he doth not prophesy good concerning me, but evil." We can only grow in the Divine life, by exposing ourselves to the reproofs and searchings of the Divine Word.

SATURDAY, September 18.

"Oh, do not this abominable thing that I hate.'—Jer. xliv. 4.

There is a personal element in sin. It is not simply a violation of law, the law of the moral universe. It is against our own soul (v. 7), and, above all, it hurts the holy, loving nature of God, so that his Spirit cries out as in agony, "Oh, do it not!" There is something very pathetic in this cry, extorted by the sin of man from the heart of God. It reminds one of that cry of Jesus, "O faithless and perverse generation, how long shall I be with you, and suffer you?"

If anyone suffers very keenly from nervous exhaustion, it seems sometimes almost impossible for him to bear the noise of a child who persists in running heavily overhead. He will adopt a pleading rather than an angry tone: "My child, do not do this again, I cannot bear it." Let us think of God's holy nature as more sensitive to sin than the most highly-strung nerves to noise, and hear Him saying, whenever we are on the point of committing sin, "Oh, do not this abominable thing that I hate."

How greatly God hates sin is taught us in the Cross. In order to put it away He spared not his only begotten Son, but yielded Him to the bitterness of Calvary.

And how greatly the blessed Son hates it is evident from the bloody sweat of Gethsemane, when the shadow of the great burden of a world's guilt lay upon Him.

And how greatly must the Holy Spirit, whose temple is our body, hate any sin that defiles it. Thus the Holy Trinity, with one voice, pleads with thee, who meditatest evil. Beware of bringing pain into the heart of Infinite Love; and ask that some of God's hate for sin may be yours.

A Methodist Message.

The President of the Wesleyan Conference, Rev. W. L. Watkinson, has addressed an open letter to his ministerial brethren throughout the country; in the course of it he says:—

WHATEVER may be the ecclesiastical authority with which a Christian ministry is invested for the purposes of administration and discipline, its essential authority is derived from its larger measure of Scripture knowledge, of spiritual intelligence, of faith, enthusiasm, and sacrifice. Where these are wanting, the congregation mocks at all assumptions of pastoral right. Where these are indisputably in evidence questions of status will hardly arise. For a hundred and fifty years it has pleased God to give to our Church a goodly band of evangelists and pastors, powerful in word and doctrine. Many of the first Methodist preachers were remarkable for their large knowledge, deep experience of the things of God, vivid utterance, flaming zeal, and around the specially eloquent men was grouped a great company of effective messengers, and to this day God's graciousness to us in this particular has not ceased. The pulpit has continued to be our cathedral throne, hierarchy, and orders all in one, and the awakening sound-throb has gone forth into all the world. Let us take care of the secret of our strength, for with the pulpit everything rises, with the pulpit everything falls.

Let our ministry be intensely Evangelical. The preacher must keep his hold on the doctrines of sin, guilt, and retribution. He must keep his eyes upon the abounding proofs of the fact of human depravity and peril, taking care also that the eyes of his hearers are fixed upon the same melancholy signs.

We must be equally clear on the unique salvation of the Gospel. The world has still but one Saviour, and the sympathy, merit, and grace of our Master are everlastingly fresh and precious to sinful, striving, sorrowful men and women. Let no charms beguile us out of these doctrines which alone justify our office and calling. Our ministry must be spiritual, commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God, keeping the people face to face with the unseen and the eternal. Scepticism has long assured us that if we only looked around we should find little need to look above, and we fear that the pulpit has somewhat yielded to this advice, insisting less than it used to do upon the vision of eternal things afar off. It is a fatal mistake. It is a feature of God's government that he usually works by indirection. We do not improve things by attempting a direct and immediate change in human institutions, conditions, and relations, but by bringing the spiritual element into the lives of men we ultimately secure all secular ameliorations and enrichments.

If we speak out of the fulness of our heart in love to God and man, we are bound to deeply influence our hearers. No real preacher long lacks a congregation. So far from preaching having lost its attractiveness, there is an intense and almost pathetic demand for men who can set forth the truth with lucidity and feeling. People care little for heartless recitations, for academical discussions, for polished rhetoric; but he who speaks the words that the Holy Ghost teaches, accompanied by the commentary of his own fresh thought and experience, will be followed and loved anywhere and everywhere. It is never so much a question of ability as of frank, vital, loving conversation. Men possessed by love of the truth and of the people will soon discover the ingenuities by which they can make their meaning clear.

Blankenburg Conference.

WE live our childhood over again in our children and grandchildren. We repeat the joy of our first love in seeing others enter into peace with God, and grow into the peace of God, which passeth all understanding. With something of a similar interest we see in another country the beginning and the growth of a conference or convention like those of Barnet-Mildmay and Keswick.

Twelve years ago, among the wooded hills of central Germany, Fräulein v. Weling invited a few Christian friends to confer together on the Word and work, the doctrines and doings, with which they were connected. Each year this has been repeated with increasing attendance, which last week numbered about 300.

The significance and influence of this gathering are far beyond its magnitude. Christians are the salt of the earth and the light of the world, and it cannot be said too often that the children of God who are scattered abroad through a country or the world should meet to strengthen one another's hands in God. The spirit of caste is strong in Germany, and is not absent from even spiritual people. It is a means of grace, therefore, to sit at the same table without respect of persons. In the state of feeling, also, between that country and our own, interchange of personal courtesy and exercise of sympathy in each other's work are important factors that make for peace. Wise and thoughtful men in Germany as in England greatly desire a good understanding between the two nations, and in this, as in every other case, it is the Christians who are the bond of peace.

Rev. F. B. Meyer and Captain and Mrs. Tottenham were present as a deputation from the Keswick Convention; Colonel and Mrs. Macgregor, whom we met here five years ago, were here again; Rev. R. Graves Walker also, who has attended several of the previous Conferences.

The subject for consideration was 1 Cor. i. 30, "Of Him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption."

The meetings for prayer each morning from eight to nine, conducted by Dr. Baedeker, were seasons of real waiting upon God, and gave tone to those which followed. Many subjects of public interest were laid before God, especially the persecuted Stundists and Armenians; India, with its many needs and sorrows; missions and missionaries throughout the world; the Press, that its influence may be controlled and directed by the Spirit of God; and as the days passed, many personal thanksgivings and petitions. The Germans showed that they understand praying briefly and to the point; they almost invariably began with adoration, praise, and thanksgiving.

On Wednesday evening the whole company met at the table of the Lord. Dr. Baedeker presided, and the pastors present graciously and lovingly recognised the wisdom of this arrangement. It was a very hallowed and unformal season of communion with God and one another.

Not the least charm and value of the Conference here as everywhere is the opportunity of meeting old friends, and of making new ones, and of interchanging experiences both of the inner life and of the varied forms of service represented.

Colonel von Knobelsdorff, who ably and wisely conducted many of the meetings, is the leader of the Blue Cross Total Abstinence movement, to which he received the impulse to devote himself at the second of these Conferences. In the teaching, to which Pastors Jellinghaus, Stockmayer, and other German pastors made valuable contributions, different schools of thought found expression, but all meant the same thing—a full-orbed Gospel—Christ the Saviour from the penalty and power, and ultimately from the presence, of sin. For the redemption of 1 Cor. i. 30 was taken to mean the redemption of the body for which we wait (Rom. viii.; Eph. iv. 30; Phil. iii. 21).

The afternoon of Friday was given to accounts of work, chiefly in Germany. This was as cheerful and cheering and useful as any part of the Conference; it was a long meeting, but it ended all too soon. Among others, Miss von Blücher told of the unique work at Berlin which God has given her to do. Captain Tottenham described the rise and progress of the Keswick Convention, and Colonel Macgregor gave a graphic account of three open-air meetings in Ireland, where a great victory has been gained by indomitable courage and perseverance of a few men full of zeal for the Gospel.

There were also special meetings for the Christian Endeavour, White Cross, and other special movements.

Most of the prayers and addresses were in German, and the singing of the old spiritual hymns of Tersteegen, Gerhardt, and others were very striking. A good many of Mr. Sankey's hymns have also been translated, and are sung to their familiar tunes. A goodly number of those present could understand and speak English, but for those who could not the English addresses were interpreted, Fräulein v. Weling performing this service admirably.

At the Lord's Supper £13 was contributed for Armenia, and at the missionary meeting £15. Extreme kindness was shown to the English visitors, and much blessing was realised. We believe that this Convention is destined to be a mighty power in the future throughout that great country.

An Indian Hospital.

WHILST my husband and I are at home on furlough from India, we are trying to raise £1000 by which we may be able to build a hospital for women in the city of Jabalpur, India. In Jabalpur there are 90,000 inhabitants, and there is absolutely no medical aid for the women and girls, who form at least half of the population.

The condition of Indian women is very very sad; confined closely in their badly-ventilated and dreary homes, they are never permitted to see any man outside of the family circle. Husbands and brothers would rather their wives and sisters died than that they should be seen by a male medical practitioner, even though he might alleviate their sufferings and save their lives. Caste customs are very strong in India, and hold the women in a merciless grip.

We hope to build a small hospital-dispensary in which women of all castes may be treated. The Hospital would be under the management of a lady doctor or a trained nurse, who would be welcomed by the women as a true friend. Towards the amount required a little over £600 have been received. Accompanying this work of benevolence would be evangelistic effort. Thus we should be doing what we could to obey our Master's command, "Heal the sick, preach the Gospel."

I write this in the hope that someone may see it who may be able to go out as an honorary medical worker. I shall be happy to give further information to anyone who will communicate with me.

The Congregational School. — This old-established institution in the Caterham Valley, Surrey, records another year of prosperity in the work of educating the sons of ministers. In the list of successful candidates at the Cambridge Local Examination (1896) the names of twenty-three of the boys appear; and never, perhaps, has the School been in a more satisfactory condition—physically, morally, and spiritually. Many of the scholars have decided for Christ, and have united in Church fellowship. The School is dependent upon voluntary contributions, and is eminently worthy of support. While the buildings provide accommodation for 150 scholars, lack of funds prevents it being used for more than 128. This organisation has been a power for good in the past; many old pupils are to-day occupying positions of importance and usefulness, and not a few have been led to consecrate their lives to the work of the ministry. The secretary is Rev. H. Y. Grainger, Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, E.C.

Chinese Evangelisation.

PAINTING SCRIPTURE CARTOONS.

By WILLIAM WILSON, M.B., C.M.,
Of the China Inland Mission.

MANY who take a practical interest in missionary work are already to some extent familiar with the main outline of this enterprise, but in the prospect of very soon returning to China I am thankful for the opportunity here afforded of bringing the subject clearly and fully before the attention of readers of The Christian.

Each succeeding year, while adding to the number of missionaries in China, only reveals more fully the tremendous extent of the work which lies before the Church of Christ, as she seeks to carry out her Master's command to "preach the Gospel to every creature." If the extent of the work which faces us leads us to cry, "Who is sufficient for these things?" we may well reassure our hearts by a backward glance at the wondrous things the Lord hath wrought.

As the century draws to its close it is a mighty stimulus to faith and effort to contrast the present condition of missionary work in China with that which obtained when the century began. At that time there was not a single Protestant missionary in the whole empire with its 300 million human beings. So great were the difficulties, so formidable the opposition, and so few the labourers, that when half the century had passed away, the combined membership of all the Protestant churches did not amount to more than a few hundred. Now, with the close of the century upon us, we may well rejoice in having over 2000 missionaries, more than 3000 Chinese pastors, evangelists, and helpers, and a church roll of close upon 100,000 members.

Such facts forcibly suggest two lines of thought:—

(1) Pastoral Effort.—The pastoral care and oversight of this rapidly-increasing number of Christians, and the Scriptural training of an efficient native ministry, afford ample scope for the life-work of a large number of workers in China.

(2) Evangelising Effort.—The vast area of the country still in the darkness of heathenism, is a perpetual call to evangelising effort for the "regions beyond;" whilst the encouragement the Lord has given is surely a sufficient incentive to make us press forward with redoubled energy and a God-inspired confidence in this ministry of proclaiming "the good tidings of great joy."

If (as is true) five-sixths of the walled cities, and a far larger proportion of unwalled towns, villages, and hamlets, are still without a witness for Christ, it is self-evident that a widespread systematic evangelising work must inevitably bulk largely in our future efforts for China, and we are right in seriously asking ourselves, "How can these efforts be made increasingly efficient toward the accomplishment of the Divine purpose—the clear and intelligible proclamation of the 'unsearchable riches of Christ' to those who still sit in the region and shadow of death."

The present enterprise which I desire to bring before the attention of Christians at home is for the development on an extended scale of plans which, as far as they have been already tried, have met with very marked encouragement. The enterprise consists of three items:—

(1) The publication of a large edition of Scripture cartoons for the use of preachers and evangelists, whether foreign or native, men or women.

These cartoons represent Scripture subjects which have been found by experience most suited for illustrating such fundamental themes as the evangelist must ever deal with in addressing those utterly ignorant of the truth.

They have been designed by a Chinese artist, and being thus free from all foreign elements in style and treatment, possess a very great advantage over English pictures, which from their very nature too often distract the attention from, instead of concentrating it on, the theme of the preacher.

(2) The preparation of a far larger edition of small colour prints, which are fac-simile reproductions of the preaching cartoons, and will thus be available for sale to any of the hearers who have had their interest aroused by the preacher's words as illustrated by the cartoons.

(3) The printing of a series of Chinese Gospel tracts based upon and explanatory of the subjects represented in the cartoons and colour prints.

It is the common testimony of those who have employed these pictures that the preacher thereby secures a far more quiet and attentive audience than is otherwise possible, whilst the eye assists the ear in leading the mind to an intelligible grasp of the truth.

This whole scheme is now in a very forward condition.

(1) The Colour Prints.—Of these, 130,000 have been printed and delivered in Shanghai, and only wait the arrival of the large preaching cartoons. The cost of the entire series of wood blocks necessary for the production of these prints having been defrayed by one interested in China, it is possible to sell the prints at such a price as to place them within the easy reach of even the poorest in that land.

(2) The Chinese Tracts.—The preparation of these has been entrusted to one specially qualified for such work, and will soon be accomplished, and the tracts printed in China.

(3) The Preaching Cartoons.—Of these several thousand have just been printed in lithographic outline, and are now ready for the hand colouring; and when this is completed, they will be forwarded to China. The colouring of a large number has already been promised.

It is not needful for me to make any appeal for financial help. Most of the money needed to start the enterprise has been freely subscribed, and as the cartoons and prints will be sold at a price sufficient to cover the cost of production, the scheme will be subsequently self-sustaining, and further editions will be independent of outside help. The present appeal is not for money, but for the loving consecration of the time and talents of Christians at home, who by undertaking the colouring of these outline cartoons will complete the scheme which is eagerly looked forward to by many workers among the millions of China.

SUMMARY.

(1) The Chinese mind is peculiarly fitted for receiving instruction through the eye.

(2) Hence the value of Scripture pictures in missionary work in China.

(3) Among Chinese Christians such pictures as are obtainable in England are in the main suitable.

(4) But among the heathen (and consequently in evangelising work) English pictures are worse than useless (for reasons see "Eye-Gate," chap. iv.).

(5) A plan has recently been tried of employing a Chinese artist to design and execute Scripture pictures in complete accordance with native art and in keeping with Chinese habits and customs.

(6) These have been employed with very great encouragement by an increasing number of missionaries.

(7) But being laboriously drawn and painted by a single artist the supply cannot possibly meet the demand.

(8) 9000 such pictures (preaching cartoons) are now being prepared in England as fac-simile reproductions of three of the originals.

(9) These, on delivery at Shanghai, will be obtainable at a low price by any missionary, European or native, of any of the Protestant missionary societies.

(10) These cartoons measure 5ft. by 3ft., and each cartoon comprises six separate scenes.

(11) They are being printed on calico in lithographic outline to be subsequently coloured by hand (water colour).

(12) They thus combine strength, lightness, and portability, while they remain entirely Chinese in appearance, essentials for open-air and itinerating work, unattainable if printed in colour.

(13) This hand colouring is very easy to do, in consequence of the smooth surface specially imparted to the calico.

(14) A guide as to the colouring is to be found in the corresponding small colour prints as they appear in "Eye-Gate."

(15) This arrangement of colours should be faithfully adhered to, or the cartoons will lose in value in the eyes of the Chinese from what appear to them to be incongruities.

(16) The average time required for colouring one complete cartoon is from three to four hours.

(17) It is needless to remind our friends that the Chinese, being an artistic people, we ought not to send to their land anything suggestive of want of carefulness in execution.

Up to the present date promises have been received for the colouring of over 2000 cartoons. These offers have come from such organisations as "Time and Talents," "Missionary Helpers Unions," "Painting Bands," etc., where each member has kindly offered to paint one, two, five, and up to twenty cartoons.

Ladies sympathising with the effort could volunteer to initiate this movement in their own neighbourhoods, acting as local secretaries. Each such local secretary should seek to interest ten or more of her friends to unite together as a "Painting Band." Each member, according to her leisure, could undertake to colour a variable number of these cartoons (say, two, five, ten, or more). In this way the entire edition would soon be ready for use in China, and the whole be accomplished with ease and pleasure by the friends at home, whilst their value to workers abroad it would be difficult to exaggerate.

Anyone desiring further information as to the scheme generally will find it in a book recently published, entitled "Eye-Gate: or Native Art in the Evangelisation of China," which can be obtained (post free, 2s.) from Messrs. S. W. Partridge and Co., Paternoster-row, London, or through any bookseller. Any wishing special information with a view to possibly helping in this painting scheme can obtain a printed circular from Dr. Wilson (of China), 22, Greenside, Kendal. The word 'cartoon" written on the envelope will ensure correspondence being immediately attended to, should Dr. Wilson be absent from home.

The late Miss E. S. Elliott.

THE esteemed lady whose portrait we give to-day, Emily Steele Elliott, was born at Brighton in 1836. She was the first child of her father, Rev. Edward Bishop Elliott, by his second marriage. Her venerable mother, daughter of Sir Richard Steele, Bart., still survives. Growing up in an intellectual atmosphere, and accustomed to lean upon her father (the learned author of the "Horæ Apocalypticæ") for guidance and mental culture, Emily Elliott early developed great literary ability. She was still in the schoolroom when her father became incumbent of St. Mark's, Brighton. A little later she was entering, with all the zest and enthusiasm of her girlhood's nature, into the varied work which opened to her. Sunday-school and Bible-classes, district and sick visiting, as well as Christian social intercourse, filled her life with varied interests, and whatever she undertook always succeeded.

Perhaps one of the most observable features of her work was the steadfastness with which any plan once undertaken was persistently carried out; no friendship or spiritual link was ever allowed to drop. Her talents were consecrated; her whole life was for eternity. Each fresh friend or acquaintance must be influenced for Christ. Opportunities of doing good were investments courted, not shirked. Thus, amid the favourable circumstances of her position as a clergyman's daughter, her bright, energetic nature found abundant scope for usefulness.

Simultaneously with the outward life at Brighton, her work as a writer grew into importance. She early found out how to use her pen, and became, while quite young, an influential author. Health difficulties after a time prevented many activities in which she once rejoiced, but such was her power of mind and energy of character, that she exercised a wider influence and achieved greater results from her sofa than the vast majority who have no such limitation. Her keen sense of humour and Irish sparkle combined very happily with deeply spiritual earnestness; and, whether amongst the rich or the poor, formed a large and ever-growing circle of those who became dear to her, and to whom she was dear.

The chapter of her life at Brighton closed with the death of her beloved father in 1875. Early in 1876, finding that sea air disagreed with her, she removed to Mildmay Park, leaving behind her a record of work bravely done, and already yielding blessed harvest results. At Mildmay she lived next door to the saintly Mrs. Pennefather, and held loving and intimate intercourse with her until death severed the bond.

Fresh work in the vineyard opened to her. From small beginnings there grew what is now well known as "The Christmas Letter Mission," with its hundred thousands of annual letters distributed in every quarter of the globe. She was not only secretary; she was the living centre and soul of the whole great organisation, writing all the letters herself, and arranging with marvellous power its every detail.

Her deep Bible study fed her own soul, and was the inspiration of all that she wrote. Day by day the special copy of the sacred volume which she used became filled and interleaved with notes and illustrations culled from many sources—for she was a great reader—and fresh thoughts, as well as old ones freshly dressed, seemed to crowd upon her as she drank deeply from the heavenly fountain of all true knowledge. A few years ago she added to her other works a mission district and mothers' meeting in the parish of St. Jude's, at the request of Rev. D. B. Hankin. She rapidly endeared herself to the poor women who crowded to hear her and who rested on her loving words and sympathy.

One beautiful day last June she arranged for a large party of "mothers" to go down to Brighton for a long day at the seaside. Every detail of the arrangement was perfectly planned, and by the kind co-operation of friends at Brighton, the expedition was a perfect success. In the evening the "mothers" gathered for tea in the St. Mary's Hall gardens, and were met by members of the old Bible-class Miss Elliott had taught in her girlhood, together with sister-workers who had been associated with her early days, and new friends who surrounded her with tokens of kindly sympathy, as she passed from one to another in her garden chair. It was a day never to be forgotten. But perhaps it was too much for her; she seemed to flag afterwards, and a short stay at Cromer appeared to do harm rather than good.

She returned hastily to town, determined to undergo an operation, which one of her doctors had advised, and which it was hoped would restore her to health and strength. She had no fear. "Think 'what it will be to be there' if I am taken; and if, as I expect, I recover, to be able to go in and out like others and see the poor and the sick!" Her youngest sister, Mrs. Monro, was with her during the last weeks and found her sanguine expectations infectious. Never was there a more cloudless outlook, or more firm grasp of the "strength of our salvation" than on the morning of August 3, her last day here upon earth. Her sister's arms were around her as she stepped firmly to the room where the doctors were waiting for her. "Why should I fear?" she said, as she paused on the threshold and the last kisses were exchanged, "I am more than conqueror through Christ." Half a minute later she was sleeping, and she awoke in the presence of the King.

Her earthly remains were laid to rest in the family vault at Hove Churchyard, Brighton; exquisite flowers and wreaths hid the coffin from view and spoke the Resurrection Message, while loving friends and relations gathered round, and left her sleeping there with dear ones gone before, "till the morning break and the shadows flee away."

Union in Christian Work.

A UNITED demonstration of Christian workers, held at Peckham on Sunday last, proved an abundant success. Although the weather was cold and inclined to rain, the united prayer-meeting in the open air at seven o'clock in the morning was very largely attended. There was much earnest waiting upon God for his blessing to rest upon the day's proceedings; very many brethren took part, and all felt impressed by the sense of God's presence.

At three p.m. different large contingents of Christian missions and workers assembled at the appointed places, but as the weather, although finer, appeared to be likely to be unpropitious, it was decided to hold the meeting in the Peckham Public Hall. This was crowded to its utmost capacity with an earnest and deeply-interested audience.

Representatives of all or nearly all the Christian churches and missions in the neighbourhood were present, and the singing and speaking touched the hearts of many. It was impossible to repress the enthusiasm evoked by every reference to the objects of the movement, viz., to promote the united effort of all Christian men and women to reach the dense masses of men and women who seldom hear the Gospel in our churches.

The addresses delivered by the chairman (Mr. A. Holness), and by Messrs. Argent, Clarkson, Middleton, Kingsbury, Martin, Cook, Floyd, and others, were listened to with the deepest interest. Few who were present will ever forget the tender and deeply pathetic story told by one who has but very recently been marvellously called from a life of sin to serve the Lord.

The friends who have arranged this assembly of Christians feel grateful to God for the earnest expressions of sympathy received from Rev. John W. Ewing, Pastors Frank Smith and W. James, and from many other Christian ministers and workers in the neighbourhood. It is to be hoped that the movement towards union and co-operation thus auspiciously begun in the South of London will grow and extend to other parts of the Metropolis. The first real step to the effectual reaching of the neglected masses will be a closer coming together of the different sections of the one Church of Christ.

Christian Table Talk.

IT fell to my lot to spend a week this summer in a kind of pension in the heart of Germany—Luther's country—where that beloved servant of God, Dr. Baedeker, and a few other devoted Christians were staying. We took our meals together, and I fear were rather blameworthy in plying our friend with questions, the answering of which interfered considerably with his use of knife and fork.

I have a little répertoire of incidents and reminiscences which I let off with judicious care, when it was altogether too bad to keep him longer fasting; but as I review those meals, I am truly penitent, and can only make amends by passing on a few of the good things that so charmed us. They will at least show how interesting Christian Table Talk may be made.

As everyone knows, Dr. Baedeker is an enthusiast in Bible distribution, and to hear him speak made one feel that hardly any work in Russia, Siberia, or Armenia is comparable to this. There is great respect for the Bible in Russia, and the Government transports his copies of the Scriptures free of charge. On one occasion, when a Siberian merchant knew that the huge packages on board his river steamers contained Bibles for prisoners, he refused to take any freightage money, and on Dr. Baedeker kissing him, according to German custom, said, "This is a new country, and we want it governed by this Book."

In the Caucasus the Doctor was staying at a Tartar village, taking some of the native soup, and a boy came up and squeezed a piece of a pomegranate into it, refusing payment because two years before Dr. Baedeker had given him a Scripture portion, which had been a priceless treasure. Our friend has visited, with the permission of the Russian Government, more than once, all the prisons of Siberia, distributing New Testaments to the inmates, which have been eagerly welcomed, and then taken by them at the expiry of their sentence to all parts of the country. What may not be the harvest of this scattered seed!

On one occasion he travelled four days to the extreme limits of the Caucasus, to visit a single individual, who had, with his family, been banished thither for his religious convictions. Though travelling amid wild Tartars, the Doctor was unmolested, and when his guide lost his way was marvellously guided to his destination. Then a brief two hours with his friend, before hurrying away, lest the police should get on his track and interfere with him. On this occasion, he came to the foot of Mount Ararat, where he says fifty nationalities are gathered, living in the most primitive way. He glowed as he told us of the music of the camel bells and the archaic customs of the people. It was news to hear that the camel is a very musical creature fond of his harmonious bells.

Once, in the midst of a Siberian forest, his carriage broke down in the middle of the night, but he was kept in perfect peace, knowing that as he was on his Father's business, God would surely deliver him; and as he lifted up his heart in simple trust, the tinkle of bells announced the coming of unexpected help. Though he has travelled thousands of miles in Siberia, he has never heard the howl of wolves on his track. He looks to the Lord to supply all his need, keep his body in health, and help him in special emergencies. Once when his permit to visit prisons, together with 1000 roubles, were stolen from his pocket amid a crowd in a railway station, all his losses were made good within twenty-four hours through the gracious interposition of God.

The Russian peasants have immense respect for their priests, but they nicely distinguish between the priest and the man. If they find a priest drunk on the roadside, they have been known carefully to remove the dress of the priest and give the man a sound thrashing.

A peasant, having murdered another, was asked by the judge why he did it. "He had bread and meat, and I was hungry," was the reply. "What did you do with the meat, did you eat it?" The man drew himself up to his full height, and said: "Do you take me for a heathen? It was Lent. Of course I didn't eat the meat, I ate the bread only."

It is wonderful how eager the Stundists are to spread the simple Gospel. They will travel from village to village, their only luggage a wooden spoon to help themselves from the common family dish, and a comb! They will sit to a meal with a family, and at the close, say, "Have you seen this Book? Do you know that the God of Heaven loves sinners?" Then the simple-hearted evangelist will open the Scriptures, and begin to read. Sometimes he will read for hours.

Dr. Baedeker gave some graphic descriptions of the Asiatic villages, to which the Stundists and others are banished; and which are generally situated in the wildest and most inaccessible places. Once he met a young man on a steamer, on the way to his assigned place of banishment; he was a student, and suspected, politically or socially—and arrested; but the girl to whom he was engaged had married him, that she might share his lot. It was, indeed, a terrible one, so hard the struggle to extract bread from that thankless soil; and all the harder because he was of gentle birth. But neither of them flinched, because of their love to the Word of God.

One day we were speaking of the necessity of claiming our privileges in Christ; and Dr. Baedeker told a story of a stonebreaker he had known in Australia, who suddenly came into a great estate in England. He had to borrow money to come over to it. The lawyer handed him a bundle of parchments, saying, "It's all there." He took them, and started for his property: but was so pleased with the lodge at the entrance to the park, that he went no further. And when an old friend came to see him, contented himself with showing the bundle of parchments, saying, "It's all there, but I have not been to see it."

It was pleasant to hear our brother speak of the godly men he has met, and known intimately: the venerable Robert Chapman, sparkling with proverbs and questions from Scripture; George Müller, whose name it is enough to mention; Dr. Nevius, with whom he spent the last day of his life, talking with him of his forty years' life and work in China; the beloved Reginald Radcliffe, with whom he was wont to hold evangelistic meetings in Germany and Russia; Grant, of Arndilly; and Brownlow North—giants of the past generation.

One day we had a round of Bible conundrums, such as these, which I pass on. Nuts to crack! "Why did the Woman of Sychar leave her water-pot?" "How many rods did Moses make use of?" "Why did Abner die as a fool?" "Why did the ark rest on the seventeenth day of the sixth month?" "Why does God call Himself the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and say 'This is my name for ever'?" Questions which had already puzzled me when put to me, were equally perplexing to the tableful.

Dr. Baedeker has great faith in the power of prayer, and often speaks of the comfort it has given him in hours of danger or crisis to realise that many were praying for him. A bedridden saint wrote to him once, on his return from a long journey in Siberia, and said, "I have only one hand, but I carried you in that hand right through Siberia," referring to the perseverance and tenacity of her faithful intercessions on his behalf.

Visiting another in Stockholm, he greatly encouraged her by quoting the words of the Apostle, "Much rather those members of the body which seem to be more feeble are necessary;" and led her to enter into a ministry of prayer on his behalf. Shortly after his visit she was raised to perfect health.

Nothing but this could account for the marvellous interpositions of God on his behalf. The Minister of State who gave him his permission to visit the prisons was first interested in a Bible-reading he was holding in a drawing-room in St. Petersburg; he met another, who was able to continue that permission, on a steamer, and, entering into conversation with him, they became close friends, just a month before he was suddenly summoned to hold office. He has become a warm friend of the superintendent of the great prison at Moscow, with its 7000 inmates, and speaks very highly of the tender and firm administration of the present governor. The Doctor says, "Governors of prisons should be fathers."

Our friend believes that the anti-Christian power is to arise in the East of Europe, and thinks that there are already many symptoms that it will be found in the Turkish Empire.

A sceptic till he was forty-three, Dr. Baedeker has made marvellous use of the thirty-one years of Christian service, crowding into them several lives, and is still hale and hearty, the life and soul of any party he enters, and wearing everywhere his Master's livery, so that from his look and speech you cannot doubt to whom he belongs.

It is so beautiful, also, to notice how his beloved wife completes him; has always ready any explanation that is needed to bring into relief the points of the narratives, or to say for him what he modestly keeps in the background.

These are very incomplete jottings. It would have been well worth while to have been more particular. But it only occurred to me to note these items down when most of our happy days had fled. These are recorded, however, to show what a charm we may throw into our conversation, if we pay more attention to it, and in this way also strive to eat and drink for the glory of God.

A Talk by the Sea-side.

NO doubt many of the fortunate young people who are reading these lines have been or are still at the sea-side. For the time being lessons have been put away and forgotten, while bathing, boating, fishing, etc., have occupied their place. Some of the most important lessons of life, however, are not learnt from school-books, but from the wonderful book of nature and scenes of daily life ever before us. In the midst of our holiday-time, God, the Great Teacher, may be teaching us many lessons if our eyes are open to read them and our hearts to receive them.

Many of us this past month have been gazing across the sea and watching with pleasure the many different kinds of boats and vessels journeying on pleasure, duty, or business over the boundless sea! Let us listen to the lessons they teach and see in what manner we resemble them.

1. We, like them, have embarked on the ocean of life.—We sing sometimes, "We are out on the ocean sailing," and it is quite true, we have each started from the shore of time and are speeding onwards.

2. We are bound for somewhere.—What should we think of a boatman or sailor who did not know to what place his boat was bound, or an ocean-liner drifting on the wide ocean with no journey's end in view? Where is your bark bound for? There are only two ports to sail to in the journey of life. Are you "bound for the land of the pure and the holy"? Remember your bark is steering for somewhere. Where? Just stop and answer this question.

3. We shall encounter storm and sunshine, strong currents and dangerous rocks.—It is not all fair sailing. Never has a ship yet sailed without dangers to encounter; never has the journey on the ocean of life been taken without its temptations and trials: unfortunate the boat which has no haven to flee to, and the life which has no refuge in the time of storm. Every boy or girl has his or her temptations, trials, and daily difficulties to deal with, in school or in the home. Remember, "the Lord hath his way in the storm" (Nahum), and that we have only, like the storm-tossed mariner, to put up the cry of distress, and the storm will be made a calm and the waves stilled, or the Lord will bring us into a haven of rest (Psalm cvii.).

How many young lives that started fair and beautiful in the sunshine have become shipwrecked, and lost everything in this world and the next too, because they have tried to weather the storms alone, and steer their own bark unmindful of the dangerous rocks that lay hidden around them (1 Timothy). Let us remember, "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith (1 John), faith in our Redeemer, Jesus, the Son of God, who "was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin" (Heb. iv.).

Now, there are a great many different sorts of boats, and yet they might be divided into three classes:—

1. Rowing boats.—These depend upon exertion for their progress; drop the oars and the boat merely drifts. There are some people, little as well as big, who make up their minds to start for heaven, but they mean to get there by their own good works. They make resolutions, perhaps on New Year's Day or on birthdays, or after having a good time at the sea-side, to give up bad habits and be obedient, industrious, unselfish, etc., and it answers very well until they get tired of trying, which I am afraid is very soon, for they are not strong enough to row against the current of temptation. Do not forget that faith in Jesus comes before good works, and that we are saved from sin by grace, through faith, not of works (Eph. ii.); the works follow after (James ii.).

2. Sailing-boats.—These boats make beautiful progress so long as there is plenty of wind, and it is blowing in the right direction, but sometimes the wind blows in the wrong direction, or else blows very little at all. We get an example of it in the narration of Paul's journey to Rome (Acts xxvii.), which verses speak of the wind. Do you know any boy or girl who is carried along by a wind called influence? When they are amongst those who seek to follow Christ they try to do the same, when they get perhaps with companions who find the greatest pleasure and attraction in things of this world they follow them; when there is a great crowd around the children's service on the beach at the seaside they join in it, but when their companions flock in greater numbers round the niggers, clowns, etc., they follow them there. Let such remember that "A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways" (James).

3. Steamboats.—Swiftly they glide along, independent of wind or tide. What is the secret? We see neither oars nor sails. There is a power within that impels them forward. Dear boys and girls, unless we have the power within us, are born again of God's Holy Spirit, and have Christ dwelling in us through his holy Spirit, we shall never reach the desired haven or stem the world's tide. Will you let God's Spirit work in you and through you to-day, and trust your bark on the ocean of life to the great Pilot and Captain of your salvation, Jesus Christ?

The Smallest Share the Best Share.

Some young girls were out in the fields gathering the early wild strawberries that grew abundantly there.

Each had her own little basket or bucket, and all were soon picking busily, now and again throwing a gay word across to each other, or stopping to eat a sweet red berry to see how good and ripe it was.

But Mary Fielding, it was soon noticed, stopped filling her own basket every now and then, and stepped to the side of a younger girl to help her. Whenever one of these smaller ones got discouraged, it seemed as if she looked up at Mary, and always found her ready to notice her.

"Mary," said one of her own particular friends, "if you stop to find the nicest places for all the younger ones, you won't get your share of berries. They'll get the best ones, and the most."

"My share will be what is left," said Mary. "I'll get enough, never fear. Sometimes the smallest share is the best share. I can't bear to see the little girls troubled and not help them."

Was not this a sweet spirit? A great deal is heard in common talk about one's share, and few perhaps are willing to "take what is left," as Mary was. But while her share of the berries may have been smaller than that of the rest, whose share of real happiness was largest, think you? Would not Mary's share last after the berries were eaten?

"The Flower of Good Temper."

"There is a flower in the house which I wish my little girl would go a-Maying for," said a father once to his daughter, who was cross and vexed because she could not go out on account of the rain. "But we've no house-flowers," she replied; "that is the reason I want to go out." "Yes," said the father, "there is one. It has the brightest colours and the sweetest smell. It is a favourite flower of mine, for it is not only beautiful in itself, but it makes those who have it beautiful, too."

"Then, do tell me; what is it, father?" asked the child. "It is the flower of Good Temper," said her father. "I am sure it grows in this house."

Ashamed of herself, little Annie asked God to forgive her for her crossness; and when her father came home that night she put a great bunch of Good Temper into his arms.—Home Words.

Morning or Evening.

Jesus, bless Thy little child,
Make me gentle, pure, and mild;
Let angels guard me day and night,
Teach me to know and love the right;
Let my sins be all forgiven,
And fit me for a home in heaven. Amen.

Uncle Tom.

An Appeal from Turkey.

The following letter has been addressed by the writer, who is president of the American College at Harpoot, to Mrs. Rendel Harris. We hope it will evoke a ready and hearty response.

THERE are left in Egin about 700 families of Christians. They have no fields or gardens from which they can get a living, but are wholly dependent upon business or trades. All business has been at a standstill since the massacre, and the people are no longer allowed to go to Constantinople and work there as formerly.

From these causes their need is likely to be as great this winter as it was last, and they are now calling for £1000 to buy wheat while it is cheap, so that they may lay in a store to feed the people during the coming winter. Unless they can get started in some business they will be in need of alms continually, for the city is destitute of resources.

They call for £3000 to purchase looms (made by carpenters there), thread from Manchester, and pay their weavers for the work of weaving until the cloth can be sold. This capital would be turned over and over again, and our experience in Arabkir shows that such an industry is of the greatest value in building up a ruined city. It is possible that Manchester firms might be induced to donate the thread, Nos. 16 and 20 white, and No. 20 red-unbleached.

I am fully persuaded that Egin needs to have some such industry started there. I think they could start it with less money—say, £2000. But I do not feel equal to the care of another such business responsibility. I have carried all sorts of enterprises scattered over this wide field for the last two years because the necessity was upon me; but I do not think I ought to continue to do so.

My school duties are more exacting, owing to the loss of many teachers. I cannot visit these enterprises frequently, and without doing so it is very difficult to carry them on well. I believe such an undertaking requires some one on the ground to watch it. I will gladly do all I can to help, but I shrink from assuming further responsibilities.

I have a pathetic appeal from the pastor. In it he says: "I called our people together after service on Sunday and said to them, 'Many of these poor people have not eaten butter or meat for a year. Their food has been only bread, morning, noon, and night. Now let us give them meat.' They collected enough there to give meat to a hundred families, 'the poorest of the poor.' 'So,' he says, 'we try to help ourselves according to our ability.'"

In regard to the Malatia orphans, it is true that no adequate provision has yet been made for them. There are 1883 orphans and half-orphans there. If we take out the half-orphans there are still many hundreds of fatherless and motherless ones to be cared for. I believe we now care for less than one hundred. There is really need of a good man to reside in Malatia, superintend the care of orphans, and set in motion operations which will help the people to earn their own living, especially the widows. I believe the most practicable industries there are weaving native cloth (white, not the striped cloth of Arabkir and Egin, which is more costly), carpet-making, and embroideries.

The Jews and Palestine.

ENCOURAGED by the words of the prophets, echoed in many venerable prayers in the synagogue service, religious Jews throughout the world have from time to time come under the spell of a strong desire to return to the land of their fathers, and to assist in the rebuilding of Zion. Now and again these aspirations have acquired a widespread influence; but there have always been among the ancient people many who have preferred the lands of the Dispersion to the difficulties and troubles that may be expected to attend anything like the founding of a Jewish State. The latest national movement in Jewry is known as Zionism, and during the closing days of August a congress under its auspices was held in the city of Basle, Switzerland.

Writing on the subject in The Times, in answer to a series of criticisms by Mr. Oswald John Simon, Dr. Gaster, a London rabbi, says: "The number of Zionists with a definite aim before their eyes has grown rapidly. They are recruited from among the young; the enthusiasts on the Continent, university professors and students, scholars and workmen, are joining hand. They belong almost exclusively to the orthodox, and embrace the vast majority of Jews. The Bible and the old Prayer-book are the text, and this agitation is merely the practical commentary." Dr. Gaster further says: "The whole orthodox and realistic Jewry, which does not volatilise the words of the prophets, and does not look upon Divine promises as so many spiritual symbols to be interpreted away according to each one's fancy, is now assembled in spirit at the congress, and watches its deliberations with sympathy and elevated hope."

The congress was convened by Dr. Herzl, of Vienna, who proposes that a limited liability company, with a huge capital, shall be formed, to buy Palestine from the Turks and generally develop his scheme. Besides acquiring the new country and opening up its resources, the company would take over abandoned properties and vested interests that the immigrants would leave behind them in the old countries, and negotiate their sale to others. In the event of wealthy Jewish capitalists being unwilling to find the funds for such a scheme, the money would have to be raised without their help. It is suggested that public subscriptions should be invited from Jews and others, who would receive, in return, interest-bearing shares in the undertaking.

It by no means follows that all Jews who entertain nationalist hopes and ambitions are friendly to Dr. Herzl's scheme. In fact, many such present unqualified opposition, holding that it will be by miraculous measures on the part of God, rather than by political negotiations on the part of the Jews, that the long-expected restoration will be effected. In the language of The Daily Chronicle special correspondent, they "fail to see how the Messianic prophecies of the Bible are going to be fulfilled by the launching of a joint-stock enterprise. They mistrust the scheme because it is so material, and the men who are undertaking it because they, too, are materialists. They say that whenever the time does come for the fulfilment of prophecy God will choose more suitable agents than a Herzl and a Nordau to carry out his plans, and there will be no necessity to call in the assistance of the Stock Exchange."

Though this movement lacks the patronage of influential British Jews, who enjoy civil and religious liberties, it has assuredly secured a warm place in the hearts of persecuted Hebrews in Continental lands. With these, whose life is one of suffering and disability, Palestine is still the Land of Promise, in a sense beyond that of ancient history; the promise not only lives in the past, but it looks to the future. Many Christians share the same hope that God will again give Israel her old place; in fact, that He will yet comfort Zion and all her waste places, making her wilderness like Eden, and her desert like the Garden of the Lord.

Present Needs in Armenia.

LETTERS received from Asia Minor, from the devoted band of American missionaries now working there, all tell much the same story; the late awful events have in every way added to their work. They are compelled to leave the primary duties of spiritual help in order to institute industrial work, to gather in and care for the orphans, and to tend the sick. Already terribly overstrained by years of horror and anxiety, they have now to face fresh exhausting branches of work. Yet these things cannot be neglected.

A missionary from Oorfa writes:—"If I had no care of the industrial department, I should yet be overburdened with my own lines of missionary work. I long to be teaching. I am pained that I cannot call on the sick and dying widows—some from my own embroidery department, slowly passing away from us in consumption. They send pleading for us, and it seems so cruel not to go. Yet I must not do less in oversight of this work, on which literally the food of thousands depends."

There comes this message from Sivas:—"Can you send me a thoroughly consecrated and trained young woman, willing to labour amongst the sick and wretched, where there is no hospital, no Christian doctor, no knowledge of the laws of health among the people? We need to have some of our widows instructed, so that they can be sent into destitute homes to help in caring for the sick. We shall require a nurse to look after the sick in our orphanages. We have no nice work among the rich in comfortable homes to offer. It is practical work among the miserable. If you have such a worker she will find a warm welcome amongst us.'

From Marash a missionary writes:—"We need first of all a lady to assist in our orphanage work. This work has developed and is growing beyond my strength. I have other duties which prevent me from giving my whole attention to the orphans, and now that we have over 200 orphans in five different orphanages I am quite unable to do all that should be done for them. We should indeed be very glad of two assistants, one of whom, besides giving some aid in the orphanage work, could devote a part of her time to working up an embroidery department among the women. There is a kind of embroidery peculiar to Marash."

From Broussa we hear:—"The one department that lags is the industrial department. We feel that it is highly important to be able to teach the girls a variety of trades, such as weaving, machine-knitting, sewing, etc.; but a competent woman to instruct, and the means to purchase the necessary machines and materials, are not forthcoming."

We believe there are many men and women amongst us who are consecrated to the service of the Lord and to that of his Church, and are open to the call of a life of devotion to his suffering ones in Armenia. We do not claim that all who have suffered have been martyrs; yet there have been a large number of well-attested instances in which men, women, and children have borne death and torture rather than deny their Lord. Surely, no nation has a stronger claim upon the sympathies of the Church, and no work is more honourable in its truest sense than this of ministering to those who have lost everything for His sake. Any whose hearts God shall touch are invited to apply to this office, where each offer will be carefully considered. Funds are needed; and where there is not the ability to help in person it is earnestly hoped that something may be sent towards helping those who can.

G. Crosfield,
Hon. Sec. of "Friends of Armenia."

Simla.—Mr. Bernard Herklots, who is labouring in India as a children's missioner in connection with the Children's Special Service Mission, is to hold a series of meetings for young people in Simla, commencing about September 10 or 15. He asks for much prayer that an effectual door may be opened, and that in that gay and worldly place many may be won for Christ. Mr. Herklots has been greatly blessed in his work amongst the young in Darjeeling, Mussoorie, and other places.

The Livingstonia Mission.

By Rev. DONALD FRASER.

I HAVE lately concluded a six weeks' tour which is unique in the history of the Mission. For six successive Sundays I administered baptism and dispensed the communion at the stations of Ngoniland and Bandawé. Some two hundred and thirty-nine were baptized, of whom one hundred and fifty-nine were adults. These figures are significant. They tell of a great triumph of Christ's gospel. The Livingstonia Mission is not twenty-two years old; but in these six weeks more souls were baptized than in the first twenty years of the work. And this is but the beginning of greater things to come. These are signal tokens of God's presence among us.

The ingathering has come largely through God's blessing on the native teachers. They are the evangelists of their own people. They are ignorant, perhaps; a simple sum in arithmetic would puzzle them. They know but one Book. But they have met God, and know where to find Him.

This seems to be the chief work that lies before us missionaries—to raise up a large company of God-like men, full of the Holy Ghost, skilled evangelists to gather in the people for Christ.

That the awakening which has now begun in Ngoniland is genuine is proved by the men whom it has affected. At Ekwendeni the young chief was baptized. For the sake of Christ he has put away six wives, thereby risking his authority and position before they were yet established. And with him came his old mother and his little daughter. At Elangeni the chief's eldest son—a man once with a violent and murderous temper, now quiet and gentle—was received into the church. He, too, has put away six wives, and kept his first, though she was only a slave-girl. But even more notable have been some of the converts from among the slaves. In the church they sit down on equal footing with their masters—all bond-slaves of the Lord Jesus.

Ten years ago Dr. Elmslie was burying his medicines under the floor of a Njuyu house, preparing for sudden flight, while the warriors camped in the valley below. To-day we sit on the verandah of the same house, talking from morning till night with those who are seeking Christ. Ten years ago three boys were secretly coming in the darkness to be taught. Last month five hundred spoke with us, asking, many of them ignorantly enough, to be openly received as believers. Eight years ago there were only three catechumens; to-day there are four hundred.

As is usual in times of religious awakening, feelings are finding expression in song. The Ngoni are not a very musical people. But now a new music and a new poetry are being born among them. Hymns are being composed and translated by the teachers themselves, and set to new native airs. Even the village chants and rounds are being sung to precepts of the white man's teaching. I have watched the carriers on my long tour, and never once saw them begin a meal till they had asked a blessing aloud. Yet only two of the twenty-four are baptized Christians. In the evening, when we were tired with a long day's march, and sat down to wait for the stragglers, I have seen one take out his Testament, and while the others gathered round, read over to them some story from the Gospels. Every night I went to sleep to the sound of hymn-singing and Bible-reading round the camp fires.

The church is now becoming a corporate body, with an organism and a power of its own. Last month seven elders were elected and ordained. Their choice was manifestly guided by God, for better men could scarcely have been selected. Already, in their care for the church, they have begun to show that they feel the responsibility of their office. At all the stations the Christians have of their own accord met and pronounced against the drinking of beer. They see that drunkenness has been followed by killing, uncleanness, and foolish talking, and that to raise the beer crop the whole country is being devastated. So they have agreed together and said, "We will neither make beer nor drink it."

But you must not think that the Ngoni are now a Christian people. Far otherwise. All this has scarcely reached more than one-sixth of the northern Ngoni. Some of the chiefs still send out their raiding parties. There are great stretches of country into which we have not once entered. There are large groups of villages where no school has ever been, and where perhaps the sound of the Gospel has never once been heard. To bring these in, the Church at home and we out here have given our lives, that the Lord's coming may be hastened.—F. C. Monthly.

Oxford Letter.

[By Our Own Correspondent.]

THE Oxford and District Christian Endeavour Union held its summer convention on Thursday at Witney, and in spite of threatening weather there were a large number of representatives present. Rev. W. Downing presided at the afternoon session, and reminded the gathering that while the English people had given to the world the Young Men's Christian Association, the Americans who had taken up that work among the young men very enthusiastically had amply repaid us by giving us the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour. He rejoiced that by it the difficulty of dealing with their young people, of cementing them to the Church, and of finding them spheres of service had been happily solved. What they wanted was a Society of Christian Endeavour for adults, so many of whom seemed to be taking their ease. Rev. E. J. Hammond read an instructive paper on "Some Points of Strength and Weakness in Christian Endeavour." After tea an open-air meeting was held, and addressed by Rev. J. Dann. The evening meeting was held in the Primitive Methodist Chapel, which was crowded in every part. The president of the Union gave an address on "Whole-hearted Consecration." The other subjects discussed were "Bible Study," "Character Building," and "Evangelistic Work in the Villages." It was felt that very helpful and inspiriting meetings had been held, and the members separated full of hope and encouragement for their new year's work.

Death has been busy in Oxford during the week. Rev. George Marshall, Hon. Canon of Christchurch, much beloved for his kindly disposition, will be missed by a large circle of friends; and the removal of the Rev. Washbourne West leaves a gap at Lincoln College, where he was the Senior Fellow. It was with real grief also that Oxford friends of Mr. Ernest Roxburgh Balfour heard of his death in Scotland on Friday last. It is only a few weeks since he was among us in the full vigour of life; his tall figure and bright genial manners will be much missed. In the case of the Fellow of Lincoln it was the gathering of a ripe sheaf; in the case of young Balfour it was the cutting down of a stalwart tree.

The Oxford Diocesan Church Army Mission van is doing excellent work in the surrounding districts. Rev. H. J. Light, writing of the visit paid to his parish, says: "The mission has been wonderfully attended with success. Crowds have assembled night after night in the open air, and the schoolroom has been filled with attentive listeners. They seem exactly to fill the place in the Church which John Wesley intended to fill with his lay preachers, viz., a ministry of evangelisation addressed to the lapsed masses of England." Such testimony is full of encouragement when we remember that it comes from a clergyman of the Church which did so much to stamp out and crush the enthusiasm of those very preachers. Wisdom has been found in past lessons.

Sailors at Barbados.

ADMIRAL GRANT MEMORIAL.

THE urgency of the need for a sailors' home in this island was thus set forth by the late Admiral Grant, C.B., R.N.:—

"The main work amongst seamen is conducted by the Barbados Seamen's and Fishermen's Mission at Fontabelle, a pretty little suburb of Bridgetown frequented by fishermen. It is conducted by Mr. Hamlet Weekes and a devoted band of voluntary workers. Mr. Weekes is a clerk in Messrs. Whitfield and Co.'s stores, and has now for some six years or more conducted the Mission at his own risk and responsibility. On each occasion I visited, I found just the class the Mission is intended to reach, and amongst the labourers who were sent to the Atlantis to work cargo I had the pleasure of finding a negro who gave me the history of his conversion at this Mission; and I had abundant proof of the reality of his life, his employers speaking well of his work and reliability. The work of the Mission consists of prayer meeting on Tuesday nights and Gospel service Thursday evenings. On Sabbath mornings Mr. Weekes, with one or more of his co-workers, goes afloat in the Grace Darling, visiting the ships in port, distributing tracts, and inviting officers and men to his house; then, having got the consent of the captain of a suitable ship, the B. and F. Sailors' Society's flag is hoisted, and service conducted on board. In the afternoon they go to the careenage amongst the coasting vessels, and the Bethel flag is run up, and a bright cheery open-air service is conducted, reaching a large, neglected class, who listen attentively and take part in the singing. A Sunday-school for the fishermen's children is conducted in the afternoon, and in the evening at seven o'clock an evangelistic service is conducted by various workers, clergymen of different denominations.

"Valuable as all this undoubtedly is, it does not meet the urgent need of seamen in Barbados; that need is a proper Home. Mr. Weekes has this in view, and is now collecting by degrees the furniture for one, but it is clear that he is not financially in the position to open one without substantial aid. It is beyond question that a Sailors' Home is imperatively required. There are ships condemned, sailors left behind sick or drifted to Barbados, and some of the boarding-houses, from all I heard, do not appear to be over reputable. All those merchants with whom I spoke were in accord as to requirements, but laid stress on the preponderance of foreign seamen, and did not feel called on to do anything for them, so I took the opportunity of impressing them that our society recognised no nationality or creed. The claim on the Society is being a sailor."

It is the imperative necessity for a Sailors' Home that has acted as an inspiration to Mr. Weekes to press forward, even though at first there seemed so little chance of success. Seized with the apprehension that it must be done, however impossible it might appear to other people, he has been wedded to his idea until his perseverance has secured the scheme a certain amount of public patronage, so that of the £600 required to purchase the Home the amount on hand at present is £148 15s 10d.

The Hon. G. R. Le Hunte, M.A., Colonial Secretary of Barbados (now acting Governor) has taken a most lively interest in the scheme, consenting to become president of the committee, and has issued a circular, dated from Government House, calling upon the merchants of Bridgetown for their practical support. He has done much since the death of Admiral Grant to push forward this work in the interest of seafaring men, and the committee are not only deeply grateful for his valuable assistance, but feel proud of it. It is their great regret that his appointment to another part of the world will sever his connection with the committee as president, although they know his interest in the work will not cease.

Tibetan Pioneer Mission.

AT a special meeting in the Strangers' Rest, 163, St. George's-street, E., last Friday evening, Miss A. E. Taylor gave details of her efforts to carry the Gospel to the spiritually-benighted denizens of far-off shut-up Tibet. Mr. Geo. Spicer presided. After Mr. John McCall had opened with prayer, the proceedings were prefaced by a few words from Mr. J. T. Isaac concerning the need of reinforcements for the band of workers seeking to reach the sailors of various nationalities so numerous in the neighbourhood.

Interest in the meeting was increased by the presence on the platform of Puntso, the faithful Tibetan servant of Miss Taylor, with his wife Siggue. That the land is slowly but surely opening to the glad tidings of God's grace, was the first thankful note of Miss Taylor's review of travels since 1894, when she went to Darjeeling with a band of helpers. It may be said, perhaps, without wounding official susceptibilities, that the travellers did not find much favour or assistance in such quarters, whether British or Chinese, because of the very natural fear that some little measure of political friction might arise from the presence of the workers on the border. However, it was constantly found that the hearts of all men are amenable to the sovereign will of the Great Ruler of the universe, especially where the paramount interests of his Kingdom are concerned. At Nartong, from causes just hinted at, much difficulty was experienced in obtaining shelter, though the natives were most friendly. Most of the party did not approve of the place where they stayed, and ultimately Miss Taylor was left alone with Puntso. Signs of Divine blessing were evident in the visit to this place. Then permission was obtained from the authorities for Miss Taylor to open a shop at Yatong, in Tibet, eight miles over the Indian frontier, where she was well received by the chiefs of the people. Opportunity was found to circulate no less than 1500 copies of Gospels in Tibetan. These were printed from a translation by Moravian missionaries. There were two Buddhist monasteries near, up the mountain side, and lamas, or priests, therefrom evinced much interest in Miss Taylor's mission. She testifies that the Tibetans are a religious people as far as their light goes; one-third of them are lamas or Buddhist priests, while the remaining two-thirds do their utmost to support the others.

This fact gave Miss Taylor, who certainly appears to have found much favour with the Tibetans, a text for an eloquent appeal on behalf of this heathen race, among whom she intends to resume her labours very shortly, hoping to leave London early in November with some fresh workers. It was strange, she said, to come home to a land like this and hear that God's work needs reinforcements, where it is so easy to come and help. What are we Christians doing to prepare the way for our Lord's return? Do we think so much of personal adornment, or holiness, as it is called, that we have no time to work, and are afraid of defiling our garments among the lost ones in the East-end of London and in heathen lands? When poor Tibetan women count it nothing to endure all manner of privations in journeying to the shrines of their idols, what should not we do for the Lord who has saved us? The principle of "home-work first" must not be abused, otherwise we should find ourselves in heathen darkness in England to-day.

Mr. Edward Hunt, formerly a worker at the "Rest," and shortly returning to Gang-King, drew a vivid verbal picture of vast tracts of country and immense populations in China, very poorly furnished with Christian missionaries, although the Flowery Land is now so freely open to Europeans. Putting aside the sins of our forefathers against the Chinese, what is our own position in this connection? Are we doing all we can to spread the Gospel among them? Some of us really cannot go as God's messengers; but the questions press as to whether we are hindering others, say sons or daughters, from going, and why the missionary societies are in such straits for men and means.

A few words from Puntso were interpreted by Miss Taylor, and described how, drawn by what he heard concerning the missionaries, he literally left all to cast in his lot with them. Then came some account of travels and trials, imprisonment, and interposition of the King of Tibet in favour of Puntso. He finished with a pathetic appeal for prayer that the Chinese might permit him to carry the Gospel to his own people at Lassa. It was pleasing to hear Puntso join his wife in singing a Gospel song, the tune of which was familiar; but the sentiments were, of course, concealed by the language.

Mrs. Hunt spoke briefly about the hopeless social condition of Chinese women, and besought prayer for increased blessing upon her future work among them.

The meeting terminated with fervent supplication to God, on behalf of this work, offered by several friends.

Convention at Old Orchard.

THE annual Old Orchard (Maine) Convention of the Christian and Missionary Alliance, which has its headquarters in New York, lately closed after a week of services of deepest interest. Among those who took part as foreign missionaries were Rev. Mark Fuller, of India, and Mrs. Fuller, who spoke with great earnestness as to the importance of the present crisis in India, where God is speaking to the people by famine, pestilence, and earthquake, where the lines of caste are being broken down and where an unequalled opportunity is now presented for Christian liberality to work wonders. In China and in Africa, needy as they were, the situation, Mrs. Fuller thinks, is not nearly so critical as in India at this moment, and too much prayer and effort cannot be concentrated upon it. The missionaries from China, however, showed the great importance and success of the work there, where many new fields were being opened up and influential people reached. Among others, the wife of the governor of the great province of Hupeh had been baptized. A number of young missionaries from the Congo and the Soudan raised the enthusiasm of the Convention to the highest pitch with regard to the needs of Africa. Mr. Forder, of Moab, spoke of the new work to be undertaken by the Alliance in Bible lands. Mr. Gaebelein, of New York, and Mr. McCarter, of Montreal, spoke of work among Jews in America and elsewhere.

A marked feature of the Convention this year was the presence of Dr. Harry Guinness, of the East London Training Institute for Missionaries, who told of thrilling adventures in Africa, where he once had a very narrow escape from being eaten by cannibals. He also told of his Keswick experiences, and urged the importance to Christian workers of definitely "receiving" the Holy Spirit for their own heart and life and for the work God had given them to do. Dr. Guinness was on his way to South America to establish mission stations at various points.

Mr. S. H. Hadley, of the Water-street Mission, New York, was another of the speakers of this Convention. His evening evangelistic addresses were very powerful and drew vast audiences, many of whom were convicted of sin under his plain speaking.

Many of the workers spoke of this as the best Alliance Convention ever held. A rumour went abroad that it might be the last to be held at Old Orchard, as Convention grounds had been purchased near the new Training Institute at Nyack, New York. This rumour, however, Mr. Simpson emphatically denied, saying that the Nyack Convention was to be for New Yorkers who could not come as far as Old Orchard. A word about this training school for missionaries may be in place here. This institute has been for years affording to young missionaries the special training required for their work, and has now been removed from New York city to a more economical and retired situation on the Hudson. The new building is intended to accommodate two hundred and fifty persons. The Alliance is doing a good deal of missionary and rescue work in the United States, and has about three hundred missionaries among the heathen. New parties are being sent out all the time. One young lady from Montreal, Miss Claussen, receives directions to sail in a fortnight for India. She is to visit Denmark on the way to say farewell to her parents.

Missionary collections on the Sunday amounted to over sixty-five thousand dollars.

A Lutheran Conference.

I HAVE pleasure in sending you a few notes of the fifth Northern Lutheran Missionary Conference, held at Stockholm, August 26-29. The Swedish missions represented were the mission of the Swedish State Church in Natal and Zululand, the mission of the "Evangelisku Fosterlands Stiftelse" among the Coptics, Mohammedans, and heathen people of Abyssinia, and among the Gonds of India. The field of the Dondah Mission is principally in India. The State Church of Norway has a small mission in Natal, and a considerable and interesting mission in Madagascar. The Lutheran Church of Finland has a mission in East Africa. The "Augustana Synod" of the American Lutheran Church was represented by its president, Dr. Sward, and several other Scandinavian Americans. It has no distinctive heathen mission of its own, though taking an active part in several, both Scandinavian and American foreign missions. It has, however, at present the charge of the very difficult mission to the Mormons, which is almost the same as a mission to heathen. Lastly, there was represented the very interesting mission to the Santals of India, which is supported by all the three Scandinavian countries, besides friends in America and Britain.

Bishop Von Schule was chosen to preside, and his ability, sympathy, and activity contributed much to the success of the meeting. The meeting was largely composed of clergymen, and was very distinctly Lutheran, no other denomination being represented; even those holding in the main Lutheran views, but dissenting from the State Church, were not represented. Still the fact that 600 to 700 or more people could be brought together in the interest of God's work among the heathen was a fact to be deeply grateful for. Through the entire conference a spirit of earnestness and unity prevailed; even the stiffest and least emotional men seemed to be melted and softened as the conference went on.

The excursion to the Mission Training Institution of Johannelund on Lake Melaren was most pleasant; and the pointed, short, and natural speeches on missionary experience were most interesting and stimulating to faith.

During the meeting the "Students' Volunteer Missionary Movement" came in for some comment. There was afterwards a meeting of the "Students' Volunteer Missionary Movement" in the rooms of the Y.M.C.A. A good many missionaries and ministers took part. It might appear that the Danish and Norwegian speakers were more thoroughly in sympathy with the movement than the Swedish, some of whom seemed afraid that in some way or other the members of the Union would turn out to be not quite orthodox Lutherans, or to bring about something which might in future be disastrous to the State Church; or at least that their way of procedure would be different from the time-honoured methods of Lutheran Christendom. Those of experience in the movement did their best to allay all such unnecessary fears.

Mr. R. Wilder and a German member spoke—through Dr. Fris, as an interpreter—and the general impression of all I met was that they were deeply grateful to God for what they had received, and hoped for more blessing in future.

The industrial population of Sweden is increasing very rapidly. The towns and places situated around the large waterfalls are receiving a sudden increase of people, who are leaving farm work and seeking industrial employment. The possible social conditions which may be caused by this are matters of great concern. There was a good meeting held to consider this point, and the duty of the Church in regard to it. We must pray and hope that when the attention of the Lutheran Church has been roused on this point God will give it power to rise to the emergency; and thus the very emergency will become a blessing to the Church.

"The Cry of the Children" is the title of a short paper by Frank Hird in the current Ludgate Magazine, 6d., 63, Fleet Street, the first of a series dealing with the evils of child labour in our large cities. It reveals a condition of things as to the strain on young and tender lives that is discreditable to our advanced civilisation, and that ought to be met by legal restraint.

The British Chautauqua.

THE two hundred and fifty Sunday-school teachers and Christian workers who have gathered under such delightful circumstances at Aberystwyth for the past three weeks have scattered to their homes, and the third annual Summer School of the British Chautauqua has come to an end. Its influence, however, has by no means ceased. Classes and scholars, friends and students in all parts of the country will have reason to thank God for renewed strength, for increased courage, for quickened hope, and for greater consecration as the result of the communion that has been obtained there.

Some of the most delightful of the excursions and some of the most interesting of the lectures had been saved for the last week of the gathering, consequently there was no diminution in the enthusiasm that had been so marked a feature of the proceedings.

Two exceedingly helpful lectures were delivered by Professor ADENEY on New Testament Teaching; he first dealt with the teaching of Christ and the second with that of his apostles. The Professor pointed out that in the phrase "The Kingdom of God," the Greek word translated "Kingdom" is used in two senses—i.e., "a rule" and "a realm." When we read of the Kingdom entering us, it is the rule. When we read of our entering the Kingdom it is the realm. But as the realm is wholly spiritual the two ideas are not so far removed from one another.

Rev. Dr. JOHN GORDON, of Philadelphia, lectured on "Sign Seeking," in which he referred to the desire that existed so universally for some visible manifestation from the unseen world. He described the importance which was attached by Romans, Greeks, and Egyptians to the study of the stars, the flight of birds, and to dreams, afterwards dealing with some of the popular superstitions of our own day. He pointed out that the demand is not a legitimate one, and that Christian workers in particular should beware of such a spirit.

Probably the most interesting personality of all those who have taken part in the meeting of the Summer School is that of Dr. MILBURN, the famous chaplain of the United States Senate, who is known throughout America as "The Blind Man Eloquent." His lectures were delivered to crowded audiences. The first in particular was listened to with rapt attention. Taking for his subject, "What a blind man saw in England," the venerable visitor formed a striking picture, as in his opening words he referred with deep feeling to his own affliction. "What a blind man saw in England," said he. "And why not? Shall none see but those that have eyes, none enjoy the beauties of the outer world save those who chance to have the empyreal faculty planted beneath the brow? Is there not a sunshine of the human heart? As I have travelled up and down our broad continent, among white men, red men, and black men, I have discovered that so soon as my fellow-men found that I was one of the little band whom God had rendered almost sacred by casting the shadow of his wing, all their faculties were at once placed at my disposal; so that, instead of being blind, I am Argus-eyed—a thousand eyes are ever ready to do me service." A most delightful personality is the Doctor. He is cared for and attended by his two daughters, who are eyes, hands, and feet to him.

So the days sped on, filled with engagements, social, physical, mental, and spiritual, to the last, and culminating in the united communion service. It was a hallowed hour. A deep peace reigned in the little chapel, and the presence of the Master of the feast was manifestly realised. The service was conducted with deep feeling by Rev. W. J. Avery. Mr. T. S. Penny, of Taunton, gave a devotional address, helpful alike in its thoughtfulness and in its deep spirituality.

It may interest many to know that the arrangements made for next year by Dr. Lorimer, of Boston, are already sufficiently advanced to enable us to announce definitely that he will be one of the lecturers at the Summer School of 1898. There is no section of the community in which the Doctor takes a deeper and more affectionate interest than in young ministers, who, on leaving college, find themselves in a sphere at once so difficult and so inspiring. Dr. Lorimer therefore proposes next year to conduct a course of lectures similar to those that are delivered at Yale and other universities, having special reference to the dangers, the duties, and the joys of a minister's life. The course will be entitled "Pastoral Theology in Theory and Practice," and will include the following five lectures—The Pastor in the Study, the Pastor in the Pulpit, The Pastor in the Sunday-school, The Pastor in the Inquiry-room, and the Pastor in the Parish; the last lecture will deal with work in the sick-room and in the homes of the people.

In addition to these lectures, Dr. Lorimer will deliver a popular evening discourse on "The Romance of a Preacher's Life." Such a course will appeal not only to the ministerial element in the ever-growing Chautauqua constituency, but will be of great value to all.

Current Events and Opinions.

THE KESWICK LABEL.

IN an article in the Boston Congregationalist on the truths specially taught at the Keswick Conference, Rev. G. Campbell Morgan says:—"I protest against the phrase 'Keswick teaching.' It may be a convenient label, but I am convinced it is ill advised. There are thousands of persons who are deeply moved in the matter of true spiritual living, and are claiming and entering into the fulness of blessing which is their birthright in Christ, who are not connected with Keswick and have never made a pilgrimage thither; and this labelling of truth with a local name has in it an element of danger, in that it may degenerate into the worship of 'Nehushtan'; it also alienates the sympathy of many who are deeply anxious concerning these great matters."

PERSECUTION OF ARMENIANS.

News from Constantinople (says a Daily News telegram) describes the situation of the Armenians as really desperate. Persecutions and outrage among them do not take place with the publicity of last year, but being less noisy are none the less ferocious. Armenians are arrested by hundreds, not only in Constantinople, and are tortured and executed. Commendatore Pansa, the Italian Ambassador, has energetically claimed the release of a young girl, arrested while bringing Armenian letters to the Italian Embassy, but so far unsuccessfully.

MISSIONARY PLEDGES.

In some remarks at a missionary meeting at Northfield, Mr. Moody said: "I want to say a word about pledging one's self to become a missionary. God does not want everybody to go to China or India. There are several thousand people waiting to go, not a quarter of whom, I think, are fit to go. No man is fit to go to India if he can go anywhere else. When he feels, 'Woe is me if I do not preach the Gospel in India,' then it is time for him to go. People come to a missionary meeting and get stirred up and pledge themselves to go to a foreign field under the influence of flaming speeches. I have a son eighteen years old, and I do not want him to get all stirred up and then say, 'I am going to India or Africa.' I want God to call him, and not a convention. When he gets further along in his studies and sees what he can do if the Lord calls him to India, or China, or Africa, or anywhere else, I will say with all my heart, 'Go, and God bless you.'"

CARING FOR PRISONERS.

The following extract from an interview with an ex-prison-warder will be read with interest in connection with our recent communications on the subject:—

"What do you consider to be the great weakness of the present system of prison punishment?" "The absence of Christianity—the heart religion of Christ." "But has not every prison a chaplain and religious services?" "Yes, as a matter of form, certainly. That is part of the prison machinery. The ears of the law-breaker are reached, but not his heart." "Whose fault is that—the law-breaker's or the chaplain's?" "Neither one nor the other. It is the system of punishment that is wrong and wholly un-Christ-like. It is punitive only. It is non-reformative. It hardens and brutalises and debases the character. There is no human love in a prison. There are no softening influences. Men are reduced to human automata. The warders and officials come under the same stereotyped, inflexible system of discipline. Many prison chaplains are sincere Christian men, but they are not allowed to deal with prisoners according to the dictates of the heart, but according to the laws and rules of the prison. If Christ were the governor of a prison, I think the salvation of the law-breakers would be his first aim. The prisoner would still have to perform his task to satisfy human justice, but Christ would seek to reach the human heart and change it by his conquering love."

THE PASTOR AS EVANGELIST.

One of the most fatal delusions that ever took possession of some ministers is the delusion that they are called to edify the Church, and not to bring sinners to Christ! That notion is absolutely unscriptural, and is fatal to the highest usefulness. Some men are undoubtedly called to be evangelists, and have a special aptitude for bringing men to decision. While some sow, others reap; but that truth must not be perverted into the idea that some are to do nothing but sow, or that God intends any minister to be without the unspeakable and Divine joy of winning souls. No man has any right to be appointed to a Methodist circuit unless he is definitely called of God to the office and work of the Christian ministry. But if he is called to the office and work of the Christian ministry, he is called instrumentally to save sinners. The man who brings no sinners to Christ has either sinned against Divine grace or missed his calling.—Methodist Times.

EXCESSIVE ATHLETICISM.

In a leading article on the present-day devotion to athletic sports, The Times says:—"The genie of athleticism has grown to an inordinate size, and it is now difficult to reduce him within reasonable proportions in the higher regions of education. The benefits to be derived from healthy outdoor games are undeniable, and in the country at large, despite the unprecedented homage now accorded to athletic sports, it is probable that those benefits outweigh the evils of excessive absorption in games. But there is reason to fear that, in the training of those who ought hereafter to be the leaders of the community and to set the example of sound judgment as to the true aims of life, the border line between usefulness and exaggeration is in danger of being, if it has not already been, overstepped."

"Gone Before!"

"It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption."

SWEET is the scent of the meadows,
Golden the gleam of the corn,
Softly and lightly the shadows
Fall from the wings of the morn.
Calm is the sleep thou art sleeping,
Dust, in the dust of the sod;
Peaceful the watch thou art keeping,
Soul, in the presence of God.
Soon will the flowers be dying,
Soon will the swallows have flown,
Winter snows fall on thee, lying
Here in God's Acre alone,
Peacefully rest in earth's keeping,
Seed in the dust of the sod,
Patiently wait for the reaping,
Soul, in the presence of God.

C. MAUD BATTERSBY.

The Militia.—Mr. A. Draper, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, reports an excellent work at the Militia Camp, near York, during the period of training. Daily visits were made to the tents, and much pure Gospel literature scattered. Evangelistic services were held nightly among the men, some of whom professed to yield themselves to God.

Perth Conference.—This ancient annual assemblage will be held in the City Hall, September 13-16. Many helpful speakers are expected, including Rev. John Smith, of Edinburgh, Prof. W. G. Blaikie, Bishop Taylor Smith, Rev. Sholto Douglas, Lords Kinnaird, Overtoun, and Polwarth, Rev. D. M. Macintyre, Mr. C. E. Greig of the McAll Mission, etc. Particulars may be had from Rev. Dr. Bannerman, of Perth.

Hackney.—On Sunday afternoon a special service was held in the Cambridge Heath Congregational Church on behalf of the Hackney Y.M.C.A. Rev. J. R. Richards (pastor of the church) presided. An addresss on the work of the Y.M.C.A. was delivered by the secretary (Mr. F. L. Porter). The "Fisk Jubilee Singers," under the leadership of Mr. F. J. Loudin, sang several of their quaint melodies during the service, including "Steal Away to Jesus," "The Lord's Prayer," etc. Requests for the services of the choir may be addressed: Care of Messrs. Letters to the Editor.

"THINGS PERTAINING TO THE SPIRIT."

Dear Sir,—I have been reading, in The Christian for September 2, the article on the important subject of "Things pertaining to the Spirit," which draws a kind of parallel between the characteristics of God the Holy Ghost and those of the spirit of evil.

It seems to me that we must be very careful to realise the immeasurable inferiority of Satan to the Divine Spirit, great though his power towards us may be. It is true that he has legions of evil agents who are called his angels, and who appear to obey him. He has help from our evil nature and corrupt inclinations. He works in and by the children of disobedience and the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes and the pride of life are on his side. He is perfectly cruel and unscrupulous.

But he is not omnipresent. He is not omniscient, for he showed in our Saviour's life on earth that he was ignorant of God's intentions. He is not omnipotent. The Holy Ghost is all these.

If this is so, are we right if we say that "every one of us is inhabited by one of these two spirits?" When Satan "entered into Judas" on two occasions, it implies that this was for a very special purpose. The evil spirit that "went out of a man" could not have been Satan, for "he brought back with him seven other spirits more wicked than himself," and the house must have been empty when he returned. These thoughts may well strengthen our faith and quicken our zeal and courage.—Yours sincerely, An Aged Disciple.

THE DAILY HOMILY.

Dear Sir,—I would like to do three things in reference to the little sermonettes, or Daily Homilies, which you are publishing in The Christian.

1. To thank you for them. Through them you are sending messages of help and encouragement into hundreds of scattered and lonely homes where such messages could hardly otherwise be sent. Eternity only can show the good these brief, but strikingly suggestive and helpful, little homilies are doing. Being in the form they are, they are adapted to the members of every Bible Union and of those who belong to no Bible Union.

2. To suggest to every reader of The Christian to make a point of reading one of these Homilies daily. No one who does this will ever regret it. They are so brief that they can be read in a few minutes, and so rich that they give thought for meditating on for the whole day. Each one is a condensed sermon of a high order.

3. To suggest to all who can to get these Homilies, with the publishers' permission, translated and reprinted in foreign periodicals. They would be welcomed by thousands, and be likely to prove of untold blessing in almost every land. I speak as one who has had a somewhat large experience in helping to spread Christian truth in different lands, and I say unhesitatingly that I know of nothing I would so gladly help in spreading as these Daily Homilies. Were it in my power to do it, there are at least four lands in which I would have them translated and issued as a monthly periodical.

If the readers of The Christian in highly-favoured England would send their copies, after reading, to a lonely missionary or Continental worker, and call their attention to these Homilies, they might do immense good.

Trusting that these lines may be the means of calling still more attention to papers which have been so helpful to myself and to many,—I am, very truly yours, J. D. Kilburn.

ENGLAND AND INDIA.

Sir,—I do not by any means hold a brief for the Government in India, but a residence of nearly twenty-five years in that country has convinced me that it is only a small section that is now complaining of injustice. The great mass of the people appreciate fully the benefits of British rule, and would look with dismay at the discontented grumblers obtaining greater power to oppress than they have at present. It is a great mistake to talk of "the people of India"; there are so many races and castes that there is no unity.

An English officer has to be strictly impartial, and this often compels him to appear out of touch with the people, and unsympathetic. At the time of the Mutiny, the men who appeared to be most in touch with the people were the officers of the regiments which mutinied, and not John Lawrence and his subordinates, who by God's grace saved India. The middle and lower classes in India do not write to the newspapers, and they cannot make known their wants, but we who come in contact with them and hear their histories could tell story after story of the oppression of their own countrymen and how their great desire is to be able to tell their grievances to the English officer, "who," they say, "is sure to do them justice; but as for their own people, they rob them now, and if they were invested with more authority would render their lives unbearable." Are the native States of Travancore and the Nizam's dominions models for the English officials to copy?

The only remedy for India is the deliverance from the tyranny of Hinduism by the Gospel as expounded by our Lord in the synagogue at Nazareth (Luke iv. 18, 19).—Yours faithfully,

A Missionary.

YOUNG WOMEN IN JOHANNESBURG.

Dear Sir,—I have just read a letter in The Christian, dated July 1, and signed by "Adelaide Ross," stating that a lady is willing to come out to Johannesburg to start a home for young women.

I do not wish to discourage the lady; there is much need of such a home, but I should like her and other Christian friends at home to know that there are many "God-fearing, virtuous women," nay, more, many willing and active Christian workers even in this wicked Johannesburg. And I think it might be well to tell them some of the difficulties we have to contend with in this special branch of Christian work, the seeking to help and shield young women.

Three years ago a branch of the Y.W.C.A. was formed here, and a small home opened under the loving care of our secretary, an earnest Christian lady. Several gentlemen kindly subscribed to furnish the home, and assisted in paying the rent for about a year. We were enabled to carry it on for six months longer, and it was just beginning to be self-supporting when we were obliged to close on account of the troubles connected with the reform movement. We were only able to accommodate twelve young women, and those we charged £5 per month, but were obliged to raise it to six guineas. Even that was cheap for Johannesburg, where £9 and £10 are the usual charges (even a bare, unfurnished room costs £3 per month), and the Home was always full, and Miss Mitchell had many tokens that her labour was not in vain. Though not a lady of private means, Miss Mitchell undertook the work as a labour of love, and was content to receive the small salary of £3 per month, while the Kaffir boy had £4.

Unfortunately times have been so bad that we, the committee of the Y.W.C.A., did not see our way clear to re-open the Home; but last January Miss Mitchell took a small house on her own responsibility (rent £16, house containing small dining-room and four bedrooms), and we gladly bade her make use of the furniture which had been stored meanwhile. But although she only charges £7 and £8 per month her small house is not full. It is sad, but true, that young women and girls even, coming straight from homes where they have been well watched over and cared for, no sooner arrive in Johannesburg than they throw off all restraint and prefer living in a small single room, and living, many of them, on tea and tinned meats, so that they can go and come as they like, and even entertain their young men friends in their one room.

Another Home was opened some months ago on similar lines, but is not full either.

Quite lately an enterprising gentleman built a large set of chambers to be let to "women only." I believe there are about eighty rooms in one large building. It is not known how this will succeed. It will be neither a Home nor any protection, but will prove a convenience as, until lately, few respectable boarding-houses would receive women.

Then again, the wife of the acting American consul, who took a great interest in young women, tried to get up a young women's club, but after collecting a good deal of money towards putting up a building for that purpose, gave up the idea, owing to the indifference of those whom she wished to help.

It is all very sad, for it is only too true that "the moral fibre of the population is terribly relaxed," but I am sure that all here who are interested in young women and girls will gladly welcome another worker to their midst. Probably she will be more successful as she will be in direct communication with the British Women's Emigration Association and will, therefore, have the girls sent out to her from home. May I just add that £300 will not go very far in Johannesburg.

Should this lady or the British Women's Association wish for any information that I can give, I shall be very pleased to give it.—Faithfully yours,

P.O. Box 655, (Mrs.) E. Bowins.

Johannesburg, July 28.

In reference to the above, Miss Adelaide Ross writes as follows:—

Dear Sir,—You were good enough to insert for me in your issue of July 1 a short letter upon Johannesburg. It brought in only a very small amount in subscriptions, but much interesting correspondence of great value to our emigration work. Amongst other letters was one from the London secretary of the Y.W.C.A., who told us of their home there. We heard of its temporary suspension and of its being started again this year on quite a small scale.

When the subject came finally before our Council, several of our members, who are also members of the Y.W.C.A., thought it would be wiser to direct attention to the enlargement of the Home. But a still more important consideration was the apparent inconsistency of discouraging young women from going to Johannesburg, and at the same time announcing that they had opened a special Home for their reception under the auspices of the British Women's Emigration Association. But the work needs doing, and the lady whom I referred to is at the present moment in Johannesburg working on her own foundation, but in amicable relations with our Association.

It is quite true that when young women find themselves in perfectly new surroundings they do not always retain that discretion which has been imposed upon them by home customs. They need leading, gently but firmly, for we cannot make the girls of the nineteenth century into girls of a former generation, though we believe that "the law abideth."

But it is also true that the rules of societies, however good, do not suit the conditions of a less conventional life, and that many young people object to classify themselves as members of these bodies. My friend was much encouraged by influential persons in England, and has started with a very large number of valuable introductions. Her boarding-house will be regulated only by her own singularly clear judgment as to what is fitting conduct in Christian women; she will gather experience as she goes, and I have no doubt if life and health are spared her, she will "hold the fort."

She became fully aware before she started of the high prices which prevail in Johannesburg, but did not shrink from the venture. Where large sums are earned by women, large sums can be paid for board and residence.

Thanking you again for your ever invaluable help, I am, yours faithfully, Adelaide Ross.

A Prisoner for Jesus' Sake.

Readers of The Christian may remember an account given of the baptism of a Brahmin on September 5 last year at Hombakonnin. He was violently assaulted on his way back from the river, and Miss Reade and those attending were obliged to apply for police protection. He was prevailed on to return with his relations, and no news was heard of him till July 20. A Brahmin relative then told Miss Reade that he was an outcast, but kept under lock and key, as it was known that if any liberty was given him he would return to the mission. Prayer is earnestly entreated for this poor prisoner. Miss Reade writes: "Who can tell what he may be suffering?" His imprisonment shows that he is keeping truth to his faith.

"Paul's Address to the Ephesian Elders."
Acts xx. 22-35.

Golden Text:—"None of these things move me."—Acts xx. 24.

PAUL is bidding farewell to his fellow-workers in the Gospel. There will be a great void in their hearts when he has gone; it will be as if the sun had gone down, for in a very real sense he had been an angel of light to them. So Paul sends to Ephesus for the Elders of the Church that he may give them a few parting words of counsel and reminder.

I. Paul's Heroism. He dips into the future, and by the Spirit's aid sees that bonds and afflictions will be his constant portion (23). He was going to Jerusalem, but the shadow of his cross lay like a heavy burden upon him, and robbed his spirits of the freedom, lightness, and vigour which was their usual state (22). But these things shall not prevent him from doing his duty. His very life shall be sacrificed for that if needs be (24). This is ever the spirit of those swift, high-souled men and women who belie the devil's words, "All that a man hath will he give for his life." To such people conscience and religion are dearer even than life itself. They said once to Luther, "Do not go to the city of Worms, for the soldiers are lying in wait for your life," but the Reformer replied, "Though there were as many devils in Worms as there are tiles upon the housetops, yet would I go to vindicate the power of my God." It is the same heroism that has animated all those who have lived, and fought, and suffered, and died for God and humanity in every age. We may not be called upon to prove our steadfastness by so great a sacrifice, but if the world is to be won for Christ, it must be felt in our hearts, and in our lives it must be seen.

II. A Clear Conscience. Paul reviews his work, and bids these elders bear testimony that he is free "from the blood of all men." This does not mean that he was perfect, but that he had done his best to warn people and teach them of the Christ. Paul had not shunned his duty (27), even when that duty was unpleasant. We are all tempted to shirk our duty when it does not please us or is hard. It was hard for Paul, for it brought him pain, scourgings, and imprisonment; but he had satisfied his conscience, and then he could wash his hands of the fate of all to whom he had preached. If we apply this test to any part of our own life we shall see how remarkable was Paul's verdict. Mr. J. M. Barrie says in the biography of his mother that in looking back over his life he cannot see one little thing he has left undone that would give her pleasure. Oh that scholars, and all of us, could say that about those we love, and especially about Christ and Christ's people. "Pure from the blood of all men."

III. Warnings. There were new converts to the faith who were likely to be corrupted, and it was the duty of the elders to look after these. The strong, spiritually, must protect the weak. In every home and school there are those who can easily withstand the temptations before which less favoured ones fall. The former must help the latter to resist.

Paul foresaw that enemies would come into the Church from the outside, and that even some of those who were now elders would become traitors. Therefore "Watch." The best man needs to "take heed lest he fall." Evil springs up in the purest mind. We are attacked and the fortress of our heart is taken at the very point we thought impregnable. Our duty is to watch and pray. Too often we do not pray for strength until the sin has been committed. The soldier on guard gives the alarm, and so calls up reinforcements, on the first sign of the enemy's approach. So should we watch, and call for Divine help in spiritual things.

IV. A Pastoral Commendation. It is a fond fallacy of ours that our dear ones are only safe when near to us. But God is everywhere, and we cannot do better than commit them to his safe keeping (32). He is able to satisfy all the needs of our pilgrimage, and bring us home at last. As Paul had lived by his own labours, so these elders were not to become paupers on their converts, but were to work for their own livelihood, devoting what time they could to tending the flock of God. For this gratuitous service they will be rewarded by that Master who said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive," and said it when He had given Himself for the salvation of the world.

Obituary.

REV. R. E. ABERCROMBIE.

A telegram has been received announcing the death of Rev. R. E. Abercrombie, superintendent of the missions in connection with the United Methodist Free Churches in the island of Jamaica. Before his appointment as superintendent, the rev. gentleman was stationed at Chorley.

MRS. COL. URMSTON.

We regret to record the death on September 4, after a short illness, of the wife of Colonel H. Brabazon Urmston (Retired Bengal Staff Corps) of Ardenlee, Maidstone, aged sixty-nine. She had been a great worker, first in India, at Rawal Pindi, amongst the soldiers and their wives; then, when invalided home in 1874, at Portsmouth, amongst soldiers, sailors, and especially the dockyard men. She was also a regular visitor to the women in prison. At Maidstone she worked amongst both rich and poor. She addressed many hundreds of meetings on behalf of zenana and temperance work, in both of which she took the deepest interest.

DR. ANNIE GILLESPIE.

Deep sorrow is felt by a large circle of friends at the death of Dr. Annie Gillespie, at Kwanchentzu, North China. Dr. Gillespie was a native of Newry, and after a brilliant collegiate course went out last year to China under the auspices of the Irish Presbyterian Mission for the purpose of founding a, hospital for women. However, she took ill in July and after a few days' sickness passed away at the residence of her brother, who is also a missionary in China. Dr. Gillespie is the second Newry lady that has died within a short period in connection with missions, Dr. Mary McGeorge having been drowned two or three years ago on her way to China.

MR. ROBERT MICHAEL, POONA.

The Bombay Guardian notices the death of Mr. Robert Michael, of Poona, at Muttra, the obituary styling him an evangelist, and stating that he had been for many years an independent preacher of the Gospel. The Indian Witness says: "We remember that this deceased brother started out on his career more than twenty years ago, claiming to have received a definite call to go from place to place all over India, telling the people, as he went, of the power and willingness of Christ to save. From the first he avowed the determination to live on whatever the people might be pleased to give him wherever he went. We have not heard much of Robert Michael of late years, and have no reliable information as to whether he was favoured with success in his work. We cannot say that we approve in detail of the plan he pursued. Yet it would appear that our brother was actuated by pure, unselfish motives. And it certainly is to the credit of the Indian people to whom he conveyed his Gospel message that he travelled among them so many years without harm having come to him and that they so generally supplied his immediate personal wants."

ARCHDEACON GRIFFITHS.

The Church in Wales has lost a strong support by the death in his seventy-eighth year of the Venerable John Griffiths, Archdeacon of Llandaff, which occurred on Wednesday week, at his residence at Neath. The cause of death was angina pectoris. The Archdeacon had for half a century occupied a prominent position in the public life of Wales as an educationalist, a devoted patriot, and a preacher of great power and popularity. While he was one of the chief ornaments of the Established Church in Wales, he was also held in high esteem in the country generally. Recognising Nonconformists as fellow-workers, he heartily co-operated with them in all social and religious work. During his long tenure of the living of Neath, he erected several day-schools at the cost of many thousands of pounds, which were supported by voluntary effort. Nor did he utilise these schools for Church purposes only, for the Nonconformists of the parish were satisfied with them and resolved not to form a School Board during his lifetime. So great was their faith in the Rector that many years ago a Nonconformist church, the members of which were at variance, agreed to seek his arbitration.

MR. JAMES ANDERSON.

In a lengthy obituary notice of Mr. James Anderson, Hampstead, of the London shipping firm of Anderson, Anderson, and Co., the Aberdeen Free Press says:—

"Mr. Anderson's business life covered a period of sixty-one years, and his death removes one of the last links with a past generation of shipowners. In business he was shrewd and sagacious, and to those who knew him intimately his characteristic was that of warm-hearted, kindly friendship. Mr. Anderson never forgot his native place, and many young men hailing from Peterhead, and who now occupy good positions in life, owe not a little of their worldly success to the generous assistance which they received in their youth from Mr. Anderson. In shipping circles in London the deceased was held in the highest regard, alike for his conspicuous business capacity and his estimable personal qualities. He was a consistently straightforward, upright man of affairs, who abhorred the shady and the mean—indeed, his character was moulded and his whole life influenced by his early Scottish religious training. After his removal to London, Mr. Anderson continued in connection with the Presbyterian Church, and at the time of his death and for many years previously he had been an elder in the Hampstead Presbyterian Church. When in Aberdeen, Mr. Anderson had a great liking for the ministrations of Rev. Dr. John Duncan, and was a frequent worshipper in Trinity Congregational Church. He was an unostentatious and liberal supporter of all benevolent objects, having in view the temporal and spiritual welfare of those around him. Mr. Anderson had reached the advanced age of 87 years."

Evangelical Alliance Conference.

Cambridge, Sept. 27—29.

The published programme of this gathering reveals many items of deep interest. At the opening prayer-meeting on the Monday afternoon, Dr. Moulton, of Cambridge, will preside. At the public meeting in the evening, Dr. Handley Moule will give the address of welcome, while Mrs. Isabella Bishop will be one of the speakers. The "annual address" on the Tuesday forenoon will be given by Dr. J. H. Rigg, and Mrs. Lewis, of Cambridge, the Syrian traveller, will give an address. In the afternoon Dr. Baedeker, Rev. David Baron, and others will speak on missions. In the evening there will be addresses or papers by Archdeacon Richardson, Dr. Oswald Dykes, and Mrs. Bishop.

Many interesting topics will be dealt with on Wednesday, the closing day. Among others Dr. Murray Mitchell will speak in the morning on "The Progress of Christianity during the Victorian Era." In the afternoon there will be a garden party in the grounds of Leys School.

Saving with a Purpose.—A Scotch woman used to lay aside a penny a day for missions. A visitor incidentally learning that the poor woman had been for many days without meat, gave her a sixpence to buy some. But she said: "I have long done very well on my porridge, so I will give the sixpence also to God." This fact was narrated at a missionary breakfast, and the host and his guests were profoundly impressed. The host said: "I have never denied myself so much as a chop for God." A large sum was immediately subscribed as a result of that touching incident. Ought it not to make a similar impression upon our hearts? What have we ever denied ourselves for the advancement of Christ's kingdom? Has it ever cost us the necessities of life to show our love for our Saviour?

Dolls for Hindu Children.—As many of our readers were exercised about the letters recently inserted on this subject, they will do well to note the following from the originator of the correspondence. He says:—"It was to dolls given as prizes to Hindu children, not to children in mission orphanages, that reference was made. The latter could not use dolls in idolatrous worship, as such form of worship does not exist in these institutions. But it is a fact, for it has been proved, that dolls given as prizes to Hindu children have been afterwards used by them in their idolatrous rites. For this reason I consider it wrong to give dolls as prizes to heathen children. By all means let friends continue to send dolls to the orphanages, but let them make sure they are given to Christian children only."

India.—The events of the year have greatly interfered with mission work. Hungry people do not care to listen to the Gospel, they want bread. A crowd of fanatics are not good listeners. Still the work has gone on quietly. The poor people have been convinced more than ever of the love which Christians bear to them as shown by the help given them in their distress; and this seed must bring forth fruit. We have gone from village to village, from door to door, distributing help sent us by friends in England and America, and in this way have been able to get very near the people in their trouble. Hundreds of orphans have been rescued, and these will grow up intelligent Christians in mission schools. For months to come the help of our friends in England and America will be needed to aid the people until better times come. Our special need at present is scholarships for our famine orphans at £4 a year each, which may be sent to us direct, by foreign post office order or bank draft. Rockwall Clancy.

Allahabad, India, August 19.

Scottish Notes.

Pastor John Robinson, of the City Temple, Glasgow, is now paying a third visit to America.

In the course of his holiday travels in Scotland Pastor Thomas Spurgeon recently attended afternoon service at the Free Church, Dingwall, which it may be remembered was opened by his father, Mr. C. H. Spurgeon.

In connection with a mission which Mr. George Clarke has arranged to hold in Stirling in October, the Christian workers of the town and neighbourhood are waiting much and earnestly upon the Lord, that it may be a time of special blessing. The Railway Mission, the Y.M.C.A., the Y.W.C.A., and the various Christian Endeavour Societies are holding joint prayer-meetings, and intend to combine their forces with a view to bringing the careless classes of the community into contact with the meetings.

In carrying out the arrangement under which the Evangelistic Lectureship of the Free Church is now undertaken by a succession of lecturers, the Assembly gave students the advantage of listening to Dr. Hood Wilson, Mr. Alexander of Dundee, and Dr. Walter Smith. The appointment made last May promises to be equally acceptable. Mr. Gibson, of Swatow, one of the English Presbyterian missionaries, has been invited home for the next two sessions, and the invitation, it is understood, has been accepted.

The summer work of the Glasgow United Evangelistic Association has been brought to a close, and from every branch there come tidings of blessing vouchsafed on the efforts put forth. The students of the Bible Training Institute have undertaken a large share of the meetings. The seaside services for young people have been carried on on a larger scale than formerly. Usually three meetings a day are conducted, and as the parents as well as the children gradually come within range the work opens out in every direction.

Lord Overtoun made a noteworthy speech at the opening, last Thursday, of the sixth session of the Glasgow Bible Training Institute. He traced the progress of the movement back to the original proposal by Mr. Moody, and showed with what care the foundations of the work have been laid under the superintendence of Mr. John Anderson. The work has commended itself to all who come into contact with it. The services of the students are much in demand during their training, and the testimony received to the value of their work after they go forth is of the most satisfactory character. The directors of the Evangelistic Association announced that in the course of the coming winter they expect to welcome the students to the premises now being specially erected for their accommodation.

The five native pastors from Manchuria, Kaffraria, Rajputana, Old Calabar, and Jamaica, who have been on a visit to this country in connection with the celebration of the jubilee of the United Presbyterian Church, brought to a close at Edinburgh on Sabbath evening their visitation of congregations. Perhaps never before has the visit of a deputation aroused so much enthusiasm over the whole country, or the blessed fruit of missionary labour been so clearly set before the people. The new interest thus aroused is finding expression in prayer and gift, and the funds of the Mission Board are likely to be larger than at any former time. A pleasing feature in the Glasgow service was the presence of a deputation from the National Bible Society of Scotland for the purpose of presenting each of the brethren from afar with a copy of the Word of God.

Armenian Orphans.—Would any friends help in clothing a number of Armenian orphans, now in England? They are from ten to fifteen years of age, mostly children of the victims of the Turkish massacres, and all very badly in need of underclothing, suits, head-gear, socks, shoes, etc. Bedding and other furniture for their use would be thankfully received by Mme. L. Thoumaïan. It should be sent care of Miss Grace Mentall, Oakhurst, Chigwell, Essex.

Whitton.—For some time a quiet work has been carried on at Whitton Gospel Hall, situated in the centre of the market garden and fruit growing districts of Middlesex, midway between Twickenham and Hounslow. Owing to residential changes, deaths, etc., the Mission had lapsed until last autumn, when by self-denying efforts the building debt was cleared off. Through the gratuitous services of Mr. A. H. Carter, God has again blessed the work. The little church has been revived, and an encouraging increase has taken place in the attendances. With one or two exceptions the villagers are unable to help towards current expenses, and friends are needed to inaugurate the winter's work. Particulars will be given by Mr. A. H. Carter, Bible League Office, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

Personalia.

Rev. Mark Guy Pearse has been spending his summer holidays in co. Derry. He preached and lectured in Grosvenor Hall, Belfast, to large and greatly delighted congregations.

Pastor Archibald G. Brown conducted the services at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Sunday last. He is announced to preach at the Baptist Church, Chatsworth-road, West Norwood, on the next two Sundays.

Rev. F. B. Meyer has returned from his holiday visit to the Continent, and has entered on the work of another winter season. Next Thursday, September 16, he hopes to recommence the Thursday noon service at Christ Church.

Bishop Tucker's health is such as to give cause for anxiety. The African fever still clings to him, and he finds it difficult to throw it off. It is believed, says The Record, that one of the Canadian bishops has asked him to spend the winter in Canada, in the hope that the dry, bracing air may set him up.

Mrs. Sarah Finn, well known as the superintendent of the Artillery-lane Mission, is, we regret to learn, almost laid aside from work by reason of bodily weakness. She is now over eighty years of age, and, although physically feeble, enjoys the use of all her faculties. Her address is 29, St. Ann's-road, South Tottenham.

The Brothers Weaver began a mission in the White Memorial Free Church, Glasgow, on Sunday. Many anxious souls went into the inquiry-room. Messrs. Weaver will be working for a month in Glasgow, Aberdeen, and Edinburgh in connection with the Free Church, and they crave the prayers of Christian people for much fruit upon their labours.

Lady Brassey recently met with a serious accident, of which details are to hand by last week's Australian mail. Her ladyship is much interested in philanthropic work, and after she had presided at a meeting in connection with the Melbourne Wesleyan Central Mission Shelter her carriage was crashed into by a baker's cart without a moment's warning. Her ladyship was pinned down by a portion of the smashed carriage, and sustained the fracture of two ribs.

Pemba.—Satisfactory accounts (says The British Friend) are received from Theodore Burtt of the progress of his pioneer work at Pemba. Herbert Armitage has joined him in this work, and both are comfortably located in their temporary homes. The latter has had a sharp attack of fever, and, though weak, he is progressing favourably. The sad oppression of the negroes by their Arab masters appears to be diminishing. A large estate at Banani, a short distance from Chaki-Chaki, has been purchased for the Pemba Mission.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

OUR readers, who, we are sure, have followed with much profit Mr. Meyer's expositions of the life of Paul, will be interested to know that a volume will be issued in due course, entitled PAUL, A SERVANT OF JESUS CHRIST (Morgan and Scott), containing these and further chapters on the pregnant lessons of the great Apostle's life.

Things seem somewhat brighter in the East, both near and far. The long-drawn-out diplomatic contest over the settlement of Greece appears to have reached a point where the Powers almost, if not quite, agree. Thessaly is not to be given over again to Turkey, and the debts of Greece are guaranteed by the control of a portion of the revenue by the Powers. Crete is being settled quietly. In India the clouds are not so black as they were, though they are black enough to make us anxious One thing seems to be certain, that there will be an overhauling of the policy which is blamed as the cause of an expenditure, from first to last, of some seventy millions of money, and of the present restless condition of the country. The politics of the question we may leave, but England ought in common humanity to avoid any steps which, being provocative of war, throw upon the Indian people, poor and harassed with famine, an additional burden of taxation.

Mr. Howard Evans has done religion a real service by exposing in the Contemporary the untrustworthiness of Whitaker's Almanac as a guide to the religious denominations of the country. The list, as it stands, gives a total of 293 denominations or "sects," but of these, e.g., forty-four are of foreign origin. Jews are entered in nine different ways, the Greek Church in three ; even Welsh Wesleyans and Scotch Baptists figure separately from their English brethren. The London City Mission, the Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A. have a place as denominations ; there are fifteen such denominations. Even non-Christian bodies, twenty-two of them, are in the list. Thirty-two denominations at least are described under different names, i. e., are reckoned twice over. Evangelistic agencies are classed as denominations, such as the Portsmouth Mission ; there are sixty of these. The Brethren are described in 39 different ways. Mr. Evans reduced the 293 to twenty. He says :—

As far as I can understand, there are really not more than a score of Christian denominations of English or Welsh origin outside the pale of the Anglican and Roman Catholic Churches, and of these all but two are nearly allied in faith, much more nearly than are the different modes of religion in the Church of England.

Among these twenty denominations there is a good deal of unity of faith and practice ; it is idle to call them signs of division in the Church of Christ, although, for uniformity's sake, one might wish to see them united openly. The union of several of them in the Free Church Council is evidence enough that they are of one heart and one soul, and on the great verities of the Gospel think the same thing. So much has been made of the divisions of the Church that in common justice they ought to be correctly given, and Mr. Evans has done his great share towards that consummation. At the same time, it must be confessed that the causes which in many cases keep churches or denominations apart are rather traditions, or family or friendly associations, or vested interests, than conviction as to doctrinal truth or even as to church government. The dead hand, acting by trust-deeds, and in other ways, is not a little accountable.

At the Trades' Union Congress, when a strong resolution on child labour was presented, a singular divergence of view presented itself, some speakers being as warmly in favour of the half-time system as others were against it. The question, on the surface, seems simple enough ; humanity would say that children under fifteen should be spared regular manual labour in mills and factories, and that night-labour under the age of eighteen should be abolished. Other countries can spare their children the toil and bondage of the factory for a longer period than Britain does, and there seems to be no valid reason why we should not follow their example. Although the resolution was opposed at the Congress by "a card vote" of 274,000, it was carried by 595,000 for it. Last year the numbers were 394,000 for a similar resolution, and 353,000 against. There is a great change manifest in this comparison, and when the working-men themselves shall be all of one mind their children will be placed on a better footing.

If childhood is not so dear to the British people as it ought to be, so neither is motherhood. The death-rate of little children in districts where mothers go to work is alarmingly high ; in North Stafford twice as high as in South Stafford. In Lancashire the death-rate among infants is 178 per 1000 ; in Dorset 83 per 1000. During the cotton famine, when the Lancashire mothers had to be at home, the mortality among little children greatly declined ; the same thing was seen at Coventry in the strike in the silk weaving days, and in the siege of Paris. War and famine are even kinder to the born or unborn infant than prosperous times, which tempt mothers away from the home to the workshop. The Trade Union Congress has done a public service by bringing the subject forward, and by also protesting against Sunday labour in paper mills, which is said to be a growing evil.

Some few years ago Lord Randolph Churchill spoke of the traffic in intoxicating drinks as devilish, and more recently Lord Rosebery warned the nation that the trade was rapidly becoming its tyrant. The recent licensing sessions have shown how fast the whole trade is passing into the hands of the brewers. Already eighty per cent. of the licensed houses are tied, and the process still goes on. In Scotland and Ireland the magistrates have successfully opposed the tied system, but somehow in England the trade gets its own way in this respect. We are passing into the hands of a tremendous monopoly of our own making, and our emancipation will be a difficult thing. Could we but get the young to abstain, the work would be easy enough ; breweries and public-houses would not be worth investing a sovereign in.

Conflicting standards of daily conduct account for much incoherency and contradiction in present-day religion, and not a little unhappiness in the lives of Christians. The following passage from a recent letter from the Bishop of Durham to the clergy and laity of his diocese puts the remedy in a vivid form :—

The main principle which I desire to commend to your consideration is that every act of a Christian is to be judged by a Christian standard, and that it is our common duty to contribute to the formation of a quiet, resolute, effective public opinion, which definitely aims at the attainment of the Christian ideal.

If this principle were faithfully followed it would effectually put an end to worldliness in the Church, introduce a new spirit into politics, and purify business and social life from many crying abuses. To have one standard of conduct—the will of God as revealed in his Son—and to subject our whole life to judgment according to that standard,—this is the secret of joy, and peace, and good influence.

We may rule our lives according to one of three laws. The first law of nature is self-preservation—here we are one with the brutes. The second is self-realisation—here we are merely human. The third is self-surrender—here we link ourselves with the divine. The first two are not only selfish, but impossible apart from the third. "He that loveth his life shall lose it, but he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it." We do not truly live spiritually till we cease to live for ourselves. Then we first taste of the deep well of salvation ; then only do we "come to ourselves." By making God first in our aims and thoughts we learn the secret of peace and life. "He that hath the Son hath life."

Behind the outward uniformity and obedience of the Roman Church there are restive movements and chasms of discord, which now and then reveal themselves openly. From various sources it is well known that American Catholics are just now almost in a state of rebellion against the authority of bishops and cardinals, and that signs of open revolt are beginning to show. The Anglo-Saxon race does not submit tamely to tyranny of any kind, and religious tyranny is specially distasteful to it. Severe discipline has recently been meted out to distinguished priests in New York and elsewhere for speaking their minds on ecclesiastical matters ; but this is only making matters worse. As Rome never reforms, but only changes her front, it would be well for American Roman Catholics to recognise that only by breaking away from her galling yoke altogether can they ever be spiritually free.

A contemporary calls attention to the remarkable fact that the higher education in France, that of the children of the upper classes, remains largely in the hands of the religious orders, and that the most eloquent preachers of those orders are willing to surrender public life and all its attractions in order to give themselves to the daily drudgery, as some would esteem it, of teaching boys. Lacordaire and Didon are cited as examples. No doubt there is great wisdom in this Romish policy. Evangelicals have perhaps hardly realised how much they would regain by retaining a hold upon the education of children ; but, per contra, they have not had in their ranks the bulk of the rich who can send their sons to expensive boarding-schools. English boys of the middle and upper classes have to take their chance in the public schools. This, however, might be and would be a gain, if a custom arose for able young Christians, both men and women, to consecrate themselves to the work of teaching for Christ's sake. Under any system their devotion and consistency would make converts.

The hon. sec. of the Evangelical Lay Preachers' Association, who ought to know something about the subject, gives it as his opinion that "lay" preaching is not a decreasing power in the land. This is valuable and gratifying testimony, though we cannot help thinking that with the decline of our rural population and the increase of the large towns, there is not quite so much lay preaching as there used to be. The continuance and efficiency of it are of the greatest importance to the churches.

"It's done a power of good," said a Yarmouth sailor to a representative of the Daily News, when he asked him what he thought of the Mission to Deep-Sea Fishermen. "It ain't the same life as it used to be, owing to what the Mission have done." The copers, or floating grog shops, are done away with. The men are not "drownded" uncared for, as of old. Their wants are looked after in every way. It is something achieved to have done so much, and to have it honestly commended by an old salt to a newspaper man. One is just a trifle suspicious as to how much colouring is put into these "Seaside Studies" by a skilful pen, but even when a good deal has been allowed for, it is gratifying to have work which we know to be good well spoken of.

"No one ever landed on English soil with more hatred in his heart for a race than I had for the English, but the more I lived among them, saw the English national life, mixed with them, found where the heart-beat of the nation was, the more I loved them." This is the utterance of Swami Vivekananda in a book just published. He was chosen to represent the Hindoos at the Parliament of Religions in Chicago, and the reception given on his return by his fellow-countrymen proved in what high esteem he is held by them. Comparing the above statement with the present Indian troubles, the reflections inevitably suggest themselves, "Are we fairly represented in India? What are the traits in our countrymen there which thus embitter even the most intelligent natives against us?" Of course, cognisance must be taken of our necessary interference with some of the crude and cruel customs of heathenism, but while we have professed to show them a better way, there is not infrequently a conflict of influence between the missionaries and the other European residents.

When Paul wrote his letters to the Churches he kept in mind the objections and difficulties of some to whom his words would be read. He did not content himself with a formal and positive statement of truth. When setting forth the doctrine of salvation by faith, in his letter to the Romans, he remembers how some uphold the law as a means of salvation, and how others will object that salvation by grace means liberty to sin. To these he replies as he passes along, and his main theme receives thereby no injury or loss. In the rush of his great chapter on the resurrection, he suddenly remembers that some man will say: "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" To him he gives an answer which contains some of the grandest suggestions as to the nature of the spiritual life beyond. Now could not this method be followed with great advantage by some preachers? Before preaching might they not remember how one has one difficulty and another another, and just think how to meet them intelligently and kindly? The mere acknowledgment that a hearer has a real difficulty is sometimes a help to him to overcome it.

Will our young friends consider the wisdom and propriety, or otherwise, of an exaggerated and stilted style of expression now prevalent? The English language is not so poverty-stricken as to have only one adjective or adverb or verb, like a general servant or maid-of-all-work. One of the most overworked and abused words in this generation is "awful." Everything is awful, and if an adverb is required to intensify an adjective we are assured, by juveniles of all ages, that they are awfully sorry, awfully glad, awfully busy, awfully tired, awfully happy, awfully jolly. Other people are awfully generous, awfully mean, awfully kind, awfully sharp, awfully good, awfully bad, awfully indifferent, and so on, awfully ad nauseam, until, as Hood said of the poor flower-girl, "she hates the smell of roses": so we are sick of "awfully."

Another word prostituted by this stupid trick of exaggeration is "loathe." It is a valuable and expressive verb, but if used to do duty for dislike, and if our feminine and effeminate friends persist in assuring us that they loathe porridge, loathe sugar in their tea, loathe tea without sugar, loathe a dress or a hat or a ribbon of which they are tired, this word also will have to be cast aside as one that has lost its meaning. The abuse of words not only degrades language, but deteriorates the perceptive faculty, the balance of mind, and the power to distinguish between things that differ. It is not without sufficient reason that we plead for truthfulness in ordinary speech. Christ dwelling in our hearts by faith will save us from speaking unadvisedly with our lips.

The "Progressive programme" for the School Board contest that is just about to open in London has been put forward. Its central feature is a determination to keep to the "compromise" of 1891 on the religious question to resist all attempts to introduce dogmatic formulas for the children, or tests for the teachers, and to refuse to substitute the definitions of the Churches for the words of the Bible as the basis of instruction." The Trades' Unions Council last week passed a resolution advocating "secular teaching," but the discussion proved that this was done not from any real objection to non-sectarian religious instruction, but out of protest against the High Church party's attempt to capture elementary schools in the interests of Sacerdotalism. It is thus growing clearer day by day that those who would force on the religious controversy are simply playing into the hands of Secularism.

It is evident the Free Churches will need to stand firm at the coming election, not only in London, but in the provinces, too, for the maintenance of Bible teaching in the schools. In some boards no subject is regarded with so much supercilious contempt as this one. Such feeling is doubtless largely due to the petty acrimonious spirit which has been manifested in its discussion. All Christians should demand the morning reading of the Scripture, on the ground that no book is so capable of fitting the children for the duty and temptation of future years as is the Word of God.

The Pope is alarmed at the Zionist movement for the purchase of Palestine, with a view to Jewish re-settlement in the land; and he has instructed his representative at Constantinople to do all in his power to frustrate the proposal. Of course the Pope himself has certain schemes for obtaining the Holy Land from the infidel. Christian expectation, however, looks forward to Israel being once more in possession of the land of patriarchal peace, of prophetic fire, and Christian love. The long line of promises gives the land to Israel, but faith in the God of their fathers is needful if those promises are to be fulfilled with heavenly blessing. Should the people go back in unbelief, as many interpreters of prophecy hold, then it will be for further controversy with God. We know how that controversy will end; "every tongue shall confess that Jesus Christ is Lord."

The Bishop of Durham (Dr. Westcott) has just published an interesting little book on "Some Lessons of the Revised Version of the New Testament," with a view of showing the duty of readers of the Bible and preachers generally to adopt it in preference to the Authorised Version. It has been a matter of surprise to Biblical scholars that the latter still holds the field so generally in public ministrations. Dr. Westcott says that it is quite as much used as the A.V. was when it had only been sixteen years before the public, and that it is steadily winning its way. One of the objections felt by most readers is the disturbance caused to the memory by the substitution of new for familiar phrases, but this is not a valid argument in view of the importance of knowing the exact meaning of Holy Writ, and it will pass with growing familiarity. The aim of the reviser has been to make the English Bible representative of the spirit as well as the letter of the original, and to get back as nearly as possible to the actual words of the inspired writers.

The French Protestant Churches are coming to the rescue of the L.M.S. in its Madagascar troubles, and accepting the reversion of Protestant missionary work in that island. Unfortunately, their strength is scarcely equal to the task, which will tax their utmost resources. The L.M.S. is trying its utmost to preserve Protestantism, by waiving its claims on condition that the work will be taken up by Frenchmen. The future is, humanly speaking, very dark; for the French Protestants are not only weak in numbers and wealth, but they will have to fight the bitter hostility of the Jesuits, who have made English missionary work impossible. But the worst trials of faith are often converted by God into a means of unexpected success; and Christianity may yet come out of the ordeal purified, and strengthened—as it has once before.

The Physical Necessity of the Sabbath.

Rev. Alfred Rowland, in a recent sermon, entitled, "Is Sunday Observance Worth Maintaining," said:—"Apart from its religious uses, the public observance of the Sabbath is for the advantage of the nation, and it is on this ground only that it should be legally enforced. When Wilberforce was in the midst of overwhelming anxiety and labour on behalf of the slaves, he declared that he owed the continuance of his mental powers to the periodical return of the Sunday; in writing to a friend he gave him this warning: 'If you don't observe the Sabbath you will kill either yourself or your mind.' Many a man has broken down under the strain of uninterrupted toil, because he refused to welcome and use aright the God-appointed rest-day. Depend upon it, the man who keeps holy the Sabbath is best able also to obey the other half of the command, 'Six days shalt thou labour.'"

A Christless Bible.*

(Concluded.)

LET us turn to the New Testament and see what it is that the Apostles, and the Evangelists, and Christ Himself, have to say. What is the message of Jesus, and John, and Peter, and Paul, after you have blotted out the Gospel of a Divine Redeemer? What is the New Testament worth without our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ? What does it mean? Let us consider the question honestly and fairly and candidly.

There are three things which characterise the New Testament. They distinguish it from all other literature in the world, so far as I know. First, it throws a new and intensely searching light upon human sin; second, it has the deepest and most piercing sense of human sorrow; and third, it is written as no other book ever was written—in the very presence of death.

First.—The New Testament is filled with a profound and burning sense of moral evil in the world. It reveals, as no other book in the world does, the inmost nature of that evil in the heart of man, and its outward manifestation as going through his whole life, even a life which in the world's view is respectable and decent. It emphasizes the essential guilt of sin in the fact that there are no possible excuses for it, because the essence of sin lies in the choice of the individual himself. It discloses the destiny of sin, which is inevitable wrath and destruction. Nowhere else in all literature will you find such a realistic picture as the photograph which the New Testament gives of sin. And it was Jesus of Nazareth who gave the light in which this photograph was taken. It was He who illumined the secret sources of sin in the heart of man and its sure and relentless consequences, its disgrace, its terror, and its might.

Jesus of Nazareth said that there was, in this world, a force, an influence, a spirit, desiring, seeking, and working evil continually, for the sake of evil; an unclean spirit; a father of lies, ready to thrust falsehood into every man; an enemy of souls, desiring to possess souls, and sift them, and torture them, and destroy them. Now, I am inclined to take that teaching of Jesus literally, and to believe that evil is embodied in a personal devil. One thing is sure, Jesus reveals evil as a positive, organised, malignant, active power. There is a kingdom of Satan lying all around us, fighting against the good. This conflict between duty and passion, between temptation and principle, is going on in the world, not as a game, not as a trifling affair; it is a continual warfare between good and evil, and you and I are thrown into the midst of it, naked, helpless, and defenceless.

We are cast at birth into the midst of this conflict. Unseen, mighty, skilful enemies are against us on every side, but there is no one to fight with us, or for us. There is no Divine deliverer. There is no captain of salvation. There is no conqueror of Satan. Christ has not come to rescue our souls. There was simply a man, Jesus, who lived in Palestine, who said these things.

WE HAVE LOST THE BATTLE ALREADY.

We have sinned, but Christ does not say, "I have power on earth to forgive sins"—or if He said it He was mistaken. We are astray and wandering, but Christ does not come to seek and to save us. He says, "Find your own way." We are guilty and condemned, but Christ does not say, "I am the Good Shepherd that giveth his life for the sheep." He does not say, "I am come to lay down my life as a ransom." Nor does He say that "God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." There was no atoning sacrifice on Calvary. There was no redeeming blood shed on the cross. There was only a martyr's death—oh, the pity of it! There was only a new exhibition of the horror and the power of human sin.

THAT IS CHRISTIANITY WITHOUT CHRIST.

Read on through the New Testament, if you dare. Read on, and see what becomes of the experience of the Apostles and the early Christians when Christ is annulled. Something or somebody had incredibly deepened or intensified their sense of sin. And it was just this sense of sin that separated them from the easy, reckless, wicked pagan world. But the cause which produced that sense of sin was not the appearance of the Son of God to redeem the world. That was a dream. That was a delusion. That was a foolish dogma of superstition. We must leave all that out of their testimony.

Now listen to Paul: "As by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned; even so there was no grace of God, and the gift of grace by the one Man, Jesus Christ, did not abound unto many." "Sin reigned unto death, but grace did not reign through righteousness unto eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord." "I see a different law in my members warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity under the law of sin, which is in my members. Oh, wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death? I thank God through nobody!" "God commendeth his love towards us, in that while we were yet sinners nobody died for us." "God is not in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself." "There is no mediator between God and man." "The life that I now live in the flesh I live by faith in myself, for the Son of God did not love me, nor give Himself for me."

Read the Epistle to the Hebrews: "Having then no high priest who hath passed into the heavens, let us not draw near with boldness unto the throne of grace, for we shall receive no mercy nor grace to help in time of need." "For we are not come unto Jesus, the Mediator of the New Covenant, but unto Mount Sinai, that burns with fire."

Hearken to St. Peter: "We know we were not redeemed with corruptible things, as with silver and gold, from your vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers; nor with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot, because Christ never suffered for sin, the righteous for the unrighteous, that He might bring us to God." "Wherefore, not having seen Him, we love Him not, neither do we rejoice in Him, since we receive not the end of our faith, even the salvation of our souls."

Hearken to St. John: "If any man sin, we have no advocate with the Father; neither is there any propitiation for our sins, nor for the sins of the whole world." "Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that He did not love us, and did not send his Son to be the propitiation for our sin."

THAT IS YOUR NEW TESTAMENT WITHOUT JESUS CHRIST.

Take it and make what you can of it; but for my part I do not see how any man can want to keep it in his house, or even turn the leaves of such a book as that. I do not see how any man can find peace or comfort in it.

The second thing that strikes us in the New Testament is, that it has a very deep and piercing sense of the pains and sorrows and troubles common to human life. It is full of poor people, and sick people, and persecuted people. Surely there was never anyone who lived who knew as much of the dark side of life as Jesus did. We may know something of it. But He was born in poverty, surrounded by want. He knew what it meant to be hungry, thirsty, and homeless. He walked among cripples, and lepers, and blind men, and demoniacs; there was no kind of deformity or anguish in the world that did not come crawling through the dust of those Palestine roads to his feet to draw help from Him. His disciples saw the same side of life; they were in contact with the miseries of humanity all the time. They knew very well that life was not a pleasant pastime in a garden of roses. They felt in their own persons the rough side of it. They had thorns in the flesh, the pangs of physical anguish, the fatigue of exhausting toil, the confinement of prison, the cruelty of torture, and all the nameless ills that flesh is heir to. Read the New Testament, and it must leave the impression upon you that this is a hard life and a world full of trouble.

THERE ARE TWO CONSOLATIONS that we find in this Book, as the Church has read it; but they both disappear when we take away the Divine Christ. First is the promise of future reward and peace to those who suffer patiently in Christ's name, and for his sake. "In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." What is left of that promise when you take away the Divine Christ? The dream of an enthusiast; no substance in it; no authority to fulfil it. Paul says: "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day." What nonsense, Paul! Have you not heard that the Lord in whom you trust was only a man like yourself? He had no Divine power. You have given your life for nought, and your suffering for a vain vision of recompense.

But there is another thing in the New Testament that consoles us for the hardships of life, and that is the sense of Christ's sympathy in our sorrows, "the fellowship of the sufferings of Christ." Paul says, "I now rejoice in my sufferings for you, and fill up that which remains of the afflictions of Christ." Peter says, "Inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings, rejoice." This thought that Christ is with us in our pains and sorrows; that all our afflictions really bind us closer in mystical union with Him; that we are crucified with Christ—this is the thing that makes it possible to bear the sorrows of life that we could not bear in any other way. When death comes into our household; when sickness and suffering and loss come and lay their hands upon us, we could not bear it if we did not know that Christ is with us. A dream! Christ did not bear our sins in his body on the tree. Christ does not stand by every sufferer. There is no Christ, and Jesus, who might have sympathised with you if He had been alive now,—

> Jesus is dead; far hence He lies,
> In some lone Syrian town;
> And on his grave, with shining eyes,
> The Syrian stars look down.

"Ah!" you say, "but God sympathises with me in my sorrows." Does He? Does the God who made this bright, beautiful heaven, and set the sky with stars—does this God know anything about the pains that rack our human hearts? How do you know? How can you know

IF CHRIST HAS NEVER COME TO TELL US?

I tell you, a man or woman with a breaking heart might go out into this beautiful world today, and walk up and down, and look up to the blue sky, and the heart might break again with the thought that there is no word of sympathy; that the Divine being has no share in the suffering and the pain and anguish and tears and grief which rend and rack us here below, if there were no Christ, who as God wept at the grave of Lazarus and in the garden, and who as God died upon the cross, in order that He might know, with us, what it is to suffer.

Then this New Testament is the book which brings us most closely face to face with the fact of death in the midst of human life. It is written from beginning to end in the presence of the plain and awful truth: "It is appointed unto all men once to die, and after death the judgment." The heathen, for the most part, covered up this fact of death, and hid it in flowers as far as they could. And that is the tendency of the world without the Word of God—to hide death, keep it out of the way. But the Christians recognised it, looked it in the eyes, and prepared to meet it, and conquered all its terrors, and transformed it into a joy. By their faith in what? Their faith in the atonement and the resurrection of Jesus Christ their Divine Lord; nothing else. "Through death He overcame him who had the power of death," and opened the gates of heaven to all believers. He lives in glory, interceding for us; He lives, and will answer for every soul that trusts in Him, at the judgment seat, "I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed unto Him." "I have a desire to depart, and be with Christ, which is far better." "Now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the firstfruits of them who are asleep." "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall we also appear with Him in glory." Beautiful,

WONDERFUL, CELESTIAL DELUSION!

Christ is gone; we know not where He is. Jesus descended into the tomb, which He did not conquer; it conquered Him. The stone was not rolled away. He has not ascended unto his Father, and our Father; unto his God, and our God. He has vanished. That is all. Christ is not risen. Yes, "it is appointed to all men once to die"—that is certain—"and after death the judgment"—that is possible. How awful it would be if it were true; for "even as Christ has never been offered to bear the sins of many, so shall He never again appear without sin unto salvation to them that look for Him."

That is Christianity without Christ. That is the only kind of religion that can be preached by those who have ceased to believe in the only begotten Son of God, who was "conceived by the Holy Ghost, and born of the Virgin Mary, and suffered under Pontius Pilate," and rose from the dead to bring us unto God. This is the best kind of religion that any man here can have until he personally accepts the Lord Jesus Christ as his Divine Saviour. A religion which condemns our sins, but is indifferent to our sorrows and leaves us to die alone.

Is that the Gospel which rose like a new sunrise on the ancient world? Ah! no; it was something utterly different which the Apostles proclaimed with trumpet voice around the world. It was something utterly different which came like a new current of life and existence into the heart of man, filling it again with warmth, and hope, and joy, and courage. It was the Gospel that "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself." It is something utterly different today that is ringing and echoing in the teaching of the men whose voice is heard around the world, and who, in whatever language they speak, however simply, however plainly, have power to move the hearts of men. It is the Gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the personal Saviour of sinners.

That is the Gospel we need to believe. That is the Gospel we need to understand, and get into our own hearts, that we may be able to preach it. We need to come so close to Christ that we shall touch Him as a person; feel the throb of his heart and the pulse of his life in our lives; feel that He, the real, living, imperishable Jesus, a personal being, an individual, a man, a God, the Son of God, the Son of Man, the Saviour, the Redeemer, the crucified One, the Rescuer of our souls—He is Christianity; He is the Gospel. Then, when we get our feet planted on that rock, the Divinity of our Saviour Jesus Christ, then the storms of criticism and debate may rise around us in the world, but they cannot move us.

Suggestive Readings.

THE SONGS OF DEGREES.—IV.

Psa. cxxix.—THROUGH MUCH TRIBULATION.

THE path of the servant and witness—whether under the Old Covenant he witnessed that God is God (Isa. xliii. 10—12); or under the New, that Jesus is the Christ, and that He is risen (Acts i. 8; ii. 31, 32; xvii. 3)—is a path of suffering. "Many a time have they afflicted me from my youth, may Israel now say...but they have not prevailed against me." So "they that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution" (2 Tim. iii. 12). Hear a true servant of the Israel of God in Col. i. 24; 2 Cor. vi. 1—10, xi. 23—33. "As dying, and behold we live"; no, "they have not prevailed, though the plowers plowed upon his back and made long their furrows."

The Psalmist, according to the Old Covenant, curses his persecutors; but the Mediator of the New and Better Covenant pleads, "Father, forgive them."

Abel's blood for vengeance
Calleth to the skies;
But the blood of Jesus
For our pardon cries.

Psa. cxxx.—OVERTAKEN IN A FAULT.

The writer has fallen into sin, cries for forgiveness, waits on Jehovah, and hopes in his word. He watches for his Lord, for his Adonai, more than for the morning. As in Psa. li. David will teach transgressors God's ways of grace; so here the Psalmist's painful experience shall strengthen Israel to hope in Jehovah. If for me there is plenteous redemption, so also for Israel. If He has not been strict to mark my iniquities, for the Redeemer's sake, He will redeem Israel from all his iniquities. What He is to the member He is to the whole body. If there is a laver of regeneration for the individual believer, so also "Christ loved the Church and gave Himself for it, that He might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word," etc. (Titus iii. 5; Eph. v. 23-27).

Psa. cxxxi.—BLESSED ARE THE POOR IN SPIRIT.

Nothing humbles us like sin forgiven. David is the writer. Now, humbled and contrite, he knows the first beatitude—the foundation of all the rest. Perhaps he had before exercised himself in things too wonderful for him, and been in danger of presumptuous sin (see Psa. xix. 13, 1 Tim. iii. 6), but now he has quieted himself, and his soul is as a child weaned from his mother (Nature) (Psa. xlv. 10; S. Song viii. 1, 2, 5).

Psa. cxxxii.—"LOOKING OFF UNTO JESUS."

The weaned soul ceases from man, from self, and turns his thoughts to God and to his covenant; to David, God's beloved, the man after his own heart; to all the afflictions of David; to the sure mercies of David; to the exceeding great and precious promises of God.

In vv. 1-10 the Psalmist spreads before Jehovah the sufferings of David and his faithful and devoted service, seeking only the glory of God. In 11-18 Jehovah replies that he has sworn to David: it is truth: He will not turn from it. David had found in Zion a place for the ark of the covenant, where Jehovah should dwell between the cherubim. And now Jehovah says that He has chosen Zion; he hath desired it for his habitation. "This is my rest for ever, for I have desired it." The Psalmist looks onward to the crowning day of the true David, great David's greater Son. "His enemies will I clothe with shame, but upon himself shall his crown flourish."

So under the New Covenant, souls weaned from nature and from self look off unto Jesus, "who, for the joy that was set before Him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God. They meditate on the sufferings of Christ and the glories that shall follow, and present them before God (Heb. xii.).

And spread before thy glorious eyes.

They look back upon these Psalms, knowing that

The New is in the Old concealed;
The Old is by the New revealed.

And as the twelfth of Exodus speaks to them of the Lamb of God, of Christ our Passover, so into these Songs of Ascent they read the New Covenant revelation and sing "Unto Him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood; and made us a kingdom of priests (Exod. xix. 6) unto his God and Father, unto Him be glory and dominion unto the ages of the ages. Amen." M.

The Christian's Birthright.

BY REV. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN.

THOSE who are dedicating their lives to teaching the truths of the deeper Christian life do not claim to be expounding a new system of theology, or revealing some freshly-discovered secret. We are simply calling our fellow-Christians to a recognition of the infinite possibilities and glories of their birthright—a birthright which, alas! some of us sold all too long for much less than a mess of pottage.

The collective application of this to church life would mean the return of our churches from worldly methods and unsanctified effort, to the guidance and power of the Holy Spirit, and absolute reliance on Him alone; and this would solve our problems clean along the line, whether of finance, members, or character.

Surely all the signs of the times point to a great opportunity at the doors. In the heathen lands old systems are dying and men are groping for our God, and the habitations of cruelty are a perpetual sob for the love of the Father. At home—both sides of the water—men by thousands are conscious of heart hunger, whether they name it "ennui" or "despair" matters not, and in that very sense of need is the opportunity of Jesus Christ. Let his church be true to Him and sweep out the whole herd of carnal peril tricks to gain a crowd and "run a concern"; and by individual appropriation of the fulness of blessing create a collective force on divine lines, and what a reaping there will be far and near.—Congregationalist.

Aldershot.—A correspondent states that a small soldiers' home has been opened at 141, Victoria-road, Aldershot, by Ensign Askew, of the Salvation Army, and a good work is being done in reaching and saving soldiers in the camp. Mr. Askew will be glad of help in the maintenance of the work.

"Righteous Compromise."

LADY HENRY SOMERSET was seated under the shade of the elm-tree one summer afternoon, thinking once more of the old insoluble enigma, 'Was He? Was He not? If He was not, from whence came I? If He is, what am I, and what am I doing with my life?' Lady Henry had a party of friends at the Priory. She had strolled out into the garden in a somewhat listless fashion before afternoon tea, not dreaming that anything would happen. But as she sat at the foot of the elm-tree, meditating, she heard a voice, not with her bodily ear, but in the inner depths of the soul, which has no need of such material mechanism. And the voice said, 'Act as if I were, and thou shalt know I Am!'" She betook herself to meditation and prayer; after dismissing her guests with the announcement that "she was leaving Society for solitude, if haply she might in privacy find joy and peace," she went and lived in retirement. "For the most part of the years she spent here her Bible was her chief counsellor. Occasionally she endeavoured to ascertain what kind of counsel or of guidance others had to offer." Lord Radstock, Dr. Pusey, and Mrs. Pearsall Smith were of the number. "Mrs. Josephine Butler, who had always been among her heroines, and whom she met later on, was sympathetic and full of affectionate tenderness." So, according to the writer of a "sketch" of her, who evidently had information at first hand, "she lived alone, educating her boy, adored by her domestics, but seeing few visitors; working out for herself, step by step, the duty to which she was called." It might be called, so far as man can see, an ideal conversion, if we were free to distinguish between one conversion and another—peaceful, silent, apart from any instrumentality save that of the Scriptures, well assured, a work of the Spirit of God.

And its first fruits were in harmony with its quiet origin. Bible readings in the kitchens of her farmers, mothers' meetings in Eastnor Castle, and village temperance meetings, engaged her attention. Evangelistic work was encouraged on certain portions of her estate which were without spiritual ministrations.

Next her thoughts were drawn to the Labour cause and the cause of woman; the unity of the whole moral movement of our time impressed itself upon her. Whether she has adequately realised that the well-being of mankind is best promoted by maintaining the spiritual forces in purity and vigour may be questioned. The machine seems to have occupied more thought and care than the living power which alone can put it into motion. There is no doubt something captivating in the idea that woman "the Life-giver should also be the Law-giver," but spiritual paralysis in some measure will fall upon the man or the woman who makes a political object too prominent in his or her life, or who does not seek it in a spirit of absolute justice. We do not question the value of this object, or imply that it assumed the place of spiritual things, yet from this point there seems to come a change.

A visit to America carried in it very powerful formative influences. At Chicago a friendship of the most enthusiastic description was formed with Miss Willard. The friendly "sketch" of her says; "Both were enthusiastic total abstainers, putting Temperance in this age only second to the Gospel. Both also were profoundly convinced that, while beginning with the Gospel, the work of social regeneration must be as comprehensive and many-sided as are the evils which they sought to combat; and both saw—what, indeed, it does not need a very profound perception to discover—that the approaching advent of woman in the political sphere affords the chief ground for hoping that the future times will be better than these." These two ardent souls, Miss Willard and Lady Henry, thought that women must henceforth be banded together in America and Britain as the leaders of the great progressive forces of the world.

In 1893 these thoughts were presented in a practical shape to the British Women's Temperance Association for its adoption; instead of Temperance alone being its work, the Association was to take "the oversight of all branches of moral, social, and political reform, which are radically connected with the cause of Temperance." Chief among these related subjects was that of Purity. Feeling ran very high against this omnibus form of association. Not, perhaps, that there was much, if any, difference of opinion on the necessity of work being done for the various objects named. No doubt most of the members were engaged, either directly or indirectly, in doing the things proposed to be undertaken unitedly. But many thought that Temperance should stand by itself, and that the other branches of reform should be dealt with on their own merits. The plan of the leader, however, was adopted by a large majority, and an influential section withdrew to form another Union of women for Temperance work alone.

A period of flowing popularity now set in. The great gifts of the victorious leader, her distinguished rank, her liberality, her activity, gave her a commanding position. The newspapers, as if moved by one hand, chronicled her doings; huge meetings assembled to hear her addresses. It was a time of serious peril both to work and worker. The atmosphere of praise and the possession of power are dangerous to the purest hearts. With no taint of jealousy in their minds, not a few regarded these days as fraught with elements of evil. The B.W.T.A., with its confident captain, looked like a good ship rushing along with all sails set and a blue sky overhead; but so fine a day was not unlikely to bring thunder and rain.

It might have been thought that with such a body of able, intelligent, and zealous women as were now openly banded together to oppose the giant evils of our times, no action could have been taken that would strengthen any of these evils, without a prompt and vehement protest being made against it by the new champions of purity of living. This persuasion could hardly fail to have been strengthened by the hospitality which Lady Henry showed to the American ladies, Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell, who had so bravely laid bare the whole iniquitous system of regulated immorality in India in the supposed interests of our army. The women of the B.W.T.A. had good ground for believing that at least their President, who had led them into their new position, would not falter.

But in April last, on her "sole responsibility," though the majority of the B.W.T.A. were strongly opposed to all forms of State regulation of immorality, Lady Henry published in the Times a letter she sent to Lord George Hamilton, highly commending his plan for seeking to improve the health of the Army, but objecting that it did not go far enough in the direction of regulation. Her own views were stated in six of the most repulsive proposals ever published. It is hard to believe that any woman could have penned them—and it is impossible to think that she ever would appear before an audience of either men or women to uphold them. They have been accurately described as the condensed version of Reslif de la Bretonne, who formulated the French system of regulation. That the motive was right, and the object aimed at good, may be conceded. But there is an air of conscious superiority in the letter, as of one who has made a great discovery, reconciling the moral and scientific aspects of the question. There is a boast of applying "sound and ruthless logic." Yet had the author known more of the subject she would have known that she had proposed nothing new.

A doubt seems also to have crept into Lady Henry's mind as to the moral soundness of the six proposals. In a subsequent declaration she speaks of "something to be said for a righteous COMPROMISE"; again, she says: "All sin, or rather sense of sin, is relative, that is to say, the code of ethics is moulded by the stage of evolution which the individual or the community has reached." That is to say, her proposals are a compromise, and the code of ethics is to be decided by the current feeling of any time. Such a position cannot be maintained; it is immoral. No vehement disavowal can alter the fact. The warmth with which Lady Henry denies occupying an unsound moral position is partly an evidence that its unsoundness is at least suspected by her. Calm thought must show her that on the subject of purity there can be no "righteous compromise"; it is as impossible as an honest theft or a truthful lie.

The members of the B.W.T.A. have been brought by their President into a false position, and unless they set themselves right, they and their great cause must suffer. There yet is time to save the situation; but only by putting "truth before everything," and by being absolutely loyal to Christ, can it be done.

Evelina Hospital for Sick Children.

THIS institution for the benefit of sick children of the poor derives its support entirely from voluntary contributions. It is situated in Southwark Bridge Road, S.E., and has for Secretary, Mr. T. S. Chapman. During the past year considerable alterations and improvements have been made, and a much needed extension of the building has been commenced, including provision for adequately dealing with the out-patient department. Of the 627 patients in the Hospital last year, sixty-four were sent to Convalescent Homes in the country and at the sea-side, about a third of these entirely at the expense of the Institution. Letters for Convalescent Homes and contributions in aid of the convalescent fund are urgently needed; and all expenses incurred in giving children recovering from sickness necessary change of air are defrayed out of this fund.

Sonnet.

No man can come to Me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him.—John vi. 44.
I have loved thee with an everlasting love; therefore with loving kindness have I drawn thee.—Jer. xxxi. 3.

How came it that I did in discontent
With life as I had known it, seek the seat
Of our Redeemer, there before his feet
To bow in sudden lowliness? Who lent
My soul such yearning that I knelt intent
On having that I sought—a new, complete
And never-ending life—a life replete
With blessing? Ah! I since have learned who sent—
Who drew me, rather, though I knew it not,
Because He loved me with so great a love
And longed to have my love back in return.
It was my Father—God! Though I forgot
And utterly unheeded Him above,
He loved and drew—a secret sweet to learn!

A. GERTRUDE HUMPIDGE.

China Inland Mission.

ST. MARTIN'S TOWN HALL, Charing Cross, was filled on the evening of Tuesday, 7th inst., with a large muster of Christian people assembled to bid prayerful farewell to a number of missionaries, connected with this actively useful organisation, who are sailing this autumn to work for God in China—some for the first time, others returning to former spheres of spiritual labour. Five of those thus departing are ladies, and the whole band numbers over forty, in addition to the seventeen workers already sent out by the Mission this year. Mrs. Stott had sailed for New York, en route for China, that very morning.

The chairman on this occasion was Capt. the Hon. R. Moreton, in place of Mr. Victor Buxton, who was unavoidably detained in Switzerland. Lord Radstock opened the proceedings with prayer, and the chairman read Psalm cxlv. Speaking was almost entirely confined to the prospective voyagers, whose utterances were marked by much holy enthusiasm; and they must have derived much encouragement from the sympathy manifested in the gathering together of so large a company to bid them God-speed. General features of the speeches were earnest requests addressed to the hearers, first for praise to God respecting what He has already done through some of his servants; and then for prayer that wisdom and grace may be divinely vouchsafed to the new and old workers, with abundant blessing upon those among whom the missionaries are to live and labour.

Mr. Edward Hunt, who, with his wife, is returning to Gan-k'ing, where he commenced to labour in the Gospel some eight years ago, spoke in joyful strain of the great privilege conferred upon all who are called to evangelise the heathen. Mr. Hunt takes charge of a band of young men going out to China for the first time. Rev. G. F. Easton bore testimony concerning many answers to prayer in connection with his past work in a district touching the north-western provinces of Kan-suh and Shen-si. He pointed out the need for men able to train native helpers, also for more labourers to enter opening spheres of itinerant work.

From Scotland comes Miss J. R. Gold, who spoke quietly but impressively of God's gracious leadings through several years, issuing in the present step on her part. Then Mr. W. H. Aldis gave a stimulating address, showing how, in his case, difficulties had been removed; and he closed by setting over against some supposed objections to missionary work the glories of the Saviour and of his Gospel.

The next speaker, Mr. W. W. Robertson, is a Scotsman, and described how he and a friend on the platform (Mr. A. B. Wilson) had devoted all their spare time after each day's hard work to study with a view to college training for gospelling in Africa. But, in a remarkable manner, the Lord had entirely changed their purpose, sending them to China. In preparation for this, they had enjoyed the privilege of some measure of training in the Bible Institute at Glasgow. Several of the other workers going out have also had preparation in that institution.

At this point in the meeting Rev. D. B. Hankin, of St. Jude's, Mildmay, very fervently presented before the throne of grace the subjects of thanksgiving and prayer which had been mentioned.

Mr. J. B. Sloan, secretary of the Mission, had good news to tell concerning Rev. J. Hudson Taylor's improved health, as the result of six weeks' stay in Switzerland. It was a remarkable fact that most of the young men going out had looked forward to Africa as their field of labour, but the finger of God, in his providential leadings, seemed to point them to China, in spite of their own predilections. While there are signs throughout God's Church of a higher life of consecration and sacrifice as regards personal service, yet the Church, as a whole, has not to the same extent risen to a higher level in respect of prayer for missions and giving for their support.

Other speakers were Miss E. Culverwell, who is returning to a land which she first entered in 1887; and Rev. F. W. Baller. The latter spoke of the wonderful way in which God has been opening up China to European and missionary influence during the past quarter of a century, and how faith in God and in his Word is confirmed by missionary experience in that land.

From the New Hebrides.

THE official report of the New Hebrides Mission Synod, which met at Aneityum in May last, contains deeply interesting records of religious effort and progress in that far-off field. A vote was carried in favour of a new Dayspring steamer. The Synod was cheered to realise that among the converts of the Mission there are now men qualified for pastoral work amongst the natives. Rules were adopted for the guidance of all that may be concerned in the ordination of native pastors, and during the session of the Synod a well-tried convert from Aneityum was solemnly set apart for pastoral work.

The reports from the various stations showed abundant cause for thankfulness to the Great Head of the Church. We make extracts from the minutes:—

"From almost every station some progress is reported and from most a very substantial progress. True, in some places the Evil One seems still to be permitted to delude and enslave the people, but even from these there are indications of better things in the future. As regards the Christian islands, it is encouraging to note the of many. Aneityum reports £155 worth of arrowroot contributed, equivalent to five shillings per head of men, women, and children; Erromanga reports £150 worth of arrowroot and £34 in cash, total £184; Mr. Milne (Nguna) reports £213 in cash and £342 10s. worth of arrowroot, total £555 10s; Mr. Michelsen (Tongoa), £124 in cash and £120 worth of arrowroot, total £244; giving a total of £1,138 10s. from these four stations.

"Aneityum, the mother island of the Mission, is evidently passing through one of those reactions which often occur amongst the children of those who have successfully passed out of heathenism, and the Synod commends the missionary and his teachers in an especial manner to the prayers of the Mission and its friends everywhere, that God's Spirit may be poured out, and the people of Aneityum lifted up and their goings established in the ways of the Lord. Fourteen new schools were established last year on Epi, and 101 persons were baptized. A large number are now seeking baptism, and a beginning has been made in sending out teachers to heathen islands. On the other hand, Mr. Smaill's attempts to get a footing on Paama and Lopevi have so far quite failed.

"Reports from the islands to the north of these, which, with Tanna in the south, are still mainly heathen, are almost all hopeful, and mostly bright.

on Ambrym has proved itself a great vehicle of blessing to many, both black and white, and is a very important adjunct to the work of the Mission. What is practically a new departure has been begun and carried out with a good measure of success, viz., the opening of day schools conducted in English for the children. A lady assistant was obtained for this purpose on Tongoa, and her success has been very considerable.

"Similar schools have also been carried on at Nguna and Nikaura, with like gratifying results. The reports from Tanna mentioned with special approbation the work of Mr. Forlong, the Christian trader, whose labours for the evangelisation of the people of North Tanna are being much blessed. It is cause for much thankfulness that two traders like Mr. Forlong and Mr. Bates (Aniwa), should have been moved to devote themselves to direct Christian work amongst the natives."

Some Interesting Conclusions are drawn by Lady Glenesk, in The Nineteenth Century. She gives some tables, compiled from the obituary columns of a contemporary, showing that between 1887 and 1896 thirty-two people had died at ages from 100 to 105 and upwards, and 10,806 who were over eighty. These figures, taken from one newspaper, might be considerably extended by analogous testimony; and statistics from foreign sources show that in the same period there were a dozen persons who had lived to 110. Moreover, Lady Glenesk vouches for a case, backed by credible evidence, of a French peasant woman who was born in 1760 and died in 1885, five years beyond the span accorded in Genesis to Moses.

Christian Succour to India.

MANY thousands of poor sufferers in India are made happy by the loving help of Christians in England. Many missionaries write so gratefully, and say how the natives are impressed with Christian kindness. Still it is evident that few people in England realise that, on August 20, according to a Bombay paper, there were 3,146,000 on Government relief, and that besides this there were at least as many more in great destitution who were not reached by Government relief. By the last two mails I have had forty letters from missionaries and others, and I append extracts from these, which reveal an awful amount of misery spread over thousands of square miles. The prices of grain are as high as ever, while multitudes have not an anna to purchase anything, and are dependent on our relief. Thousands are fading away, one competent observer thinks at the rate of 15,000 a week, and thousands of orphans ought to be taken in.

Radstock.

42, Eccleston-place, S.W.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

"The distress around me is terrible. Yesterday we fed 572 people and took in ninety-eight orphans. Every one of these people are simply starving."

"We have recently taken in fifty more orphans, and expect to have to take a much larger number soon. The distress shows no sign of abatement."

"The women are almost destitute of clothing. We have to refuse large numbers daily who come begging to be admitted for work. It is very sad to have to turn away starving people."

"There are 1000 orphans here, if we dare take them in. The Roman Catholics are taking many." "There are more wanderers than have been seen for some time past." "I am opening another centre of famine relief where the distress is very acute. The famine distress grows in keenness every day."

"The numbers receiving relief in our city is 2000; 150 were added yesterday. Government is doing its duty nobly, but there are multitudes that Government relief cannot reach." "All efforts come lamentably short of what is needed. The mortality among cultivators' cattle is appalling. I am told that this collectorate has lost three-quarters of its cattle. This, of course, means ruin for thousands of people."

"There are many Christians whose livelihood is gone. Their condition is most pitiable." "Nearly all the missionaries are much worn by the incessant and perplexing demands made on them." "Money gone, grain gone, no cattle, no seed; the people have not enough to sustain life; starvation, or cholera, or dysentery follow." "My numbers on famine relief have increased, and I am pressed for assistance every day and every hour of the day." The hon. sec. of the Bombay Committee says: "Oh, that the money were coming in more quickly; the needs are terrible."

Hebron Medical Mission.

Threatening clouds on the political horizon, with other difficulties and dangers, marked the close of the past year; but this good work in connection with the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, N. (superintendent, Col. J. F. Morton), has, through God's mercy, gone on unhindered. Dr. Paterson gains increasing confidence and affection among the Jews and Moslems who come under his treatment; while there is decided attention and interest during the addresses. From time to time the Book is asked for, and passages are read after the discourse is over.

Mrs. Bowie, Miss Marriott, and Miss Macpherson are busily and happily engaged for the Master among the women and girls. The village work around Hebron is undergoing encouraging development. Christian workers now seem to have earned their right to dwell among the people, their position being well defined and respected; and their presence is sought for, instead of being shunned and despised. Some friends have withheld support because of uncertainty respecting political events; but if there be possibility of curtailed opportunities, it may well be said that the time which remains should be used to the very utmost for Jew and Gentile, so that these villages once delivered into the hands of Joshua may be claimed again for the Lord Jesus Christ.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, September 19.

"Thou didst say, Woe is me now! ... but thy life will I give thee."—Jer. xlv. 3, 5.

TROUBLE is an inevitable part of human experience. "Man that is born of a woman," we are told, "is of few days and full of trouble." In addition to their share in the common heritage of man, it often falls to the lot of God's saints to suffer specially in connection with his kingdom and glory. The very association of Baruch with Jeremiah extorted the groan, "Woe is me now! for the Lord hath added sorrow to my pain."

But out of our sorrow and pain, when borne patiently and trustfully, comes the more abundant life. "Behold, I will bring evil upon all flesh, but thy life will I give unto thee." Pain casts a veil on all our pleasant earthly things, so that we take no further interest in them, and turn our thoughts to the unseen and eternal. Sorrow drives us to the God of all comfort. In the fire our dross is consumed. In travail of soul the characteristics of godliness are born. The fairest pearls are the result of wounds. The outbursting life of spring would be impossible but for winter's frost and biting winds. And therefore we can reconcile, without difficulty, our afflictions with God's tender love. "Whom He loveth He chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom He receiveth." Are you enduring chastening at this moment? Do not lose heart. "Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth"; when Jesus heard that Lazarus was dead He abode still in the same place where He was, because he loved Martha and her sister and Lazarus.

MONDAY, September 20.

"Fear not thou, O Jacob my servant, saith the Lord; for I am with thee: for I will make a full end of all the nations whither I have driven thee, but I will not make a full end of thee."—Jer. xlvi. 28.

This chapter is full of the clash and crash of war. In the most graphic and stirring words, the prophet describes the tide of Egyptian invasion, as its waters toss themselves upon the iron phalanxes of Babylon, like a rock-bound coast; to recoil, defeated and broken into myriads of foam-drops. The result to the great empire of Egypt is disastrous; her gods and kings are not able to save her from her justly-deserved punishment; she drinks the cup of indignation and wrath to her destruction.

But, amid it all, God remembers his people. They, too, are suffering from the results of their sins. And as they hear of all that has befallen greater nations than themselves they may well fear that their own fate will no less be irremediable and final. If the great kingdom of Egypt has received its death wound, from which it must slowly bleed to death, what hope can there be for Israel, captive in Babylon, while Canaan lies waste. To such fears God speaks words of tender comfort and reassurance. "Fear not thou, neither be dismayed; I will make a full end of all the nations, but I will not make a full end of thee; I will not leave thee unpunished, but will correct thee in measure; I will save thee from afar."

Oh, blessed words! If we have become the children of God by faith in Jesus, if God has ever entered into covenant with our souls, if He has taken us to be his and to give us his best—then, though we suffer chastisement, we shall not be overwhelmed by it: though we are corrected, diminished, and brought low, God will not make a full end of us: though we are pruned, we shall not be cut down to the ground. We may look out on the irretrievable disasters which overtake the ungodly with a quiet mind, for God will keep whispering in our hearts, "Fear not, I will save thee from the land of thy captivity."

"O thou sword of the Lord, how long will it be ere thou be quiet?...rest and be still. How canst thou be quiet?"—Jer. xlvii. 6-7.

O sword of the Lord; thou hast wounded us sore! Like a two-edged sword, the Word of God has pierced to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, of the joints and marrow. How deeply it has penetrated; how sharply it has cut. And even now it cannot rest. The work of discrimination and separation is still going on within us. We are constantly seeing new depths of our own utter worthlessness and evil. Possibilities of our own bad hearts, of which we had not dreamt, arise to confront us. And immediately the Divine sword sets itself to hack and hew and cut away the evil growth of selfishness, of which we have caught a glimpse.

There are times in our lives when we cry, "O thou sword of the Lord, how long ere thou be quiet: rest and be still." Will the process of purification and deliverance never be complete? Will not the destructive work of God soon end? The operation has lasted months and years; when will the Divine Surgeon lay down the knife. O knife of God, rest thee!

But how can it be quiet, seeing that the work is not done? We are not yet rid of the last remains of sin. The wound is not yet probed to the bottom. The roots of the cancerous growth of selfishness have not yet been entirely removed, and if any one of them remains all the work will have to be done again. How can it be quiet, seeing that God loves us too well to allow us to bear with us into eternity aught that will hinder our perfect fruition of bliss? How can it be quiet, seeing that this is the only world where pain can reach his saints, and He must do his work quickly, ere we reach the land where the sword of the Lord shall be placed in its scabbard, and shall be still for ever.

WEDNESDAY, September 22.

"Moab hath been at ease from his youth, and he hath settled on his lees, and hath not been emptied from vessel to vessel...therefore his taste remaineth in him."—Jer. xlviii. 11.

This beautiful and appropriate imagery, borrowed from the vineyard, speaks for itself. It would be readily appreciated by the peasant populations that toiled amid the terraced hills of Moab. To prevent scum and sediment, the newly-made wine was emptied from one vessel to another until it reached the condition of perfect fluidity. In Moab's case there had been nothing comparable to this, and therefore the rank, coarse taste remained in him, and he had settled on his lees.

What an insight this affords of God's method with the souls of men! Why these constant removals from town to town, from church to church, from situation to situation? Why this perpetual change and revolution in our plans? Why this incessant going into captivity to irksome and trying circumstances? All this is part of God's manufacture of the wine of life. We must be emptied from vessel to vessel, else we should settle on our lees, and become thick and raw and unpalatable.

When the next change comes in your life, do not fear it. You will gain, not lose, by it. The blessed God will see to it that no drop of the precious fluid shall be spilt on the ground. With the tenderest care He conducts the whole operation. You will understand it all one day. In the meanwhile trust Him utterly, and look on that new house, situation, or locality as one of his vessels, which He has chosen, and which is to serve some specific and Divine purpose.

THURSDAY, September 23.

"Dwell deep."—Jer. xlix. 8.

As originally spoken, these words summoned the people of Edom to seek the shadows of impenetrable forests, and retire into the secrecy of the caves and dens of the rocks. The deeper their hiding place, the better it would be when the storm of invasion swept across the land.

Dwell deep in the peace of God.—"God's peace is so deep and blessed that it cannot be fathomed or explained; the fugitive into its sacred secrets cannot be followed or dragged forth to perish by the merciless pack of the wolves of care. Men of the world cannot understand that mystery of Peace, but the believer knows the way into it, and makes it his hiding-place and pavilion. He sleeps like his Master in the stern, while storms sweep the waters.

Dwell deep in communion with God.—Hide in God. Get away from the rush and strife around, and go alone into the clear still depths of his nature. The Rhone loses all its silt in the deep, clear waters of Geneva's lake. A few hasty words of prayer will not avail for this. A day's climb is often necessary before one can reach the heart of the mountains, the sublime glory of the Alpine summits.

Dwell deep in stillness of soul.—Do not live on the outside of life, in the outer courts of the temple of the soul. Get within. God awaits thee there. Centre thyself. When the world is full of alarm and harassments, study to be quiet. Dwell deep.

FRIDAY, September 24.

"They have forgotten their resting-place" (their place to lie down in).—Jer. l. 6.

These words may often be said of us. A time of emergency arises, the necessity for instant and vigorous action seems overpowering, we fail to see what course to adopt. Then we get flurried and excited, we run from one to another, we lose our sleep. All our earnest resolutions to abide in Christ and live in his fellowship are forgotten. We have forgotten our resting-place.

Or we are in the midst of a great campaign of work. From morning to night we are plunged in a mass of calculations and activities. There is no time to take our meals, much less to obtain opportunities for prayer and fellowship with God. Our rooms without, our souls within, are littered with the symptoms of the many absorbing interests which are monopolising our attention. We have forgotten our resting-place.

Or, perhaps, it is a time of great temptation. Hour after hour the foe returns to the attack. We have done our best to withstand him, but have hit out without precision, have fired at random. Again, we have forgotten our resting-place. The place where we lie down is under the shadow of the Cross. Whilst we remain, there we are perfectly safe and blessed, though the mountains be removed into the heart of the seas, as was the case when these words were written. Return unto your rest, O straying sheep. Back to the arms of Jesus, where only such frail ones as you are safe. Faith is the key to rest. Trust and Rest.

SATURDAY, September 25.

"Israel hath not been forsaken, nor Judah of his God, of the Lord of hosts, though their land was filled with sin against the Holy One of Israel."—Jer. li. 5.

Yes, indeed, our life has been filled with sin against the Holy One of Israel. We see it now. As we look back upon the past with the light of the present reflected upon it, we see how every day has added its quota of transgression. How bitterly we must have grieved the Holy Ghost! How terribly have made the Holy One suffer! Do you wonder that Jesus still appears in Heaven as a lamb as it had been slain!

But He has not forsaken! As again we review our life, how abundant is the evidence that we have not been forsaken. Forsaken! Then God's right hand would lose its cunning. Forsaken! Then the tides that flow through the heart of God would have to leap backward. Forsaken! Then the eternal purposes would have to be frustrated. Forsaken! Then the Divine word would be forfeited, and the Divine Son would go without his meed. Sin is mighty, but there is one thing it cannot do, it cannot make God forsake those whom He has adopted into his family. Sin dragged the Archangel to the pit, but it can never wrench the believer out of the hand of God. Sin brought Christ from the throne to the Cross, but it can never cause God to leave, or cease to care for, his own.

Does this lead you to presumption? Do you say, Then I may do as I like? Ah! beware. Those that talk thus have not the mark of his children. The child loves with the love that fears to grieve God, more than to be forsaken of Him.

Madagascar and Romanism.

THE last report of the London Missionary Society reveals a deplorable reverse in the once flourishing missions of this Society in Madagascar. Two years ago it had more than a thousand congregations, and nearly 300,000 converts, 6,900 native preachers, and 74,700 scholars in its schools. The French invasion let loose all the elements of disorder latent in native society, and opportunity for Jesuit intolerance to wreck, if possible, the fair promise of the Protestant missions. The following extracts show the malignity, intolerance, and terrorism to which the missionaries and native converts are exposed, and which the French Government hardly cares to repress. The Friends, the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, and the Norwegians have also missions in Madagascar. Our extracts refer only to the London Missionary Society. One missionary writes:—

I have only fifteen village churches left out of seventy, and I have not been able to visit ten of these for months past; only I hope now to be able to visit the others, and also to do something toward resuscitating some of the ruined congregations. The fourteen mission stations in our mission district of Anativola have been broken up for the second time, and the village churches burned (p. 156-7).

Of another head station we read:—

The ravages of the rebels, in the early months of the year, plunged the Christians into misery and panic, and inflicted grievous hurt and loss upon the country churches. In forty-four out of the seventy-four congregations, the marauders plundered the evangelists and made them flee for their lives, then burnt the chapels, scattered the people, and, to all appearance, annihilated the work (p. 152).

The Jesuits are aggravating our difficulties by circulating alarming rumours, in order to cajole or terrify the Protestants into joining the Roman Church. In some places the priests are seeking, sometimes insidiously, sometimes openly, to appropriate the Protestant chapels. I heard from our catechist that a Jesuit priest had been visiting the people, and had been telling them that if they desired to be free from suspicion of disloyalty to France they should become Catholics, and start a Catholic school for their children (p. 160).

Of Ampamarinana the same monotonous tale of suffering and loss has to be told, with circumstances of even greater severity:—

Hardly any of the sixty-five churches in the district escaped. No fewer than seventeen chapels have been totally destroyed or seriously damaged by fire during the raids of the rebels. If reports are to be credited, the Jesuit priest and his representatives are responsible for this. I hope it may not be so. But whether this be true or not, I must say that the Jesuits have been very active lately in this district, and the results of their proceedings are far worse, and much more serious than the proceedings of the so-called fahavalo (robbers). Many of our people—members of our churches—have been threatened and imprisoned by the Jesuits, but on a professed change of faith and promise to become Roman Catholics have at once been released. Many good Christian people are kept in constant fear by the devilish proceedings of the Jesuits (p. 161).

The present condition of religious work and liberty in the Tsiafahy district is sad in the extreme. The further churches have been broken up by rebels. The villages connected with some twenty of the distant churches are still too disturbed to reopen religious work, and out of the twenty-four nearer churches in which it is possible to work only three churches dare assemble, and those in very small numbers. Our church at Tsiafahy is entirely in the hands of the Catholics, and not a single Protestant dares to worship openly, and nearly every scholar has been frightened into joining the Catholics.

Religious liberty is a thing talked of, but yet unknown in the churches near to and south of Tsiafahy. Malagasy Protestants treat very lightly the tactics of their heathen opponents; but what reply can they make to the representation of a great European nation with full powers of life and death in his hands, when reports of which he has full information, to say the least, are being circulated to the effect that we missionaries are the enemies of that nation, and that any native visiting us or worshipping with us will be treated as a rebel. The only course open to them is to keep silence and to worship in their homes (p. 163-4).

In the Betsileo Province it is said that the Jesuit opposition is also very powerful. Priests go about to bribe, threaten, or terrorise the converts, hinting darkly that it is a dangerous thing for the people to remain in connection with the London Missionary Society. They set afloat silly rumours, and frighten many out of their wits.

A considerable number of natives hitherto included among our adherents have forsaken us. The majority have been driven to do so from the cruel terrorism to which they have been subjected. After a most careful inquiry I do not know of a single individual in Fianarantsoa, or in the district of Isandra, who has joined the Roman Catholics from any intelligent conviction that the Romish is the truer faith, or the purer Church, or that to follow the Jesuit priest, rather than the London Missionary Society's missionary, is the safer and surer road to heaven. Every man, woman, and child who has gone forth from us and joined their ranks has been influenced by fear, or by some other even more unworthy motive.

Thus Roman Catholicism is as malignant and intolerant as of old, and French statesmen as subservient to Jesuit despotism. The future will show, as the past has done, that there is a God that judgeth in the earth. Our hope is in Him.

BLANKENBURG.

Destitute Children in Manchester.

THE numerous and diversified agencies of the boys' and girls' refuges and homes, Strangeways, Manchester, have received an important addition this year in a home for neglected motherless children which, when fully furnished, will house thirty of these little human waifs. Mr. Leonard K. Shaw, the hon. secretary, and his wife sailed for Ontario at the end of July, and arrangements were being made for them to meet at the Belleville Home a goodly number of the children emigrated in recent years, and also to visit as many as possible of the boys and girls in the homes of their adoption or employment. The good work has grown to extensive and comprehensive dimensions, and entails a large expenditure. Interesting and touching details are given in The Children's Haven for August, a little paper obtainable on application, which may still be addressed to Mr. Leonard K. Shaw, Central Refuge Strangeways, Manchester.

and the Blankenburg Convention.

IMAGINE yourself in the heart of Germany, not far from Erfurt, Eisenach, and the Wartburg—historic names, that still make the blood flow faster. The special spot on which you must concentrate your attention is the little town of Blankenburg. Not that it is famous for anything in particular. There are the picturesque ruins of an old castle (Greifenstein, where one of the German Emperors was born), and it is within a drive of Schwartzburg and the Tripstein, one of the lovely places of the world. But there is no obvious feature to distinguish Blankenburg from hundreds of other German towns. There are the same fair-haired children, toiling women, and rather solid-looking men, engaged on their fields and farms. Yet there is reason to believe that a tender sapling has been planted there which is destined to become a mighty tree—a movement inaugurated which, by God's blessing, shall make it as famous for Germany as the Convention has made Keswick for Great Britain.

On the lower slopes of the hill on which the castle stands is a terrace facing the south-west. On this stand three houses, of which one, newly built, is a little removed from the other two, but connected by a pretty garden. The houses are within easy reach, by steep stone steps, of the town that lies immediately below the terrace. The windows look over its market-place and two main streets to the glorious pine-covered hills beyond, where deer and wild boars wander, and hundreds of firs are felled every year. Here lives Fräulein von Weling, of whom you should know something.

Her mother was a Scotch lady, attached at one time to the present Queen of Sweden. Her father was a German baron. Through this connection with Great Britain, the young German girl came over to visit relatives, at the time when Reginald Radcliffe, Grant of Arndilly, and Brownlow North were holding their meetings; and beneath the burning words of the first of these she was brought to the Saviour. He did not know of it till years after, when attending a conference at Siegen, near the Rhine, presided over by the late Professor Christlieb. His standing solitarily gave her an opportunity of telling him of her great indebtedness. Those of us who knew this dear servant of the Lord can imagine how his face brightened.

During the Franco-German war, Fräulein von Weling nursed the wounded, and amongst them a young soldier from the Prussian province of Saxony, whose life she saved by her skilful and assiduous care. Out of gratitude his parents invited her to visit them year by year, and in one of those visits she became interested in a boy, whom she adopted, and who is now with her, nearly grown to young manhood. That incident decided her after-life. She became interested in orphans, though she waited still further for divine guidance on her path.

In the meanwhile, an aged homœopathic physician was living in the middle one of the three houses I have described, those on either side not having then been built. In the sitting-room he had often poured out his heart in prayer for Thüringia, asking specially that some servant of God might be sent to work in it for the good of souls. Fräulein von Weling heard of this godly man, and was ultimately brought into contact with him. She felt that the Lord was directing her to purchase the house with her little patrimony, and settle down to do what she could for the town and district. She sank all she had in the purchase, and has since then lived a life of entire dependence on the care of God, making her wants known to Him who cannot fail his children, though He may sometimes test them, as He has tested her.

Her orphan family increased, and she has now twelve dependent on her for everything—ten boys and two girls. The boys are of all nationalities—Irish, English, German, Parsee; and noble boys they are. Some of them have lately given themselves to God, and of these some are already turning their thoughts to the mission field, medical or otherwise. God bless them, and speed their way. But it is a great handful for the dear mother.

In addition to the orphans, an evangelist is supported, who preaches through the mountain villages, where the well-known German dolls are made in large quantities; a weekly Gospel paper, Für Dich ("For Thee"), and a fortnightly paper, the Allianzblatt, are issued. The latter, written on the lines of The Christian, is the only one of the kind in Germany. The former has a weekly circulation of over 12,000. All kinds of meetings are maintained for the townsfolk and their children.

But the most wonderful thing of all is the Conference which this earnest Christian lady summons year by year. Twelve years ago twenty-eight persons responded to her invitation; this year more than 300 came from all parts of Germany, from Russia, Holland, and England; among whom were many pastors. The method of the earlier conventions is followed still. All are treated as guests. Their beds are engaged in the town and paid for by the hostess of the Convention, and all meals are provided at her cost in the houses and the adjoining hall. How it is done, so far as the cooking and serving are concerned, is a mystery. But it is very delightful to become one of a large party of God's children, to find baronesses, countesses, generals, pastors, and very ordinary people sitting at the same tables, and partaking of the nicely and simply prepared food. A box hangs in the hall, where gifts are placed, which, she says, are always sufficient. But what a glorious method this is of revealing the greatness of God's bounty. It is literally like sitting at his table, eating and drinking of what He has prepared. It is very provocative of one's conscientious self-questioning! Have I put my quota into that box for myself, and for those who have not been able to give very much?

From the first, Dr. Baedeker has stood nobly beside the subject of our sketch, and in the earlier days, Dr. Ziemann, now with God. Two years ago Mr. Arnold, of the Evangelical Alliance, and last year Revs. J. Hudson Taylor and C. G. Moore, were at the Conference. This year Colonel von Knobelsdorf, Pastors Jellinghaus and Stockmayer, Rev. R. Graves Walker, Colonel and Mrs. Macgregor, Captain and Mrs. Tottenham, Mr. R. C. Morgan, the writer of this article, and many more pastors and Christian workers. And the Spirit of God moved mightily on the closely-crowded gatherings during the addresses, the prayers, and especially the singing. It is worth a journey to Germany to hear the noble chorales sung by these trained voices. There is a special appropriateness, too, that the hymns of Tersteegen and others should be sung in meetings so full of that holy consecration and fervent love which were the breath of their life.

The Convention is held in the name of the Evangelical Alliance, which also gives the name of Allianzhaus to this little settlement; and there is much of that holy fervour, as the various hearts and voices join in one, amid which the Evangelical Alliance was cradled more than fifty years ago.

The sketch on the opposite page is reproduced from a photograph of the little German town where this interesting Conference is held; though it scarcely does justice to the charm of the place and its surroundings.

Germany needs a movement like this. Religion is too much a matter of the State Church. Infant Baptism and Confirmation are essential to social, civic, and political standing. There are few Free Churches to express the unrestrained and spontaneous religious life of the people. Rationalism has intruded into too many pulpits, whilst the religious and moral life of many of the villages and towns is at a low ebb. There is a needs-be for some centre from which the healing waters should flow to fertilise the salt and barren places of this great country; and it seems as though our Father for that purpose had made choice of Fräulein von Weling, Allianzhaus, Blankenburg, Thüringia, Germany.

Orphans in a Stable.

THE following letter was sent by the writer to Lady Henry Somerset, who asks us to give it publicity. This we gladly do:—

"Nine months ago I came out here for medical missionary work, and as the dispensary was not built my brother and I have seen patients (2100 of them) in the verandah or in our own bedrooms. But my heart went out most to the little Christian girls whose work was so unutterably sad and wrong. There has been no harvest, and there is hardly a chance for next year's crops; so that whole families are dying of hunger. Even the people who have forsaken their idols and who truly love and serve our God are only too glad to get any kind of work for their children.

"From morning until evening these little ones are employed in the palm groves gathering toddy from the trees into large earthen jars. In the evening when all is collected these little girls get no money, merely a certain amount of this awful drink, which they either take themselves or sell in the village street when they get home. It is for these I must plead, that before their early marriages some joy and privilege may be put into their lives.

"Feeling I dare not live longer without doing something for them, I have opened a boarding school; but my accommodation is one little white-washed stable, which has to act as dining-room, school-room, play-room, and bedroom for six little girls. As it was only built to hold a country pony we dare not crowd any more children inside. If we could only take five from each village, then they might teach the others on their return; but six little girls in a stable!

"I know how overwhelmed you would be with pity if you saw trooping from an English distillery any number of bright-eyed little maidens, each carrying their measure of whisky. How much more if you had specially gone to that town to help the people and to win them and their children for Christ! Their fate is breaking my heart, and I must save them. Can you help me?

Ikwezi Lamaci Mission.

WRITING on the work in Alfred County, Natal, Mrs. Aitchison says:—

"The visit of Mr. Gilkes, followed by that of Miss Bilbrough, resulted in most important arrangements for the good of the Mission. While temporal matters have been advancing, spiritual progress is not lacking. Many have embraced Christianity, and never before have we had such a number under moral training. Not long since we opened the eighth school. Some of the people are constantly coming out on the Lord's side.

"Within the last few weeks we have been much discouraged by the announcement from Government that the Education Board does not intend to aid any but large schools in future. Now we are asking ourselves whether some of our schools, just struggling into existence, must be closed, or whether we can keep on the teachers without the grant. We feel it to be a most serious question. To close them means returning the scholars to their old customs and ways.

"While we have been cheered and blessed, we have had dark times, too, in common with all South Africa. At one time our corner of the land was thrown into panic through the defiant attitude of some chiefs on the border. Our house and buildings suffered much damage through the unusually wet season, and it was very saddening to be constantly hearing of deaths by drowning in crossing swollen rivers. The rinderpest also appears to be slowly making its way down to Natal, but every precaution that our Government can take is now in force."

At Doncaster Races.

IN connection with the Open Air Mission, a campaign of wonderful interest has been held at Doncaster Races. The oldest worker among us can scarcely recall a time in which the blessing of God was granted in so remarkable a manner, leading to scenes and incidents which will be memorable to us for the remainder of our lives.

On Monday evening, September 6, soon after our arrival, we held an open-air service in St. Sepulchre Gate, and there the blessing began. Each morning thereafter we preached the Gospel in the crowded Market Place, surrounded by tipsters and others, noisily seeking—and only too successfully—to gain the people's attention. Later in the forenoon we proceeded to the racecourse, and poured forth a stream of Gospel song and testimony to hundreds of hearers within the entrance, where the crowds could not fail to see us as they swept by. The afternoons were occupied by the distribution of choice books and tracts among the multitudes as they proceeded homeward from the racecourse. So wonderfully ready is the reception of these silent messengers that a thousand can easily be distributed by one man in an hour. In the evening the open-air services in St. Sepulchre Gate were resumed.

Such is a brief summary of four days' toil. Now for a few incidents of outstanding interest.

AT INTERRUPTER CONVERTED.

On the night of St. Leger day (Wednesday), a man loudly objected to the preaching, declaring there was no hell, and defying any proof of the existence of such a place. No notice was taken of his disturbing remarks until after the address was concluded, when the speaker, Mr. B. Barry Wake, stepped to him, and led him gently away. Loving words were spoken to him, the Word of God was quoted, and presently the hard heart was broken, and the face became bathed with tears. He openly confessed Christ as his Saviour, and admitted he had frequently disturbed similar services. Said he, "I must go, for I have to catch a train, and to miss it will mean a walk of seven miles. But here is my name and address" (hurriedly writing it on a scrap of paper), "take it to the meeting, read it out, and tell them I have accepted Jesus as my Saviour." This man has since been written to by the immediate instrument of his conversion.

A CHRISTIAN WIFE'S JOY.

On Thursday night in a Wesleyan class-meeting, at a village not far from Doncaster, a Christian woman, who had long been praying for an ungodly husband, entered and said: "Praise God for the work He is doing at Doncaster this week. My husband went to the races yesterday, and I prayed that he might be met by the evangelists. So he was. He came home with a tract, and gave our little girl threepence to read it to him. I have faith to believe it will result in his conversion."

DRUNKARDS IN THE RING.

On Thursday night, in St. Sepulchre Gate, the power of God in the service was such that three poor degraded fellows who had been drinking, and one of whom seemed on the verge of delirium tremens, were impelled to come into the centre of the ring, and before all the spectators kneel and pray. Amid all their incoherent utterance gleams of memory and desire after better things were manifested, and they were earnestly commended to God in prayer.

THE ENEMY SURPRISED.

On the afternoon of St. Leger day the crowds, as they left the racecourse for the railway stations, were immense. Soon our stock of 30,000 tracts had wholly given out (40,000 were given altogether during our stay), and we gathered under an obelisk on a spot where the broad pathway mounts a slope, and the roadway runs in a cutting beneath. Far as the eye could reach the crowd came surging towards us in unnumbered thousands. Suddenly, one of our number mounted our open-air platform, the interior of which had contained tracts. In quick succession he poured forth a succession of Gospel texts. Another and another took his place, and presently the texts were exchanged for snatches of hymns, sung by us all. A crowd gathered, including in its number some aristocratic betting-men. Instantly Mr. Wake mounted the platform, and with burning utterance told the Gospel story. Thus, in the space of a few moments thousands heard the message of love and warning.

On Friday evening we returned home in strong confidence that God had been mightily at work, and that the full result will only be known in eternity. Dr. Christy Wilson's local arrangements were most kind and helpful. On one morning the Open-Air Mission and the Racecourse Mission held a united service on the course.

The Indian Earthquake.

SIR,—May I appeal to the Christian public at home for help for the missionaries and native converts of the Welsh Missionary Society in the Khasia Hills of Assam, in the dire distress which has befallen them through the earthquake of June last? I can testify from personal knowledge to the excellent work which this missionary society has accomplished in that little-known corner of India; and to the beneficial results, not alone from the religious point of view, but in the lines of education, medical aid, and social improvement, of the earnest and continuous labours of the successive agents, both men and women.

I have received a letter from one of the senior missionaries there, detailing the sad occurrences, in which he says:—

"The Christians (native) have suffered in common with the others, but I am thankful to say they suffer their losses with fortitude, and a great deal of cheerfulness. The loss to the mission has been very great, no less than Rs.240,000 (about £15,000). As you know, all our chapels, school-rooms, houses, and hospitals were built of stone; in the chief stations, viz., Shella, Shillong, Chevra Poonjee, Jowai, etc. Now, all these without an exception have been utterly demolished. The sight is pitiful and heartrending. Here, at Chevra Poonjee, we had two mission houses, two school-rooms, a theological institution, dispensary, and hospital—the best in Assam, according to the official medical report; and all are levelled to the ground.

"We, missionaries, have lost most of what we had, and what remains of books, clothing, etc., have been spoiled by the rain. I am thankful to say that all our missionaries in the hills and in the plains escaped uninjured."

The appeal which I am now making is for contributions towards relieving, in some measure, the personal necessities of the European missionaries and their families, and of the native Christians, who are mostly extremely poor. I shall be glad to receive any donations, and to forward the money to the proper quarter. They can either be sent to me direct, to care of Messrs. King, King and Co., Agents, Bombay; or to Dr. P. Kirkpatrick-Picard, 59, Abbey-road, St. John's Wood, London, who will pass them on to me.—I am, etc.,

Belfast.—It has been resolved to proceed with the building of great and minor halls, with the necessary offices, in connection with the Shankill-road Mission, Belfast, of which Rev. Henry Montgomery is the superintendent, at a cost of £10,000. The residential and recreative portions of the premises will be afterwards added as funds become available. The remarkable success which so far has attended the work of this mission more than justifies the step referred to.

At the Seaside: Boats.

CONTINUING the talk we had last week about boats in general, I want to call your attention now to some of the different kinds of boats we meet with.

Pleasure boats.—Always going backwards and forwards on pleasure-trips. I wonder if we in any way resemble these by being bent always on pleasure? God gives us richly all things to enjoy (1 Tim. vi. 17). But which are we seeking first, our own selfish pleasure, or the kingdom of God? Do we find pleasure in things not pleasing to God? Which would you choose, "the pleasures of sin for a season" (Heb. xi. 25), or pleasures for evermore (Ps. xvi. 11).

Fishing boats.—How pretty they look coming in, with their brown sails set to catch the wind! What an exciting rush is made towards the shore to learn what success they have met with! An old boatman, once a coastguardsman, wrote to me one day something like this:—"My work out fishing is nearly over now; but I am about my Master's business, fishing for souls." Fishing boats are of many different sizes, small as well as big. Do you know anything yet of fishing for the Master? Listen to Jesus' voice, "Follow Me, and I will make you fishers of men" (Matt. iv. 19). The fishing boats are out early and late; let us be constant, in season and out of season (2. Tim. iv. 2). They use all sorts of tackle, and may go short distances or long ones, like the "trawlers" in the North Sea. Let us use any method to lead someone to Jesus, and remember God can use us in the home or out of it as He shall please. Talking about this leads us to think of the Mission boats.—Many a sailor can thank God for the floating missions that have carried to him, on the seas or in the ports, the Gospel of Jesus. I remember one Sunday while in the North Sea, a cry was raised on board, "Do you see that boat yonder with a flag? That is one of the Deep Sea Mission boats," and possibly at that time a service was being held on board to which the sailors in the fishing-boats around were invited. If God should call you to be a missionary and carry the blessed news of the Gospel to the heathen, either at home or abroad, will you gladly answer, "Here am I, send me" (Isa. vi. 8)? Do not forget though that Isaiah was cleansed and purged before he could say that.

Ferry-boats (2 Sam. xix. 18).—Have you ever watched them, often at the mouth of a river, where the current is strong, taking people over to the other side? Perhaps you have experienced, too, what a great help they are to carry one across the stream and save a long journey round. There is a little word in 1 Cor. xii. 28 that tells us what we all may be—"helps." Be on the look-out for companions who have come to the bank of the stream called Difficulty, and see if you cannot be a help—a ferry-boat—to take them over.

Tug-boats.—A ship has got into difficulties, become disabled, it cannot get on alone. It is all right, however, its condition has been noticed. The tug-boat comes to give the needed assistance. There are many around us weak in character, needing a little encouragement, a loving word to help them forward. Cannot you, who know what is to be strengthened by Jesus, copy the example of the tug-boats and help support the weak (1 Thess. v. 14), and conduct them onwards?

Pilot-boats.—Their office is something like the tug-boats, for they take others in tow, but it is chiefly to guide past the dangerous places and lead into the harbour. The pilot-boats have a pilot on board to take control. Are you a pilot-boat yet leading into the harbour of safety? Have you said, "Jesus, Saviour, pilot me over life's tempestuous sea," so that you may be able to pilot others? Jesus came "to guide our feet into the way of peace" (Luke i. 79).

Training-ships.—What great vessels they are! What important work is done in them! Our most skilful mariners and officers of the Navy have had their training on board these floating navy schools. I think we are all on board the training-ship of life, but are we taking heed to the lessons we learn? We think much of training when we are competing for the prizes and positions of this world, let us also remember to exercise ourselves unto godliness or godlikeness for "bodily exercise profiteth little, but godliness is profitable unto all things" (1 Tim. iv. 7, 8).

Trading-ships.—Intent on merchandise (Prov. xxxi. 14). Their one business to carry cargoes from port to port. It is very necessary for us to labour and be industrious, for "the idle soul suffers hunger" (Prov. xix. 15), but let us not make earthly things our chief business in life, may we the rather "labour not for that meat which perisheth, but for that which endureth unto everlasting life" (John vi. 27), remembering the young man who went away sorrowful from Jesus for he had great possessions (Matt. xix. 22).

Man-of-war boats.—Perhaps some of you have seen them during a review at Portsmouth, not fighting, but ready for the enemy when he comes. How needful that we should be equipped ready to meet our foe (Eph. vi. 11). Yet we must not forget our fight is one of faith (1 Tim. vi. 12), and the enemy will be resisted when we are "stedfast in the faith" (1 Pet. v. 8, 9).

Torpedo boats.—Ugly, dark things these are, bent on destruction. I am sure none of us want to resemble them; but we must remember our influence may be for the salvation or destruction of those around us. Give heed to the Apostle's words, "Destroy not him for whom Christ died."

Hospital boats.—Where the sick and the dying are carefully cared for. A Christ-like mission. When Jesus sent the seventy disciples forth in his service He bade them "Heal the sick" (Luke x. 9). Wherever Jesus went there was healing and life. Let us, too, have compassion on the sick ones, and remember as we minister to them we do it unto Jesus (Matt. xxv. 35-40).

The Lifeboat.—What a glorious work is that of the lifeboat, to go out to the rescue of the shipwrecked ones and save them. Jesus alone is the Lifeboat; He came "to seek and to save that which was lost" (Luke xix. 10).

Are you safe in the lifeboat? Outside of it you must perish, there is no help, for you must sink on the "poor old stranded wreck" of self, and your sins will be the weight that will drag you down, but "God so loved the world, that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish but have everlasting life."—John iii. 16. Be quite sure, ere it be too late and the storm take you unawares, that you are quite safe now. Neta.

Talking Flowers.

By Rev. John Mitchell.

"I WONDER how I came here!" said Miss Buttercup to herself one fine morning in May.

"Why, don't you know? You grew, like the rest of us," answered Miss Daisy.

"But what made me grow? I have no power of myself to do anything."

As Miss Daisy scarcely knew how to reply, Mr. Dandelion, who was getting interested, began, "Have you never heard of One Who is loving, kind and good, who made us all? You see his smile in the sunshine, his purity in the dew, and his benevolence in the rain. Men call Him 'God,' which means good."

"Did you ever see Him?" inquired Miss Buttercup.

"Never."

"Then how do you know of Him?" questioned Miss Daisy.

"I smell a sweet fragrance, but I do not see the fragrance; I cannot keep my head still a moment just now for the wind, yet I do not see the wind. I believe both exist, the one because my sense of smell tells me, the other because I feel its effects. So do I know of God. The fragrance of his presence fills the world and the effects of his presence are seen in his many wonderful works. For instance, I see a boy looking at us now. He wears a hat; and I know it must have been made by someone, though I never saw the hatter. He wears a suit of clothes; and I know there must be a tailor about somewhere. He is playing a concertina, and I am sure the concertina did not make itself."

"If I had a heart," lisped little Daisy, "how I should love so kind and good a God. I should count it a great honour if I could serve Him."

"And I," chimed in Miss Buttercup, "should like to hear his gentle voice and see his loving face. Girls and boys, I suppose, have hearts and are able to love and serve Him. How happy they must be."

Wise Mr. Dandelion held down his head and then shook it mournfully: "Yes," he replied, "they are able, but, alas! not many of them do it. They seldom or never seem to think of God and his love. And do you know, God once did something which caused the angels astonishment. He gave his only Son to die for girls and boys that they might be saved from sin here and its consequences hereafter."

"What is sin?" asked Daisy and Buttercup together.

"Why it is that, instead of loving God, men and women, boys and girls, often dislike Him and do not care to hear about Him, nor to do his will. They prefer to do what grieves Him, and to bring upon themselves grief and misery. They forget that He alone can give them true happiness, so they try to find it elsewhere by wrongdoing, and only bring themselves into pain and sorrow. They are foolish creatures, to be sure! If they would just give their hearts to Jesus they would be cleansed from sin and made good and happy."

"We have not sinned, and we wonder if God is pleased with us?" earnestly inquired Miss Daisy.

"Strange to say, we flowers have never done anything to grieve the loving God, but we have done his will. We cannot love Him because He did not give us hearts, like girls and boys, but we praise and glorify Him by doing nothing against his will. We serve the purpose for which we were created."

"Thank you, Mr. Dandelion, for all your information. We are pleased to know that without hearts we can glorify God. He knows what is best for each one of us."

The Advance of the Y.M.C.A.

[By Our Own Representative.]

A SENTIMENT has often been expressed that, compared with our American and Colonial brethren, the British Y.M.C.A. does not "do the thing well enough" (in regard to buildings and some other features) to command the respect which it deserves and ought to inspire. Glasgow, at any rate, now bids fair to equal the best of her rivals in the handsome premises in which her branch of the Association finds its home. Of course, much of this enterprise is directly due to the keen and generous interest of Lord Overtoun, whose energies have for many years been thrown unsparingly into it.

Last week over eight hundred delegates met in conference and mutual counsel as to the present and future of this movement in Great Britain, not overlooking its responsibilities to the wider world beyond. The first business in hand was the formal opening of the "Y.M.C.A. Club, Limited," the purpose of which is to provide "a comfortable boarding-house for young men living away from home and engaged in business in Glasgow." There are 200 bed-rooms, sitting-rooms, music and writing rooms, bathrooms, lavatories, large dining-rooms, and even a store-room for the bicycles of members. These additional premises are immediately adjacent to the main Y.M.C.A. building (or Christian Institute), and, with the Bible Training Institute in course of erection on the other side, form one imposing block, centrally situated, and in every way adapted admirably for the various departments of service to which they are set apart.

GLASGOW Y.M.C.A. CLUB; CHRISTIAN INSTITUTE AND ROOMS; AND BIBLE TRAINING INSTITUTE.

But men are more than buildings, and even they, apart from the Spirit of God, are powerless to lead their young brethren in the paths of righteousness. Much has been done, however, by his grace, and this was gracefully recognised by the Corporation of the City on Tuesday evening, when, by invitation of the Lord Provost, magistrates, and Town Council, the delegates were accorded a public reception in the City Chambers. Then followed two full days of business meetings and conferences, in which developments and possible dangers were freely discussed.

WEDNESDAY.

The motto of the Y.M.C.A. is

"YOUNG MEN FOR CHRIST

and Christ for Young Men," and it was the evident desire of all the speakers, who, in their turn, with equal clearness voiced the feeling of the large majority (to judge from the applause given), to allow nothing whatever to interfere with this primary object. Of course, the educational and athletic needs of young men were duly considered, one forenoon being devoted to the spiritual, the social, and the physical aspects of the work. The papers read on these subjects were thoughtful, terse, and convincing, but from first to last they struck a deeply spiritual tone, which disarmed all reasonable criticism. This was a thoroughly representative gathering, and its opinions were so clearly defined, that friends who have any fear of the spiritual work being crowded out by the gymnastics, and kindred diversions, may rest in perfect security that nothing is further from the intention of the Executive; nay, more, that the most strenuous efforts will be put forth to keep the social and physical elements in their right and subordinate place.

The tone of this session may be gauged from a summary of the three papers referred to:—

(a) Spiritual work (Mr. J. D. Mackie, Aberdeen). The Y.M.C.A. is definitely and primarily Christian in conception, in constitution, and distinction. The condition of its spiritual life is the determining element of its prosperity; anything less is shadow without substance, body without spirit. Of course, the Christian young man should be the very best embodiment of manhood, but we need to insist that the spiritual life must ever hold the primary place. The life in Christ and Christ in the life—these are essential features of all our work; thus we may find that less and less time is taken up by sport and recreation in proportion as more and more is given to prayer and consecration.

(b) Social (Mr. R. W. Ralston, Birkenhead). The influences of social life are very strong for either good or evil, and must be rightly directed if the Y.M.C.A. is really to be what it professes to be—"a home away from home" for its members, seeing that young men go wrong more in the social side of their being than in any other. It is, therefore, most important to create a healthy social influence throughout the building. There are many ways, both on and off the institution premises, in which a high social tone may be fostered, by at homes, musical evenings (under adequate supervision), club socials, and occasions created by local friends in inviting a few of the members at a time to their houses for an evening or a week end. These and other practical questions are worthy of earnest consideration.

(c) Physical (Mr. Samuel Millar, Belfast). Three main reasons for this department are:—(1) That clubs for physical exercises form a good recruiting-ground for members; (2) that recreation is a necessity for the thousands of members in the "rank and file" who lead sedentary lives; and (3) exercise is a powerful aid to purity of life, by occupying the mind, and diverting the thoughts into healthy channels. It should be insisted on, however, that none but Christian men be employed as instructors—men whose aim it is to win their classes for Christ. As to "moving with the times," let our anchor be firm in the rock of the eternal verities, and though we swing with the tide our real position cannot be moved. Let us, therefore, do what we can to improve the physique of our pale-faced youths and narrow-shouldered men.

Following these three deliverances came discussion, regulated by the chairman's bell. Here are some of the points:—First, and not unexpectedly, came the usual protest against anything but definitely spiritual work being undertaken by the Association. This was followed by a reasonable and timely caution against over-much athleticism. "We do not want to make athletes, but only to encourage sufficient physical exercise to promote a healthy body." More than one speaker deprecated the subdividing of the work into these heads at all, urging that whatsoever had for its primary and only object the accepted motto before referred to was legitimately spiritual work. Most important of all was the contention that a revival was the "way to get up our numbers"; and no one was disposed to differ, for it was the evident desire of all to promote spiritual life by whatever means. Yet another useful suggestion was that Christian men should endeavour to get control of local sports so as to permeate the athletic ground with a healthy influence, particularly to the exclusion of gambling.

Lord Kinnaird followed briefly with the advice, "Do not start any agencies that your branch is not really strong enough to support. Keep within the limits of what you can do well, rather than extend your operations just because a neighbouring association is able to do so. Have soundly converted men, and only such, as vice-presidents, trainers, teachers, etc.," and to those whose thoughts turned to work abroad he said very sensibly, "No man can do in Greater Britain what he has failed to do at home." Mr. Hind Smith advocated "more knee-work," and Sir George Williams thanked God for what had been done in the past; for all the "machinery" that had been created, and pleaded for heart-consecration in its use.

DR. STALKER ON LEADERS AND FOLLOWERS.

Captain R. Wade Thompson (Dublin) occupied the chair at the noon gathering, when an address was given by Rev. Dr. Stalker (Glasgow). Reading Judges v. 1, 2 (R.V.), he called attention to the two reasons given for the success of the Israelites—(1) That the leaders took the lead, and (2) that the mass of the people willingly followed. The leaders were not engaged elsewhere, nor malingering, nor excessively modest, but were in the forefront—foremost in enthusiasm, resource, and execution. In ancient society, leaders were always provided naturally, and there is still a great deal of loyalty to natural leaders. Our aristocracy have immense advantages, if only they had the heart to give themselves to public work. We are just as dependent on the leaders taking the lead as they were. In politics, home, church, municipality, we should get quit of those awful wrongs and abuses which disfigure our life if only the leaders would take the lead. Unfortunately they will not do it. We do not get the people with the ten talents, and have to struggle on with those who have the one talent, and who use it. It may be that the leaders are occupied with their own affairs, or it may be due to timidity and over caution.

When a reform is matter of history all men praise it, but while it is being accomplished few praise and many oppose. All classes took part in the celebration of the jubilee of the abolition of slavery, but in his own day Wilberforce had few friends. How many dukes, princes, and editors were helping? Just as many as are helping the temperance reform at present. Any diminution—say a reduction by one-half—of the drunkenness in the country would be a reform infinitely greater than any of those by which our statesmen are winning their laurels; but if one of the first mark were to take the lead he would simply be shrieked at. Office-bearers in Y.M.C.A.'s are in the position of leaders, and they will ensure the confidence reposed in them by opening their eyes and ears to everything that is for the advantage of the members, and by having the courage to dare what they believe.

The other reason given is that the people willingly followed. But sometimes the people wish themselves to take the lead. We hear of the great need of leaders, but I often think that a greater need is men willing to take the second, or the third, or the fourth place—and who will work as heartily there as in the first. The first man attracts the eyes of all, but the man who works well in an obscure position only receives the reward of the cause. Some are criticising instead of following. The Y.M.C.A. comes in for a good deal of this, and there is no harm in it. Like all things human, the Association has its defects, but those who on this account stay outside are standing in their own light. Let them come inside, and let their ideas be heard there. There is more chance of reforming an institution from the inside than from the outside.

On Wednesday afternoon the English delegates held a separate session, under the presidency of Mr. W. H. SEAGRAM, in connection with the foreign work of the National Council. Two representatives of the Council are already at work in India—Mr. R. D. Pringle, as general secretary of the Bombay City Association, and Mr. Frank Anderson, B.A., as Y.M.C.A. student secretary for the Bombay Presidency—and it was desired to develop in the Association renewed and increased interest in this important field of service, and to enlist the further help of members throughout the country, in China, in Egypt and Palestine, and in the various colonies and dependencies of the Empire, for which help is greatly needed. Mr. Reierson Arbuthnot, president of the Madras Association, spoke of the splendid opportunity afforded by the present condition of young men in India, and earnestly appealed for additional workers in that country; and addresses were also delivered by Mr. W. H. Gairdner, B.A. (Oxford), Mr. J. H. Oldham, B.A. (who is shortly leaving to take up work in Lahore, at the instance of the Scottish Executive), Mr. James Hughes (general secretary Lyons Y.M.C.A.), Chevalier Piovanelli (President of the Italian Y.M.C.A. National Council, and of the Rome Association), M. Ernest Favre (representing the Central International Committee at Geneva), etc.

PUBLIC DEMONSTRATION.

A great public demonstration took place in the evening under the presidency of Lord OVERTOUN. He compared the gathering to the mobilisation of the British Fleet at Spithead in June; but while looking round and taking courage it must be remembered that God is the great worker, and men only his instruments. "In 1859 the young manhood of Great Britain rose together to protect their homes, and the Volunteers throughout the country were gathered into companies, battalions, regiments, and brigades. So, while the Y.M.C.A.'s are scattered over the land, an occasion like the present gives heart and courage to those who are working in solitude and loneliness. It has been said that we should be anchored upon the truth of God, and I trust we shall make sure that we stand on this immutable ground. The object of the Y.M.C.A. is to turn out men in the best sense, but the Associations get their members at a critical time. The social instinct is strong, and this may be abused instead of made a blessing. The Association is a great nursery for character, self-control, and perseverance. These will give the necessary backbone, and by God's grace will turn out men. The highest aim in life is to live for others. Your neighbour is the man who works or lives next you, or who sits beside you in the church; but remember it is not always the most lovely who are the most lovable."

Sir GEORGE WILLIAMS quoted and emphasised the reply of a young man who had been asked, "What would you like that your life should represent and should be?" "Five things," he said, "I should like to have—(1) a saved soul, (2) a healthy body, (3) a cultured mind, (4) a loving heart, (5) a happy home."

M. FAVRE presented the greetings of the International Committee at Geneva. He described the difficulties met in dealing with young men of different languages, races, and religions in the countries of the Continent; but added that there were many encouragements, and the work must go forward. M. PAVIONELLI told of gratifying progress already made in Italy, and especially in Rome.

Lord KINNAIRD thanked the citizens for the warm welcome extended to the delegates, and stated that this was the largest national conference yet held. He said that many who knew how to increase their businesses, when they come to deal with this tremendous work of winning young men for Christ feel that they are dealing with a kingdom and with forces against which they can do nothing, and it is only through Him from whom all power comes that we can go forward.

After a humorous yet earnest speech from Mr. D. A. BLACK (Belfast), Rev. JOHN MCNEILL, referring to 1 Chron. xii. 22, said: "This time has come. Men all over the earth are coming to David's greater Son, until they have become a host like the host of God. With all our drawbacks and discouragements, men are coming as they never came before, simply because they never had the chance. I believe there is no poor humdrum day which does not bring three thousand and a great many more to the standard of the Lord Jesus Christ. There may not be many in your little corner or mine, but listen to the 'whirr' of the reapers in other harvest fields. I wish we could get that idea of helping stamped on every face. There are a great many hinderers. Ministers and secretaries are anxious to know if you have come to help or to criticise."

THURSDAY.

Thursday forenoon was occupied with the subjects of "How to Train Members for Distinctive Work among Young Men," and "Dangers, and How to Remedy Them." Upon these papers were read respectively by Messrs. J. E. WAKEFIELD (Taunton) and D. M. WEST (Glasgow), both of which, as also the succeeding discussions, gave no uncertain sound as to the determination of the executive to keep to spiritual methods.

The first paper advocated systematic Bible study and the inclusion of kindred and doctrinal subjects, as well as those relating to Christian evidence. All these would be needed for the equipment of a successful soul-winner. As to practical work, it pleaded for a certain amount of endeavour outside the actual limits of the Y.M.C.A., and deprecated a too strict definition of what is "Y.M.C.A. work" and what "church work." These should be

CO-ORDINATE SPHERES OF CHRISTIAN EFFORT.

As to difficulties, two were named—the migratory circumstances of many young men, and the fact that most could only be reached during evening hours. The way to meet these was, first to adapt all effort to local conditions rather than to follow a hard and fast rule; second, to make it as attractive as possible so as to use the time to the best advantage. Training classes, both for speaking and singing, were suggested (in discussion), also the encouragement of the younger members to try and win others, even if at times they made mistakes from inexperience; if they began by putting their thoughts on paper in definite shape, they would find it easier to express themselves in public speech. Indeed, a youth's section was a great advantage and had proved a most encouraging feature of some branches. The subject was fairly summed up by one speaker in the words, "Love will always find some way to bring the dark world together with Christ the Light of the world."

Speaking on the "Dangers," Mr. WEST's paper lamented that hundreds of "associates" pass through the Association without being touched by its spiritual influence; and that its religious meetings are attended by only a small percentage of its "members." Speaking of one branch with 900 associates and 300 members, he asked, "If the former cannot be evangelised by the latter, is the primary object of the Association being carried out there? Is the spiritual state of these young men being kept to the front?" He suggested, therefore, the issuing of a written appeal, ably and prayerfully compiled, to be given to associates who attend the evening classes, setting before them definitely the claims of Christ upon them, and inviting personal conversation. Let members, too, be encouraged to prepare papers on specific Biblical subjects, systematically arranged, and to meet periodically for interchange of thought. A Travelling Lectureship to promote Bible study would also be very useful as a means of interesting young men in the contents of the Bible.

Mr. PUTTERILL (Exeter Hall), in leading the discussion, felt that too much stress must not be laid on attendance at the meetings as the only means of estimating what members were doing; first, because many were at work in connection with the places of worship to which they belong; and, second, because a large number were continually witnessing for Christ, in speech and life and work, in their daily avocations—a sphere by no means to be despised, and often far from easy. The four dangers which impressed him most were (1) a loss of the feeling of the missionary character of membership (therefore be careful and strict in admitting to membership, and find definite work for each man enrolled); (2) a growth of officialism—the general secretaries often doing much that might with advantage be deputed to others; (3) limiting our work to one class of the community—young men—thus creating a possibility that in the same town three or four separate agencies might spring up, each to reach men of a certain age, and thus dividing up the workers. (4). An undue development of the club and commercial advantages such as would induce an accession of young men for these privileges and nothing else. These points led to profitable debate, at the close of which Mr. W. OATTS (to whose arduous work as secretary of the Glasgow Association was largely due the ease with which the wheels of the conference ran) gave some facts about the BIBLE TRAINING INSTITUTE.

This will form an important section of the block of buildings indicated above, and will provide accommodation for one hundred men and fifty women. At present there are fifty of both sexes in training in three houses, and the committee hope the churches will send some of their brightest members to be trained in study and preparation for practical work. The marvellous boon that Mr. Moody's Institute at Chicago has proved to church and mission work points to the need there is for a multiplication of such facilities. The term of study is two years; in some cases a course of medical instruction occupies a third.

THE GUIDANCE OF THE SPIRIT.

Mr. C. J. Procter (Birkenhead) presided at the noon meeting, and Rev. HENRY MONTGOMERY gave an address on Acts i. 8, "Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." He said:—"The apostolic Church ought to be the model for the Church of to-day. The first thing that was made clear to them was that the Holy Spirit was a real personality. He was not to be merely with them, but was to dwell in them. When He came upon them they appointed all their committees and office-bearers under his guidance. He was the One who really arranged all the affairs of the work of God, down to the smallest detail. The power came on men who had no educational advantages, although physical and mental power were then at their zenith. The mind of man had reached its climax in Greece, but God came down into a handful of fishermen, and shook the mighty power of Rome. I was greatly disappointed and discouraged when I was told that in connection with this movement you have only sixty-five paid workers in the United Kingdom. You are too small without the Holy Ghost, but with Him you may go forward. I want that God may make everyone of us willing to be filled with his Spirit, for He wants to get his own out of everyone whom Jesus Christ bought on the tree. Peter and John went up together. May the Lord deliver us from our divisions, and from an unprogressive Christian life. Get the best God can give you."

On the same afternoon Mr. David Dreghorn, J.P., chairman of the Scottish Executive, in the presence of a very large gathering, formally declared open the new branch association building at Eglinton Toll, South Glasgow, which has been erected at a cost exceeding £8000, and is a very handsome and commodious structure. Mr. Hugh Smith, chairman of the southern section, presided over the meeting, and addresses were given by Lord Overtoun, Mr. Cameron Corbett, M.P., Mr. James Stokes (New York), and others. The Lord Provost, who had promised to be present, was unavoidably detained on important Corporation business. A collection taken during the proceedings in aid of the building fund amounted to over £270.

UNREACHED CLASSES.

The subject on Thursday evening was "How to influence classes of young men at present unreached by the Y.M.C.A." Mr. F. W. Lawrence (London) took the chair, and called attention to two suggestions already made: (1) that there should be an impetus given to work among youths, and (2) a closer alliance formed with associations for work among special classes, such as soldiers and students.

The discussion was opened by Mr. C. J. PROCTER (Birkenhead), who stated his conviction that the largest section of young men yet unreached is composed of better class mercantile clerks. To amend this he made three suggestions—(1) We must start with our juniors, and get into touch with teachers to do so effectively; (2) we must get the best Christian men in each district on our committees; and (3) we must study the outwardness of our associations. It is not given to all to have handsome buildings, but all may make their rooms homely and attractive. "Study a little more the grace of life. Look into the details of furnishing."

Miss Sandes (Cork) gave a stirring account of the work at present being done among the soldiers, and of the success and encouragement with which the labourers are meeting. For two reasons this is more important now than ever: (1) because of the opportunity peace gives of reaching them, and which may not last long, as a very little misunderstanding may break up the concert of Europe; (2) because our Army is so young. Every year 40,000 lads take their places in the ranks. There are two means available for reaching them; (1) the soldiers' homes; (2) the soldiers' Christian associations. The homes are the nurseries for the associations, and ladies can do the pioneer work best; but a great work which Y.M.C.A.'s can do is to look after the men when they leave the ranks and come home to their own towns and villages.

Mr. J. H. Oldham recounted the history of the British College Christian Union. Of the forty thousand students in Great Britain the great majority are beyond the reach of outside effort, but they cannot get away from the faithful witness in the class-room and on the athletic field. The work must not rest till there is in every college an organisation witnessing for Christ.

In the discussion which followed, one Glasgow speaker told of a particularly successful effort in open-air mission-work. A visitor from Weston-super-Mare testified to excellent results achieved by keeping careful records of all young men in the town, dividing them into classes for convenience and inviting by letter all the members of a particular trade each week. A Dunfermline delegate pressed the importance of the Boys' Brigade as a means of gaining the confidence of those who are soon to be young men. Colonel Phillips (Middlesex) closed the discussion by giving a most interesting account of the success which had followed his efforts among the men of his own regiment.

FRIDAY.

"The Relation of the Y.M.C.A. to Foreign Missionary Work" gave a favourable opportunity on this forenoon for reports from various places far and near. The encouraging progress of open-air work in Ireland, the needs of France, South America, and India were all set forth. Mr. Fanstope, from Brazil, said that the Y.M.C.A. there was a distinctly missionary agency, and urged, further, that Christian men should be more forward in going out to fill commercial positions, instead of leaving them to applicants who have no interest in the souls of men. At the Liverpool branch there are five or six men in training for the South American field.

Mr. Samuel Montgomery (Bangor) explained "How Y.M.C.A.'s at Home may help Foreign Missions" by means of regular weekly gifts of perhaps only a few pence. The objection sometimes urged that this would "lessen the usual missionary collections in the churches" he met with instances within his own knowledge where the very opposite had been the case, because a greater general interest had been excited than before.

Then a solemn appeal from Mr. J. H. Oldham (formerly secretary of the Student Volunteer Missionary Union), who is about to proceed to India, brought the Conference to a close, the remainder of the day being spent in a most enjoyable outing at Lord Overtoun's beautiful seat near Dumbarton.

Huntly.—Rev. John M'Neill, says the Aberdeen Free Press, arrived in Huntly on Saturday. The rev. gentleman, who is conducting a week's mission work there, occupied the pulpit of the Free Church at both diets on Sunday. At both services the church was crowded.

Christian Lifeboat Crew.—The interest shown in the work of the Crew is being well sustained, as was seen at the monthly muster held in its new "Welcome Home," Iron Bridge, Canning Town. Christian seamen of various nationalities, as well as workers among them in London and other ports even as far as San Francisco and Rosario, mingled in praise, prayer, and testimony. Incidentally it was mentioned that several helpers in the work had been called home, and earnest request was made for others to fill their places. Miss Child will gladly receive any communications at the Welcome Home, Iron Bridge, Canning Town, E.

Strangers' Rest, Zanzibar.

THE following letter, sent privately to a friend, will be read with interest. Mr. Theodore Isaac, of the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff, E., will be pleased to correspond with any sympathisers with this work:—

"Many thanks for the parcel of periodicals which arrived by the Majestic. It was good of you to remember us in this way, as we get through such a quantity. The sailors are always so glad to have something to read.

"We have now been in Zanzibar eighteen months, and are very happy in our work, at times having great joy in seeing souls being 'born again.'

"The temptations for our sailors are very great. The captains of the merchant vessels do not even allow their men on shore, except just for one day when the cargo is out. This being the case, we seem to get a double welcome when we go on these ships; the men are always so hearty. As opportunity permits we have a service, our magic-lantern being much appreciated. Last Sunday the captain of the Majestic allowed the boys ashore. We had a delightful time with them, they are such fine fellows.

"The blue-jackets are allowed on shore, and some of them appreciate the "Rest" very much; so much so, when the time comes to leave Zanzibar and they come to say good-bye, one often sees tears in their eyes, and that tells a tale when you look what big strong fellows they are. Beyond the rough exterior they have such tender hearts. After the bombardment it was most touching; the first time they were allowed on shore some of them came straight here 'to see how the missus was.' I was greatly amused, but also touched by their thoughtfulness.

"We are just now beginning to make ourselves understood in the language. We have splendid native meetings; the trouble is to get the people to go away, they just crowd in to hear the "habari njema"—good news—the Gospel is all so new to them. There are hundreds in Zanzibar who have never heard of Jesus, hundreds for whom Jesus died, and yet they don't know it. I often wish I could picture the great need, as it appeals to us who live in the midst of heathenism, 'How shall they believe in Him of whom they have not heard, and how shall they hear without a preacher?' We are longing for another worker to be sent out, so that we may have more time for native work.

Work in Armenia.

At home and abroad the cause of my native land has always been dear to my heart. The need of evangelistic work among my countrymen has urged me to encounter many difficulties. The work of God in Armenia has continually been hindered by those in authority.

Since I arrived in Britain in September, 1895, my efforts on behalf of evangelistic and rescue work in Armenia have met with considerable success. In addition to supporting the Armenian fatherless girls under my wife's care at Marash, some widowed mothers have been helped to look after their children in their own impoverished homes. The sufferings among the Armenian villagers at Marash have more or less been alleviated. Some of the Armenian refugees in London and elsewhere have been assisted pecuniarily and by advice. The native Protestant Evangelical churches at Marash and in the neighbouring villages have been helped to resume their work and comfort the bereaved by the Word of God.

The hearty thanks of my countrymen and myself are gratefully accorded to the churches throughout Great Britain for their kind co-operation.

Clonmel Soldiers' Home. — The eighth annual report mentions the formation of a branch of the S.C.A., and says: "Our meetings for the most part have been well attended, but owing to men being removed to other stations we have lost several members, including our regt. secretary. In April Miss Sullivan came to assist in the work of the Home; her help has been very acceptable in the musical arrangements, in visiting the barracks, and in every part of the work. As usual, we have been visited by Christian men from Tipperary and Cahir." The hon. superintendent and treasurer of the Home is Mr. Edward Beale, The Island, Clonmel.

Prison Officials.

I have been glad to see so often of late references in The Christian and other papers to the necessity of work amongst our prisoners. From my childhood I had a great desire to visit prisons, but as the years went by I found that certainly in Ireland there would be no facilities given for such a work. Three or four years ago, however, the way was made clear for reaching prison officials. It was very difficult at first to get in touch with these servants of the Crown. I was told it would be a fruitless effort, and at the beginning it seemed that it was to be so, but God in his goodness opened the door in January, 1894, when we started our weekly meeting for them. We have indeed great reason to praise the Lord for all He has done amongst these officials since then.

We feel convinced that as long as the present strict prison system remains the only way almost to reach the poor prisoners will be through converted prison "warders" and "matrons," for they are the only people who have free access to their cells. No doubt they have their difficulties, also, as it is contrary to prison regulations for an official to speak to a prisoner save on matters of business, but there is a higher law than any human law. Our Master's last command was to "preach the Gospel to every creature." No child of God will allow his lips to be closed from fulfilling this command. There are some earnest Christian prison officials in our land who do seek an opportunity often to win some of these poor lost ones to Jesus. God has blessed and is blessing their efforts.

I believe as yet in the English gaols no work has started amongst prison warders and matrons. Who will come forward to do something for them? The life they lead is most hardening and deteriorating. The long hours in close contact with the most depraved classes has a very sad effect on both men women. They see nothing but the darker sides of life, and if ever any one needed spiritual help they do.

I shall be very glad to give information as to our work in Ireland to any one who may be touched and led to do something for the prison officials in England. The Editor has my address. P. O.

"Come Over and Help Us."

Writing from Thiruvithi, viâ Panruti, Aug. 17, Miss Reade says:—"It seems the Lord's leading to open a station at a place called Vaithaur, about ten miles from Pondicherry. On Sunday three men came in at the end of morning service and asked very earnestly about the Gospel. We spoke long with them. They told us they had come here particularly to see the Thiruvithi temple, but that en route from the station, they had heard something going on in our chapel which attracted them to come in, and that the words they had heard were sufficient, they did not need to go on to the temple. They said their town was a very large one, with plenty of villages around; that no one was preaching there, and that we could hire a house. They begged us to let them know when we were coming, and they would have everything ready for us. This seems a very distinct call. If it is the Lord's leading He will surely supply the means, though it is not a little trying to our weak faith, no new friends being raised up."

Any help for Miss Reade thankfully received by Miss Lowe, 8, Childebert-road, Upper Tooting, S.W

Smyrna Rest.

Miss Turnby, who left for home last April, bravely held "the fort" here during last year; and in answer to prayer, Miss Tilby who now in turn needs a helper, came to assist, in the autumn. They visited the foreign ships in the bay regularly, with tracts, papers and Gospels, the latter especially being readily received. The "Rest" is certainly a witness for Christ, on the quay, where Satan seems to be ever luring men to destruction by various forms of evil; and the Gospel meetings in the house have been very well attended. Among other places visited in the course of itinerary work, a mission has been held in the Island of Cyprus, where in four towns and five villages meetings were held for both English-speaking people and Greeks. Communications respecting the "Rest" may be sent to Col. Morton, Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, N.

Insane in the East.

IT will be in the memory of many of our readers that in April last Mr. Theophilus Waldmeier left England for the United States to lay before the Christian public his plans for the amelioration of the lot of the insane in the East. Arrived on the other side of the Atlantic, accompanied by his devoted wife, he had many difficulties to face, by reason of financial depression and other circumstances. However, beginning at Philadelphia, he visited many important centres; a strong committee was formed and about £700 raised and placed in the hands of the treasurer.

In a recent communication to us Mr. Waldmeier says: "We left New York on August 7, and reached Queenstown on the 13th inst. In looking back to our visit to America, we have cause for great thankfulness, because Friends and others were exceedingly kind to us, and manifested deep interest in our Mission; and our great satisfaction is that we left the work in the hands of a trustworthy committee, who will not forget it after our departure, but will do what they can to promote the Mission to our demented sufferers in the East.

"We have visited and examined many asylums, in Europe, the United States, and Canada, with great interest and care, and had interviews with the best authorities on mental diseases and with the superintendents of hospitals for the insane. We have learned also how to build a good asylum according to the best methods, and to provide an efficient administration for the best treatment of the patients. In these respects there remains no hindrance to our return to Syria to begin at once this most-needed hospital for those poor, helpless sufferers from mental diseases. Christian friends in Europe and America advised us not to wait until the whole amount of the money is collected, but to go back to Syria as soon as possible to begin the work at once.

Hangchow Medical Mission.

IN connection with the C.M.S., a good work is being maintained by Drs. D. Duncan Main and A. T. Kember. During 1896 they passed through their hands 14,000 new and as many old patients who attended the dispensary. Hospital labours have been exacting; and the work of healing to be done is so great that the medical class becomes all important in view of the need for native medical missionaries. Spiritually, the work among lepers is most encouraging, and several persons have been awakened through the testimony borne by one of these poor sufferers. The cure of disease is found to be a powerful introduction to the Gospels and pleads most effectually with those whose hearts are dark and hard, but who are sufficiently intelligent to appreciate the value of bodily healing. Future needs of the work will be greater than past ones, but the promise of God to supply all stands as sure as ever.

From the German.

Almighty Lord, unveil thy face,
And from the fulness of thy grace
Thy richest influence impart,
And chase the world from every heart.

Oh that, from every burden free,
Our souls might seek repose in Thee,
And though from far, with joy descry
Th' eternal day-spring from on high!

Behold the radiant crowns that wait
The warrior in that heavenly state,
And listen to the white-robed throng,
Who sweetly chaunt the conqueror's song.

Each of them bears the victor's palm,
Whilst loud resounds the joyful psalm,
Their triumphs, Saviour, let me share,
And for their rest my soul prepare.—Klopstock.

Dublin Christian Convention.—The annual Convention will be held in the Metropolitan Hall, Dublin, from September 27 to October 1. Among those who will be present to take part in the Convention will be Canon Bell, late of Cheltenham, Rev. F. B. Meyer, Dr. John Smith (Edinburgh), Dr. R. Crawford Johnson, Canon Gayer (Newcastle), and Rev. Henry Montgomery, Pastor Hugh D. Brown, Dublin, etc. Further particulars may be had on application to the secretary, Christian Union Buildings, Dublin.

Persecution in Russia.

THE Berlin correspondent of the Daily Chronicle says: News received here from Russia states that at a recent conference of the Russian clergy held at Kazan, resolutions were passed calling on the Government to adopt more energetic measures dealing with "sectaries," whose continued growth begins seriously to alarm the Church.

Numbers of new sects have recently arisen hostile to the Orthodox Church. The means at the disposal of the clergy are considered insufficient for repressing them. The followers of Count Tolstoy, it was recommended, should be proceeded against with utmost severity, their tenets being alleged to be particularly dangerous to the well-being of Church and State. The opening of schools for "sectaries," it was urged, should be forbidden; those at present in use to be closed or assigned to other management. Orthodox persons are recommended not to employ "heretical" servants.

Numbers of the clergy in Congress stated that the Stundist movement has again begun to show signs of activity. It was recommended that Stundist children should be taken from their parents to be placed under orthodox tutelage and evangelical clergymen. Lutherans in Stundist districts, it was suggested, should be forbidden to preach in the Russian language. It is evident that whatever liberal influences may be present in the councils of the Czar's secular advisers, the clergy remain as intolerant as ever.

Ladysmith, Natal.

ON July 18, Mr. William Hill, the Scottish Evangelist so well and widely known in the Cape Colony, commenced a series of services here. Meetings were held each evening during the week, some of the meetings being characterised by remarkable power and feeling. The crowning service was on Sunday evening, July 25, when a great united service was held in the Town Hall. Every seat available was occupied and many had to stand. A number in the after-meeting signified their desire for prayer, and ere the service closed many were rejoicing in God as their Saviour. Besides the nightly services Mr. Hill had two afternoon Bible-readings and two or three services for the young people, which were very helpful.

On the second Sunday afternoon and the following Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings, Mr. Hill conducted services in the Native Church, which were greatly blessed and resulted in the quickening of believers, the conversion of sinners, and the restoration of several backsliders. To God be all the praise. It is now nearly a week since Mr. Hill left, but we are thankful to say the good work still goes on; in the weekly prayer meeting on Friday evening a young man professed to find peace. W. CLIFF (Wesleyan Minister).

New Mission to West Africa.

MR. HELI CHATELAIN, lately resident in New York, is again on his way to West Africa, at the head of the first expedition sent out by the Phil-African League. The party is six strong, four men, two of them with wives. In a note to us Mr. Chatelain says:—

"From Benguella, in Angola, we shall proceed to the country of the Ba-Chibokwe, some five hundred miles inland, and there establish our first colony. Our field has never been touched by any missionary agency. It lies between the missions of the American Board and the Garenganze and Methodist Episcopal Missions. Our task is greater than our strength, but God is with us."

The "Connellan Mission."

THIS is the title of an evangelistic effort on the part of Rev. T. Connellan, his brother, Mr. Joseph Connellan, and other converted Roman Catholics, to bring the blessings of a free salvation home to every Roman Catholic in Ireland. During more than five years Father Connellan and his brother have been engaged in this difficult, not to say dangerous, undertaking. Their efforts have already been signally owned of God, and their influence for good seems to be steadily growing among their countrymen. The work is fast assuming national proportions, and a committee has been formed in Dublin for the purpose of affording Mr. Connellan sympathy and assistance.

Letter to the Editor.

THE "FRIENDS" and "HIGHER CRITICISM."

DEAR SIR,—Under the above heading in THE CHRISTIAN for September 2, you publish a letter from Fielden Thorp to the Editor of The Friend, in which he states certain anxieties which he and other valued Friends share on account of things taught, and, apparently, other things which he (not being present) had imagined were taught at the Scarborough Summer School. Concurrently with this letter, published in The Friend of August 27, was also an editorial which practically answers some of these anxieties; therefore I shall be glad if you will allow me, in fairness to your readers and to the Summer School, to give some extracts from it.

Calling attention to this "valuable letter," "expressive of the needed caution and reserve which becomes us all in listening to able exponents of views that may run counter to commonly-received opinions of beloved fathers in the Church," the article continues:—

"We need the caution to consider in our utterances the tender consciences of others as well as our own. The devotional meetings held every morning at Scarborough were times of marked favour and blessing, and it is not easy for those who were absent to realise the reverent attitude which prevailed. In listening attentively to the lectures, we confess that theories were suggested to us which appeared to us far from proven....For ourselves, we fully believe that Jonah and Daniel were genuine historical persons; in fact, any doubt respecting Daniel was only incidentally alluded to at the Summer School, and was not elaborated.

"But with great deference to our honoured friend Fielden Thorp, we question whether it is wise to import into the discussion the very serious suggestion that the real objection to the belief in the historical character of Jonah and Daniel lies in the facts being miraculous. We think that even men like Prof. G. A. Smith should be judged by what they state and by their own arguments, and not by the suppositions of those who differ from them. We listened attentively to the lectures at Scarborough, and cannot remember a single suggestion, from first to last, impugning the existence of the miraculous. No lecturer could have spoken more strongly than G. A. Smith on the high moral teaching of the Book of Jonah, and on its manifest inspiration. The effect on the minds of those who listened to him was an increased admiration for the beautiful and inspired teaching it reveals....Our faith does not rest on the question as to whether the Book of Jonah is actual history or whether it is an inspired parable. On this literary question Christians differ in judgment, but in loyalty to God and to conscience we trust we are cordially united and prepared to allow liberty of intellectual thought, as well as liberty in modes of action, when combined with reverent loyalty to the convictions and restraints of the Holy Spirit."—Yours sincerely,

Lincoln. MARY SPENCER.

Baptist Ministers in Conference.—On Tuesday and Wednesday last week a series of meetings were held at Romsey, in Hampshire, under the auspices of the Baptist Ministers and Missionaries' Prayer Union. A paper on "The Preaching Used in the Conversion of Souls" was read by Rev. R. B. Morrison, of Upper Parkstone; and another on "Ought a Preacher to be Satisfied without Conversions?" by Rev. Charles Joseph, of Portsmouth. Conference followed each paper. On the first day of Conference Rev. F. B. Meyer, of London, took part in the Conference, and preached a sermon, which proved very helpful. A devotional spirit pervaded the proceedings, and on the afternoon and evening of the second day addresses in promotion of personal holiness were delivered.

Barnet Fair.—As in former years the male choir of the London City Mission visited Barnet during the four days of the fair. Taking their stand in the centre of the town, amid all the gaiety, scream, whirling excitement, and sin, they "held forth" by speech and song, pleading with and persuading sinners to believe, embrace, and obey the blessed Gospel of God's dear Son. Altogether eleven meetings were conducted, and fifty-three addresses delivered. Things ran smoothly and well from first to finish, tact, arrangement, wisdom, and past experience being alike conducive to this end. Many thousands of tracts and booklets were distributed in and about the fair by the friends of the Open-Air Mission, who were present day by day, speaking with the people individually as opportunity afforded.

Temperance Jottings.

The guardians of the Royston Union have decided to allow the workhouse officials one pint of milk per day instead of the beer formerly provided.

A document signed by the Archbishops and the Bishop of Lichfield has been sent to every incumbent in the diocese of Lichfield, suggesting the formation of a branch of the C.E.T.S. in every parish where one does not already exist.

Dr. Eden, the Bishop-designate of Wakefield, is an ardent Temperance worker, and is always to be found on platforms whenever any important work is to be done in connection with the movement. Mrs. Eden is a daughter of Canon Ellison, the founder of the C.E.T.S.

Sweden and Norway are now among the soberest countries in Europe. In the beginning of the present century they were the most drunken countries in the world. Their present comparative sobriety, says Mr. Jungte, of Manchester, is the result almost exclusively of stringent liquor legislation.

Of the 1955 ministers belonging to the Baptist Denomination in Great Britain and Ireland, no fewer than 1556 are, according to the annual report of the Baptist Total Abstinence Association, pledged total abstainers from all intoxicating drink. A large percentage of the missionaries labouring on the foreign field are also included in the total abstinence list.

The Archbishop of Canterbury has promised to preside over the important National Temperance Convention which will be held in the Royal Albert Hall on October 5, 6, and 7. Amongst the subjects announced for discussion are the Irish Sunday Closing, an English Sunday Closing Bill, and a National Temperance Sunday. Lord Kinnaird and Mr. A. F. Hills are taking active parts in the Convention, of which Mr. C. Pinhorn is secretary, at 33, Memorial Hall, E.C.

At the International Temperance Congress held at Brussels one of the leading discussions had relation to the merits of prohibition and local option. Another debate dealt with temperance societies for children, the principal paper being read by Mr. Wakely. The temperance catering movement in England was expounded by Mr. Leonard, of London. Dealing with the rôle of alcohol in paralytic madness, Dr. Peters, director of the colony of lunatics at Gheel, said that statistics would incontestably prove that alcohol was the most frequent cause of paralytic madness. Dr. La Dame (Geneva) held heredity to be the most grave question raised by inebriety.

The temperance work of the season at Mildmay Conference Hall was inaugurated last week by a Gospel temperance mission, in connection with the National Temperance League's "Twentieth Century Crusade." The mission was conducted by Mr. J. Louis Fenn, who preached on two Sundays, the 5th and 12th inst., and spoke each week evening; and was assisted by Messrs. Robert Rae, William Noble, Frederick Sherlock, J. Ogram Webb, and W. P. Goulding. Two special afternoon meetings for women were addressed by Mrs. Vause and Mrs. Durrant. The meetings were well attended, and pledges were taken every day, some of which gave special joy to the workers. The whole mission was of a helpful character, and has given a great impetus to the temperance work at the Conference Hall.

Important action has been taken by the Liverpool magistrates in the matter of serving young children with drink in public-houses. On Sept. 30, 1896, the justices passed a resolution requesting the police to report to the justices, at the annual licensing meeting in 1897, any cases in which, after written warning, a licensee served children apparently under thirteen years of age with liquor for consumption off the premises. On March 24, 1897, the justices passed a further resolution, requesting the police to serve notice upon the licensee and registered owner of the premises of the specific charge alleged in every case recorded by the police against a licensee for infringement of the previous resolution. The Head Constable reports to the Bench at the present Licensing Sessions that out of 2291 licensed houses 672 were found to be in the practice of serving young children, but after having received copy of the resolution passed by the justices only 104 have reports recorded against them. When these were called up it was found that they had not received the police notice in time, and at once agreed to accept the rule now laid down.

Scottish Notes.

Rev. W. M. Mackay, Troon, is regarded as a likely successor to Rev. W. M. Clow, Free South Church, Aberdeen, who was recently appointed colleague pastor of Barclay Church, Edinburgh.

A new work has been commenced at Maryhill under the leadership of Mr. Albert W. Bean, from the Pastors' College, and already the stamp of the Divine approval is visible in the movement from the numerous testimonies to saving grace experienced at the meetings.

The Free Church has now six evangelists in its Home Mission staff. Much of their work during this year has been in villages and country districts. All speak heartily of the co-operation they have received wherever they have gone, and the tone of their committee's report is one of great hopefulness.

Mr. Alexander Mitchell is about to leave Glasgow, in order to take charge of the mission printing press of the National Bible Society of Scotland at Hankow, China. At a farewell missionary meeting, held in St. George's Cross Tabernacle, testimony was borne to Mr. Mitchell's zeal and usefulness as a Christian worker in Glasgow, and earnest prayer offered that he may be used to promote and extend the usefulness of the Press at Hankow.

A fine new hall, in connection with the Railway Mission, has been opened in the Abbeyhill district, Edinburgh. This is a growing district, largely composed of the working class, a large proportion of whom are connected with the railway. The opening of such a hall is a matter for great thanksgiving. In connection with the opening Mr. W. D. Dunn conducted a series of meetings. The Word has been preached in great power and clearness, and much blessing has been the result.

Last week "Colonel" Ruthwell and staff, from Glasgow, finished a three days' campaign on the occasion of the opening of a new Salvation Army barrack at Clydebank. The new building is very attractive in appearance, and contains ample accommodation for the rapidly-growing work of the local corps. Clydebank has grown more rapidly than any other town in Scotland during recent years, and the efforts of Christian workers have been strained to the utmost in trying to cope with the great need.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mrs. Baeyertz is holding her fourth mission at Hull, the meetings on this occasion being in Newington Presbyterian Church (Rev. Andrew Allan's).

The Weaver Brothers are having an encouraging mission at White Memorial F.C., Glasgow. The pastor, Rev. James Paterson, being in hearty sympathy, is cheered by accessions to his fellowship.

Mr. James Eyres, Liverpool, commences a fourteen days' mission on Sunday next, at Crowle, Doncaster; to be followed (D.V.) by missions in Kent, and other places during October and November.

Requests for Prayer.—For Gospel services by Rev. A. T. Jones, of Newport, Mon., from Sept. 20 to 24, at Frogmore-street Baptist Chapel, Abergavenny.—For blessing upon the Convention, to be held in the Christian Union-buildings, Dublin, Sept. 27 to Oct. 1.—That God will bring glory to his name in the salvation of souls at the evangelistic services to be held (D.V.) at Lorresmoor Mission Hall, Worcester, from Sept. 19 to 26, by Pastor Herbert R. Francis, from India.

Week of Prayer, 1898.—The Council of the Evangelical Alliance have issued their annual call to united prayer at the commencement of the New Year. They say: "We have need to pray. We need the spirit of unity and of love in order to overcome the influences that would draw us apart. We need the spirit of enlightenment that we may have understanding of the times and know what Israel ought to do. We need the spirit of quickening and of power that we may fulfil the office committed to us of witnessing to the world of our Divine Saviour and Lord. We feel this need to be all the more urgent because many around us are teaching that the world is to be saved by human agencies of government or of science, whilst others are teaching that it is to be saved by submission to ecclesiastical authority. Let those who hold that salvation is of the Lord, and that of grace through faith, prove themselves to be of the true Church by their united efforts to spread the Gospel and by their one cry to Heaven for the continued and enlarged outpouring of the Spirit of God."

Personalia.

Rev. Lancelot Holland recommenced his meetings last Sunday at Addison Hall, Addison-road, W.

Rev. W. Hay M. Aitken will preach at St. Peter's, Islington, on Sunday, September 19, at 11 and 3.15.

Canon Keene, rector of Navan, has been chosen Bishop of Meath in place of Dr. Peacocke, who was appointed Archbishop of Dublin.

Mr. Chas. Cook, until the repairs at the Metropolitan Music Hall are completed, will hold his Sunday evening services at the West London Theatre, where he commences his winter's work on Sunday, Oct. 3.

The Earl Compton, president of the Ragged School Union, and a warm sympathiser in Christian and philanthropic work, has succeeded, through the death of his father, to the estate and title of the Marquis of Northampton.

Pastor Fliedner, of Madrid, has been on a lecture tour through Germany. The new school building at Madrid is making good progress, and will soon be ready for occupation. Many parents have announced their intention to send their children, for whom there is no accommodation in the old quarters.

Miss L. E. Cooke (May), daughter of the Rev. J. Surman Cooke, has sailed for the Cape, where, at the request of the Student Volunteer Missionary Union Committee, she will visit the girls' schools and colleges for missionary and evangelistic meetings. She takes this deputation work en route for Bombay, where she hopes early in the year to join the University Missionary Settlement for work among the Parsees.

Dr. Daniells, of Chicago (writes Dr. Barnardo), who has been labouring with great success in India for the past five years, and is now on his way back to India, is stopping for a short time at the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, where he addressed large audiences with great acceptance last Sunday. Dr. Daniells is open to engagements for a few weeks, and his testimony will be found most refreshing and encouraging. I strongly recommend him to congregations and missions needing temporary pulpit supplies. Address him at the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, London, E.

The Stundists.

The law of Russia against her citizens dissenting from the Greek Church is still in full force, and persecution and banishment may be expected by any who refuse to comply with Orthodox teaching. Many faithful men are still in banishment, having been taken from their homes and families, sent to prison, and transported to some remote part of the empire, where they are compelled to spend several years amongst Tartars, Armenians, and Grusinians, whose languages they do not know, and where they are left without the means of earning their living.

The sufferings of these brethren have called out the sympathy of the Church of God in various lands, and many prayers, as well as gifts of money, have been offered on their behalf. The Evangelical Alliance have done good service by receiving and distributing these to the sufferers; they continue to do so still, and hitherto they have found trustworthy channels of communication for supplying the needs of the banished brethren.

I would strongly advise any further gifts on their behalf to be sent to Mr. A. J. Arnold, 7, Adam-street, Strand, or to the editor of The Christian, 12, Paternoster-buildings, and that sympathisers should refrain from bestowing their gifts through unaccredited travelling applicants.

F. W. Baedeker.

The Congregational Church Aid Society's report is distinctly encouraging as compared with former years. The working expenses have been diminished by almost one-half, and its grants have amounted to £1,162 more than in the previous year. The minimum salary of ministers in English-aided churches has been raised to £80, and in Wales to £70. The goal of the society is to raise this minimum in time to £100, and under the present able leadership, and the turn in the agricultural tide, this does not seem so distant as it did a few years ago.

The Sultan and the Armenians.—According to a Reuter's telegram, the Sultan has ordered the formation of a travelling Commission, consisting of two Mohammedans, two Gregorian Armenians, one Catholic Armenian, and one Greek, charged to visit the Armenian vilayets which were the chief sufferers in the late troubles. The Commission is to raise subscriptions for rebuilding the Armenian schools, churches, and monasteries destroyed during the disturbances, and also to establish orphanages. It is to start immediately, and begin its labours before winter sets in.

Obituary.

REV. E. A. LITTON.

A well-known Evangelical clergyman has passed away in the person of Rev. E. A. Litton, rector of Naunton, Andoversford, Cheltenham. Mr. Litton, who had attained an advanced age, was the author of several very useful works. He was Bampton Lecturer in 1856, taking as his subject, "The Connection of the Church of the Old and New Testaments," and the volume which was afterwards published with this title is highly esteemed. He also wrote a "Guide to the Study of the Scriptures," but his principal work was entitled, "Introduction to Dogmatic Theology on the Basis of the Thirty-nine Articles of the Church of England," in two volumes (1882, 1892). Mr. Litton, who accepted the rectory of Naunton in 1860, had been Examining Chaplain to Bishops Longley, Villiers, and Baring, of Durham.

MRS. OSCAR MICHELSEN.

The death is announced of Sophia Jane, wife of Rev. Oscar Michelsen, of Tongoa, New Hebrides. This is a great blow to the devoted missionary, also to the force of Christian workers in the island group. At the beginning of the year Mrs. Michelsen's health caused much anxiety, and in the spring she was taken to New South Wales for rest and change. Strength did not return, however, and the much-loved worker fell asleep at Wollongong. Mrs. Michelsen was the youngest daughter of the late Rev. Henry Hare, chaplain to the forces, and before her marriage was for several years a worker under Dr. Barnardo at the Boys' Home, Stepney Causeway. Those who know Mr. Michelsen and his remarkable work on Tongoa, will remember him at the throne of grace in this time of deep affliction.

REV. F. FITCH, CROMER.

First as curate, then as vicar, Mr. Fitch, who died a few days ago, laboured in Cromer for fifty-three years, only retiring from active work about twelve months ago, when incapacitated through advancing years. Untiring in pastoral diligence, and active in every good work, he was a familiar figure in Cromer and the district round. Indeed, it has been said that before Cromer had attained its present large proportions, the vicarage family knew all the parisioners by their Christian names. None were sick or in sorrow but the vicar visited them. Mr. Fitch's devotion to the cause of foreign missions was indicated by the ungrudging gift of a son and daughter to that noble service, in connection with the C.M.S. Miss Caroline Fitch died at her post, near Mombasa, and the son, Rev. Edmund Fitch, shortly after his return, for health's sake, to England. Mr. Fitch was a sturdy Evangelical, a life governor of the C.M.S., and for many years attended the Islington meetings.

REV. T. J. CLARKE, YORK.

Many are mourning the death of Rev. T. J. Clarke, vicar of St. Paul's, Holgate, York, at the age of sixty-one. Having for fourteen years laboured in Southport, Mr. Clarke began work in York in 1874. Canon Fausset, the oldest incumbent in York, in a tribute given in last week's Record, says:—"From 1874 to the present time, twenty-three years, I have been in intimate Christian fellowship with him in this city. Abundant in labours in cottage and mansion, school and Church, he gave himself little or no rest until his bodily frame gave way at a comparatively early age. The Mission church at the railway foundry, with its large schools, is due to his energy. Earnest in his preaching, and sound in the faith, he always pressed on his hearers the cardinal truths of Scripture emphasised at the Reformation, justification by faith only issuing in practical holiness. Loyal to the Church and Prayer-book, he was kind and courteous to all, his motto being 'Grace be to all those who love our Lord Jesus in sincerity.' Secretary for many years to the York Church Missionary Association, he consecrated two of his sons to the Mission-field. All the leading Evangelical societies had his sympathy and help."

REV. DR. ROBERTS, WREXHAM.

Many will hear with sorrow of the death of Rev. David Roberts, D.D., of Wrexham, who passed away a few days ago at Liverpool, aged seventy-nine. Dr. Roberts had occupied for nearly sixty years a prominent place in the religious life of Wales as a popular pulpit orator. He was a native of Bangor, and was descended from a very pronounced Calvinistic Methodist stock, both his parents belonging to that body. Coming, however, under the influence of Dr. Arthur Jones, the young man transferred his membership to the Congregational body. His first pastorate was in Anglesey, where he was ordained in 1839. He subsequently laboured at Pendref, Carnarvon; and in 1871 removed to Wrexham, assuming charge of the Queen-street church, which he held until his death. Some years ago Dr. Roberts paid a visit to America, preaching to the Welsh wherever he found them, and vast crowds followed him from place to place. He stood in the front rank of Welsh poets, being known in bardic circles as Dewi Ogwen. In 1880 he was elected chairman of the Welsh Congregational Union, and the subject of his presidential address was "The Christian Ministry." For some time he edited a Welsh monthly, Yr Ardd (The Garden), the pages of which he enriched with his own contributions. He brought out also two volumes of sermons, the last of which, under the title of "A Letter from Heaven," was dedicated, by permission, to Her Majesty the Queen.

THE BOOK WORLD.

THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY.

This house has just published some interesting works. The Growth of the Kingdom of God, by Sidney L. Gulick, missionary A.B.C.F.M., in Japan (6s.) sets itself to answer the question whether the Kingdom of God is growing in the world. It was originally written for Japanese young men. It has now been expanded into an argument for Christianity based upon the facts that Christianity is steadily growing in number of adherents, in wealth, and power for aggressive work, in its influence over the dominant and progressive nations, and in adaptability to the manifold needs of the age. A valuable feature of the book is the way in which this growth in various departments is made evident to the eye by means of twenty-four charts. Sundays Round the World, by Rev. F. Hastings. (5s.) Mr. Hastings has visited most accessible and some not easily accessible parts of the world. He has given the reader twenty-six sketches of how Sunday is observed in different regions and nations. The old book on the Society's list, "Sundays in Many Lands," found a large number of readers. This account, a generation later, of how Sunday is observed to-day "round the world" should be equally fortunate in benefiting and pleasing those who read it. The House We Live In, by W. J. Gordon, forms No. 7 of the "Working World Library." It is full of interesting and curious information about the houses used by different peoples, and is well illustrated. The Rise and Spread of Christianity in Europe, by W. H. Summers. (1s.) A little book dealing with a very large subject. In a clear and comprehensive way it traces the conquest in Europe of heathenism by Christianity. It is No. 14 of "Present Day Primers." Masters of To-Morrow, by the late William J. Lacey (2s. 6d.) brings together a remarkable collection of incidents and sayings to show how by a wise and right use of our powers and opportunity each one of us may make the best use of life, and in this way become master of our own to-morrow. Elisha, the Man of Abel-Meholah, by Mrs. O. F. Walton. (2s. 6d.) Mrs. Walton is known to tens of thousands of readers through her delightful stories. To a narrower circle she is known through her helpful study of the life of Nehemiah. This new book has been prepared for use at mothers' meetings, missionary working parties, and all gatherings of a religious or social kind, where short, pointed, and instructive readings are required.

Bo-Peep. The new volume of this "Treasury for the Little Ones" will furnish them with a boundless store of entertainment these lengthening autumn and winter evenings. (2s. 6d. Cassell & Co.)

The Queen's London, Messrs. Cassell's well-known publication, is being reissued in popular form. The whole work will be completed in fifteen weekly parts (6d. each). The first part is filled with views of the Diamond Jubilee procession.

Songs of Living Things. By Alfred H. Vine. (R. Culley, Ludgate-circus.) If the young folks for whom these diverting verses are meant will not be too critical about the irregularity of the rhyme, they may find much to excite their interest.

The Address recently delivered by Dr. Robertson Nicoll to students at the Theological College, Bala, on "The Secret of Christian Experience," is now published in neat form by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton (1d.). It will be found well worthy of studious perusal.

Practical Hints on Writing for the Press. By Joseph B. Lamb. (1s. net. Bradbury, Agnew & Co., Bouverie-street, E.C.) This little handbook for would-be authors is evidently the outcome of experimental knowledge, and we can heartily commend it to the great and growing army of writers.

The Homiletic Review ably sustains the many improvements recently introduced. The departments of seed thoughts, sermonic suggestion, and illustrations are especially rich. The sermons are well selected, and Dr. Gregory's "School of Bible Study" is a section of great and permanent value. (1s. monthly. Funk and Wagnalls.)

The Practice of the Presence of God: Being Conversations and Letters of Nicholas Herman of Lorraine. (1s. Nisbet.) Somewhat mystical in character, this little work will doubtless prove of service to earnest and thoughtful Christians. It has been translated from the French, and is supplied with an introduction by Mrs. Pearsall Smith.

Books for the Nursery.—Messrs. Partridge have issued several very attractive books for the young, including Happy and Gay and Pleasures and Joys (1s. 6d. each); also Merry Playmates and Frolic and Fun (1s. each). Here are stories and pictures (many of them coloured) that will assuredly promote gladness in the nursery.

Wee Willie Winkie. A final and "souvenir number" of this entertaining serial for the youngsters is sent out by its editors, Lady Aberdeen and her daughter, Lady Marjorie Gordon, who have been obliged to relinquish their loved work. This number contains an amusing story for children written by the late Prof. Drummond. (6d. Partridge & Co.)

Steps to the Higher Life. (2s. 6d. net. Swan Sonnenschein and Co.). This is a compilation of short daily readings from the writings of Rev. H. B. Chapman, of St. Luke's, Camberwell. They contain very many high and ennobling thoughts. The keynote of the whole may be said to be Christian self-sacrifice for the good of others. Now and then we meet a paragraph that grates on our spiritual sensibility, and seems out of keeping with the rest.

Inspiration of the Bible: Considerations addressed to the Deist and the Agnostic, and a Manual for the Young Believer. By Pastor Gordon Forlong. (1s. 6d. C. J. Thynne.) Though a little out of date in some of its statements and references, this is a book that fully deserves the attention of the classes specially addressed. The dicta of scientists and the dying testimonies of great men are features of particular value. The pages abundantly illustrate the veracity of Holy Scripture.

The English Church, the Priest, and the Altar. By Francis Peek. (Lawrence & Bullen.) These pages describe and review some of the manuals of the Sacerdotal party in the Church of England. It is important that the doctrines and practices of that party should be brought under the attention of Christians generally, in order that their Romish character and unspiritual tendencies may be adequately realised. Mr. Peek's book is a very useful contribution to the great controversy.

The Greater Gospel. By John M. Bamford. (1s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) According to the view of the author, the Gospel of the life is greater than that of the lip. The kernel of his powerfully conceived and ably written little work may be expressed in this sentence from one of the closing pages: "When the Church so nearly approximates to the Divine nature that it may be written 'The Church is love'—in that day the last argument will be taken out of the mouth of infidelity."

'TWEEN THE GLOAMIN' AND THE MIRK. By Jos. Wright. A penny popular edition of the author's "Scenes of Scottish Life," in homely prose and verse. Copies may be had from Mr. Wright, 219, Argyle-street, Glasgow.

THE FEAST OF HARVEST. By Frank Adlam. (3d. Hart & Co.) An easy and effective anthem, with solo, quartet, and chorus, which will doubtless be much used in the coming season. Mr. Adlam's high standard is here fully maintained.

GOSPEL CHRONOLOGY: A lecture delivered at Banbury, Easter, 1897, on the precise date of the ministry and death of Jesus Christ. By Amherst D. Tyssen, D.C.L. (1s. Williams & Norgate.) A thoughtful study, concluding with the suggestion of March 26, A.D. 34, as the probable date of the crucifixion.

Messrs. James Nisbet & Co., Limited, will issue, among their theological publications in the autumn, a volume under the editorship of Rev. W. E. Bowen, to be entitled "The Faith of Centuries," containing a re-statement by eminent writers of the cardinal points of the Christian faith. Well-known writers will contribute to the volume.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Annual Meetings for Reports of Seaside Services will be held at St. Martin's Town Hall, Charing Cross, September 30, at 3 and 6.30 p.m. Rev. E. A. Stuart, M.A., will preside at three o'clock.

International S.S. Lessons.

September 26.

OPTIONAL LESSON.

"The Sower and the Seed."—Matt. xiii. 24-30; 36-43.

Golden Text: "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap."—Gal. vi. 7.

THE lessons of the quarter have shown us how Paul sowed the good seed of the Kingdom, and in some cases the results of his sowing; so it will be in harmony with the past subjects to speak to-day of the Master's parable on the same question.

The day on which this sermon was preached was one of great excitement. The crowd so great that Jesus had to put out in a boat a little way from land. Note Christ's method of teaching by means of illustration drawn from things around Him. Truth is never so effective as when put in a concrete form, especially in a life. A holy life is an unanswerable argument. Think first of the Sowing (24-37). The sower is the Son of Man. There must be a sower. The seed does not spring up naturally from the soil. For > Every virtue we possess,

> And every victory won,
> And every thought of holiness,
> Are his alone.

The seed comes from God. Who is the Son of Man? Jesus first and then it means every good man through whom Jesus works. All Christians should be sowers of the seed which they possess. In every Christian there should be seen the fruit of the Spirit, which is "love, joy, peace," etc. (Gal. v. 22, 23); and this fruit is not to be merely enjoyed by its possessor, but it is to be scattered abroad in the hearts of all around. For fruit is seed. If the Son of Man and his followers do not sow good seed, the devil will sow tares (25, 39). If the enemy can do this only while men sleep, what an immense number of slumbrous Christians there must be. Draw attention to the fact that Christ believed in the existence of an evil spirit. If we do not believe in this, we shall have to account for the presence of evil in the world by some other means.

The field in which we are to sow is the world—home, school, business. It is a large area; but impress on class that if every boy and girl kept his own little garden in which to sow the good seed the whole field would soon be covered.

II. The Growing.—We need to remember that when the good seed is sown it is only seed. Young Christians are disappointed because they cannot bear fruit more quickly. The seed must grow and put forth blade and stalk, and then after long preparatory work the fruit is borne. When a boy becomes a Christian he must not expect to be a perfect saint the next day—he must grow. The old habits take a long time to eradicate, and the good seed must be tended with patient care. The beginning is the most difficult time. The young shoot has a struggle to make its way through the soil in springtime. For a moment there is bright sunshine, then comes a cold north-easter with a hailstorm, and the young plant moans, "Oh, I shall never be perfect with this cruel hail." But the sun comes out, and says, "Look up at me, little flower. I am perfect, and I have a peculiar power in me which shall draw out all your faculties and make you perfect too." Like that flower, we have to struggle through many discouragements, and it is a very slow process this growth in holiness, but the Sun of Righteousness shines in all his brightness to aid us, and He says, "My grace is sufficient for thee."

Impress on elder scholars that as there are weeds in the most fertile field so there will be wicked people in every church, and they must not allow themselves to be driven from church membership because of the bad example set by the few. We might uproot the weeds—turn the wicked out of the church—but we should make mistakes, and turn out good men too. "Let both grow together till the harvest."

III. The Reaping.—People sometimes speak of God as cruel in punishing the sinner, but God is not vindictive, He is just; and so the law holds good in spiritual as well as material matters, "What we sow we reap." Our harvest will simply be the hundredfold of what we have sown. No one can evade God's law. If a lad will sow "wild oats," sooner or later he has to reap them. May we sow such seed that when the angel reapers descend they may be able to gather our golden sheaves into the garner of God.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

Bishop Browne will be enthroned in Bristol Cathedral about the end of October.

Rev. C. H. Simpkinson, rector of Farnham, Surrey, has accepted the important rectory of Stoke-on-Trent.

The Bishop of Durham has selected Rev. J. V. Kemp, curate of Hendon, Sunderland, for the living of Escomoe, near Bishop Auckland.

We stated last week that Mr. F. A. Bevan had given £100 to the English Chapel Fund, Marienbad. It should have been Mr. Alfred Bevan.

Rev. F. W. Edmondes, Rector of Coity, Bridgend, has been appointed Archdeacon of Llandaff, in succession to the late Archdeacon Griffiths.

An anonymous donation of £100 has just been received by the Church Army for the purpose of placing another of the society's mission and colportage vans—to be known as the "Alcock Memorial Van"—in the Ripon diocese. The Church Army has now thirty-eight of these vans.

A new church is being erected at Horwich, in Lancashire. It is much needed owing to the increase in the population brought about by the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Works. The building will cost over £7000, and will accommodate, when finished, 780 worshippers.

At Witham, Essex, the vicar has absolved a penitent who had renounced his error in joining the Church of Rome. Six persons only were present. In answer to the vicar's questions, the penitent renounced the Church of Rome, and intimated his intention of embracing the Anglican Church as "the true and only Church in the land."

The necessity for extensive restoration at Chichester Cathedral has become urgent. It is proposed, in the first place, to rebuild the north-west tower. Then, as funds are supplied, the Executive Committee will undertake the repair of the south transept, the renewing and repairing of the dilapidated pavement of the nave and aisles, and other work.

Special services have been held in connection with the 800th anniversary of Chollerton Parish Church, near Newcastle. The church contains architectural relics of great antiquarian interest; the oldest remains are the carefully-preserved Saxon stones to be seen in the north and south walls, as well as over the inner doorway of the church. A church stood upon the site of the existing building in Saxon times, and Wilfrid, whose name is so closely associated with Hexham Abbey and Ripon Cathedral, is believed to have been the builder.

Congregational.

Mr. George Barker, B.A., has notified his willingness to become the Warden of the Lancashire College settlement in Hulme, Manchester.

Under the auspices of the Hull and East Riding Union a site has been purchased at Hessle, near Hull, and an iron church erected thereon. Rev. G. T. Coster, late of Stroud, has accepted the pastorate.

Dr. John Brown, of Bedford, author of the "Life of Bunyan," and of the well-known work on the Pilgrim Fathers, is preparing a new "Congregational Union Lecture," dealing with the vexed question of Apostolic Succession.

Rev. A. J. Palmer, of Folkestone, was seized with sudden illness at the close of his sermon on Sunday evening week at Tontine-street Church, and had to retire to the vestry. While there he swooned. On regaining consciousness, Mr. Palmer was taken home and has since been resting.

In connection with the meetings of the Congregational Union, to be held in Birmingham shortly, many offers of hospitality have been received from ministers and members of other denominations. The Bishop of Coventry has offered to entertain three guests at St. Philip's Rectory.

The opening services of the Robinson Memorial Church at Gainsborough culminated a fortnight ago in the long-expected visit of Dr. Charles Ray Palmer, of Yale, New Haven. Great interest was evinced in the proceedings, and on his return to the United States, Dr. Palmer hopes to appeal successfully for a substantial sum towards the liquidation of the debt, which now stands at about £3000.

The fifty-eighth annual assembly of the Congregational Union of England and Wales will be held at Birmingham, under the presidency of Rev. Dr. Berry. At one of the meetings Dr. Guinness Rogers and Rev. R. Baldwin Brindley will speak on the national mission of Congregationalism. Other subjects to be considered are "Opportunities of Work for Nonconformist Girls," "How to Increase the Class of Small Farmers with a view to Reviving our Rural Churches," and "Movements Affecting the Religious Life of our Boys."

Resignations.—Rev. J. R. Walker, Brent; Rev. W. Clayton Fuidge, Park Church, Kidderminster.

Calls.—Mr. D. Russell Scott, of Mansfield College, Oxford, to Wick; Rev. Ernest G. Lovell, Blockley, to Chipping Norton; Mr. W. Macfadyen Scott to Upperton, Eastbourne; Mr. Frank Doddridge Humphreys, to St. John's Church, Ipswich (all accepted).

Baptist.

The church at the East London Tabernacle has addressed a cordial invitation to Rev. W. Y. Fullerton, of Leicester, to undertake the pastorate.

Preparations for the autumnal assembly of the Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland at Plymouth, on Oct 4, are all but complete. It is twenty-two years since the Union met in this town, and between 600 and 800 delegates are expected.

In connection with Highgate-road chapel, N.W., a society has been formed to visit the London Temperance Hospital, Hampstead-road, and hold services in the wards on Sunday evenings. The members have also undertaken to visit the St. Pancras Parochial Infirmary, Dartmouth-park-hill, each week.

The congregation in the Walkley district of Sheffield have decided to make important extensions. The chapel, when extended, will seat about 500 persons, and the school-room, which is to be on the same level, a similar number. Since the settlement of the present minister, Rev. A. G. Haste, the cause has made steady and satisfactory progress.

The memorial-stone of the new church in Victoria-place, Glasgow, was laid a few days ago in presence of a large number of spectators. The building has accommodation for 620 persons, with halls to hold 340, and the total cost is £3300. Bailie M'Cutcheon, who presided, said that the pastor (Rev. John McLean) had for years been exercising his ministry on the South Side, and had carried on evangelistic work with great success. Rev. F. H. Roberts laid the stone.

The scheme for purchasing the freehold of the Borough-road Baptist Chapel, Southwark—so as to perpetuate the good work of the late Rev. G. W. McCree, Rev. James Harcourt, Rev. John Stevenson, and the many godly workers who preceded them—has so far advanced that the amount agreed upon by the Corporation of the City of London (£1750) for the purchase price of the freehold is to be paid this month. The deacons still need about £600 to complete the amount. Mr. Norman, 179, Manor-place, Walworth, is one of the treasurers.

Calls.—Mr. Edwin Smith, of Regent's Park College, to Carey Chapel, Moulton, Northampton; Rev. Walter Walsh, of Rye-hill, Newcastle-on-Tyne, to the Gilfillan Memorial Church, Dundee; Rev. W. Chambers, Shoreham, to the united churches of New Romney and Lydd (all accepted).

Methodist.

Rev. John Fletcher Porter, Primitive Methodist, has accepted the invitation of the Hackney-road Circuit as superintendent for a fifth year, 1898-9.

A Methodist new church has been opened at Ballymena at a cost of £3200. Rev. Wesley Guard, of Dublin, preached on the occasion to a large congregation, his theme being "Christian Churches, National Blessings."

The foundation stones of a new Wesleyan chapel have been laid at Sacriston. It will provide sitting accommodation for about 400 worshippers, and the whole scheme will include day and Sunday schools, and involves an expenditure of upwards of £5000.

The fifty-fourth report of the Primitive Methodist Missionary Society shows that there are in the United Kingdom forty-three missions with fifty-six ministers and 443 lay preachers. In Africa, eight principal with twenty-four out-stations, nine European ministers, five native ministers, forty-five native lay preachers.

The new session of Headingley College opened last week with an address by Professor Banks on Cyprian of Carthage, of whom he said: "His writings did much to spread the pernicious doctrine of sacerdotalism, though that sprang mainly from heathenism. Cyprian and Augustine had fatally misled the Church, and their narrow and unworthy conceptions would have to be abandoned."

The pastoral issued by direction of the Wesleyan Conference states that last year 43,994 new members were received, but as many as 22,655 were reported as having "ceased to meet in class," a large proportion of this loss resulting from removals. Wesleyan Methodists are reminded of their responsibility to look after such, and at the same time to make their church fellowship more real, intense, and spiritual.

The Wesleyan Year-book for 1897-8 gives the following figures as to the position of the denomination. The number of members is 607,090. Of these 438,969 belong to Great Britain, 27,164 to Ireland and Irish missions, 44,573 to foreign missions, 1766 to the French Conference, 47,872 to the South African Conference, and 46,746 to the West Indian Conference. The number of members on trial is 67,304, ministers 2326, on probation 362, supernumaries 384. The total number of declared Wesleyans in the army and navy is stated to be 23,467.

Presbyterian.

Rev. Z. B. Woffendale is holding a special mission in Somers Town Church, Ossulton-street, N.W.

A converted Jewess was recently baptized by Rev. G. A. Johnston Ross, at Westbourne-grove Church.

A friend of the congregation at Leeds has presented a site for the proposed church and halls. Building operations will commence at once.

The church at Stratford, E., of which Rev. A. Jeffrey is pastor, has undergone thorough renovation. During the past nine years the sum of £3615 has been expended on the buildings, including the extinction of a debt of £1500.

The ministers' Widows and Orphans' Fund of the English Presbyterian Church has at present a membership of 401. There are seventy-one widows and sixty-one orphans annuitants on the fund, the capital of which has now reached the sum of £59,558.

Rev. Dr. John Roberts, moderator-elect of the Calvinistic Methodist General Assembly, who is at present in this country on furlough, is arranging to return to Khasia, India, next month. If he should not be able to return in time for next year's Assembly, it is probable that Rev. Thomas Roberts, of Bethesda, will be requested to accept the presidency.

There is some probability of the establishment of a Presbyterian church house in London. The fine old Bloomsbury mansion now occupied by the Presbyterian Theological College is to be vacated early next year, the college being transferred to Cambridge. A section of Presbyterian authorities in England are in favour of retaining the building as a church house.

In connection with the 250th anniversary of the completion of the Shorter Catechism, Mr. W. Carruthers, F.R.S., is about to issue (through Mr. T. F. Downie) a facsimile reproduction of the original printed copy ordered by the House of Commons on November 25, 1647. Six hundred copies were ordered to be printed on that occasion, and one of these is preserved in the British Museum.

Rev. David Eades, late of St. Leonards, has been inducted as minister of Durham-road Church, Gateshead. The pastorate was rendered vacant by the transference of Rev. Robert Stewart to Benwell. Rev. Joseph Rorke, who addressed the pastor and congregation, said that Mr. Eades had already won his spurs in Christian service. Further, he succeeded a member of the Presbytery who had done magnificent and abiding work during many years.

Society of Friends.

Arnold Wigham, of Dublin, is soon going out to join the Friends' Industrial Mission in Pemba. An estate has been purchased there for the great experiment, and several young Friends are already on the spot.

Several more missionaries, some near and others returning, are either now on the way, or will soon be, to India and China, and on the 2nd proximo, Sarah Anne Naish, a lady minister of Bristol, starts for America, to join another English lady minister in visiting the American yearly meetings.

As one result of the famine in India and the splendid efforts of Friends in raising their Famine Fund of £5800, considerable accession to their numbers has taken place, and now at Hoshungabad they have four Sunday evening gatherings in as many places for preaching the Gospel of Christ. Hindoos and Mohammedans are joining their ranks. The missionaries have had arduous and anxious times, as in addition to all their toil they have had the cholera to contend with and several natives have died. This seems now passing away.

Salvation Army.

A friend at Port Elizabeth has given a piece of land for the erection of a Rescue Home there.

The General is engaged in preparing Rules and Regulations for the direction of the Social work at home and abroad.

Suitable premises for a Prison Gate Home and Women's Shelter have been secured in Copenhagen. Both buildings will be ready for opening in October.

Since the establishment of Rescue work in Christchurch, N.Z., four years ago, only one of the many women that have passed through the home has turned out unsatisfactorily.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE time of year is now at hand when long indoor evenings afford opportunities for reading. That the reading should be of a profitable nature, and likely to induce good and useful habits, is of the utmost importance. Those who have the means of influencing their fellows, and especially the young, are playing into the hands of the enemy unless they give attention to this matter, and see to the kind of reading which is indulged in.

We regret to say that a calamity has befallen the Strangers' Rest, 163, Ratcliff-highway. The front wall has bulged, and the County Council has denounced it as dangerous. It is being rebuilt. Friends of the work are asked kindly to consider this sudden need.

The death of Mr. R. H. Hutton, the chief editor of The Spectator, is a great and vital loss to religious journalism. Though we cannot sympathise with his position as a High Anglican, his vast influence as a religious teacher is beyond question. Beginning as a Unitarian, he passed through many phases of thought from Broad Churchism to Ritualism; but, in an age when the secular spirit gradually dominated the periodical press, his work told consistently on the side of faith. His limitations were great and final, and to his death he never attempted to understand the "inwardness" of genuine Nonconformity, and he said strange things about Evangelicalism At the same time his advocacy of moral and religious truth was fearless, whole-hearted, and trenchant. Probably he was more responsible than any single individual for the disrepute into which Unitarianism has sunk among men of intellect and culture. His departure leaves a gap that will be difficult to fill.

The terms of peace now settled between Greece and Turkey are a grievous blow to the aspirations of the Hellenic power. It only remains for us to hope that in the hour of elation the Sultan with not presume further, in his own peculiar way, upon the forbearance of the Christian world.

One shudders to think of all the perils which will be endured at Klondyke during the coming winter. What deprivations men will undergo in the race for gold! and yet to what ultimate profit? Compare this stampede over snowclad mountains in search of gold dust with the Christian heroism of a missionary like Miss Annie Taylor, who has made similar journeys, not for wealth or fame but simply to tell the story of Christ and his love to the dwellers in Tibet. But the contrast will be still more vivid when

> God bends from out the deep and says,
> I gave thee of my seed to sow,
> Bringest thou Me an hundredfold?
> Can I look up with face aglow,
> And say, "Father, here is gold."

It is a significant fact that nearly all the successful books of the past few years have dealt with some aspect of religious life or thought. There has never been a period when the problems of faith have exercised more fascination over the human mind, when the weight of the world's sorrow and evil have been more felt, or when any honest attempt to deal with them has been so eagerly considered and discussed. So far this is a hopeful sign, for it shows that the old widespread attitude of indifference to the solemn mysteries of life is beginning to melt away, and a better mood to take its place.

Many who are not vegetarians will sympathise, from a Christian point of view, with most of the aims of the Vegetarian Society, which held its annual congress last week in the Memorial Hall, so far as they call to a simpler and more frugal habit of life. There is no doubt whatever that as a race we tend too much to subordinate the interests of the soul to those of the body. Men cannot eat and drink "to the glory of God" if their higher faculties are clogged and hampered in their action by undue indulgence in either meat or drink. The true Christian, like the true athlete, keeps the physical appetites in subjection to the higher nature. This was the principle at the root of the old custom of "fasting," and even though we may decline to revive that practice in its rigour, the principle it originally embodied is of permanent and widespread importance.

The education of the young has always been a great feature in the policy of Romanism, and a wise policy it is. The Jesuits are, perhaps, pre-eminent for their devotion in this work, and it is the chief secret of their continued influence. Some of the most gifted members of this and other Orders have given up splendid public careers in order to devote themselves to religious education. Lacordaire did so; Newman gave the last ten years of his life to teaching boys in the Birmingham Oratory; and Père Didon, author of the celebrated Life of Christ, who was one of the most eloquent Dominican preachers of France, has for the last five years concentrated his energy upon the Dominican School at Arcueil, near Paris. The young are thus inoculated with the principles of Romanism from their earliest youth. Do Protestants and Evangelicals devote the same attention to their young people? We fear that it has always been one of their weaknesses to take for granted that their children will grow up staunch Protestants without any special care, with the result that many simply grow up indifferent, and others ignorantly drift into sacerdotalism through the mere charms of its externals. Evangelical principles can only be triumphant as they are taught as well as practised.

The necessities and perils of elementary education, the absolute need there is to keep it out of the power of priestcraft, may do a good deal towards binding Evangelical Christians, of whatever church, into one body in our country towns and districts. At Dursley, on the Cotswolds, the Congregationalists abandoned their education scheme, and united with other denominations in aiding the building of new Wesleyan day-schools. When the wolf appears the sheep keep close together; the undisguised attempt to train all English children into sacerdotalism has roused not only a new vigilance, but a spirit of resolute opposition. Nothing would be such a salutary warning and effectual check to the new "Catholic Revival" among children, as schools accessible to parents who wish to preserve their children from deadly error.

Whatever may be Mr. Diggle's ultimate object in doing so, he has made it abundantly clear that he is at present opposed to any reopening of the religious controversy over the London School Board. He has informed the secretary of the Voluntary Schools Defence Union, of which he himself is a vice-president, that he will be no party to it, and, if need be, he is quite willing to resign his position. He says :—

> When the Christian character of the compromise as to religious teaching was called in question three years ago, I did what I could to amend the wording of the rule so as to place that matter beyond cavil or doubt. At the election of 1894 the action was sustained by a narrow majority of the elected members. I pledged myself then that I would resist any further reopening of the controversy. The Moderate party concurred in that pledge. By that pledge I stand. I believe that the attempt in these circumstances to reopen the controversy, by insisting upon the teaching of the Apostles' Creed in Board Schools, will put such a weapon into the hands of the Secularists as will place in grave jeopardy the Bible instruction now given in London Board Schools. I believe, further, that no policy could aim a more fatal blow at the existence of Church and other Voluntary Schools than the attempt to assimilate the religious teaching in Board Schools to the standard of that in Voluntary Schools.

It behoves electors to send men to the Board who will preserve its schools from becoming scenes and nurseries of sectarian bigotry.

It was only to be expected that the Roman Catholic party should get up a counter demonstration against the Anglican Church in celebration of the landing of St. Augustine on the shores of Kent just thirteen centuries ago. Cardinal Vaughan's address on the subject, last week at Ramsgate, had, however, a wider interest, in virtue of certain words he uttered on the past and present of his Church in this country. The Protestant Reformation he attributed to the action of "a tyrant who arose in his lust to overthrow it"—in which he confounded the mere historical incident that gave the Protestant movement its opportunity with the deep passion for spiritual freedom that was its true cause. But he was nearer the mark when he described the present condition of things thus :—

> England at present was not indeed Catholic—far from it—but multitudes had so far swung round that they were more than half Catholic.

It is this unofficial and to some extent unconscious Catholicism that constitutes the chief danger of modern Anglicanism. The wolf is now in sheep's clothing; but it is still a wolf.

A number of "surrendered Bechuanaland rebels," who are now in the power of Cape Colony, are in danger of becoming, practically, slaves, though under a guise of freedom. The Acting Superintendent of Native Affairs has issued a notice to farmers and others that a number of these men "will be available as farm servants, etc., on and after August 28." There is to be a "period of indenture" for five years at a certain rate of wages. We may fairly ask—What have the men had to do with settling the terms? What power will they have over their own lives for the five years of the indenture? Who will see that the farmers treat them properly? If this is a punishment for rebellion, should they not be tried first?

And they don't seem to have been. It is said they were forced into rebellion; are they now to be forced into five years' work at the mercy of others?

There is much truth in Dr. Marsden's view that the glaring sensational theatrical placards are bad for the moral health of the people because they "generate imitative actions." Pictures are displayed which stick to the memory, and are revived with vivid intensity when the moment of temptation comes. The result is that the person is less strong to resist temptation because of the picture he has seen. People are apt to imitate what attracts them. If it be needful to submit written plays to a censor, why not these pictures which appeal to a much larger constituency, and are remembered much longer than spoken words?

The problem of the drink traffic presents many intricate windings. One of the latest evolutions of the trade is the spread of the tied-house system. The newly-formed limited liability brewing companies are buying up public-houses in all directions, and using every effort to increase business, regardless of the inevitable result in ruined homes and shattered health. In one case we hear of £3000 spent on beautifying a bar, with the evident purpose of attracting custom. The serious point for temperance reformers is this—that the transformation of private firms into companies and the extension of the tied-house system very greatly increases the number of those who are interested in making public-houses pay. Thus the obstacles in the way of dealing with the evils of intemperance are likely to be seriously augmented.

The Inspector of Retreats under the Inebriates Act gives a very discouraging report of the spread of liquor-drinking. He says that

"Among women of all classes drunkenness is on the increase." "There is ground for believing that immoderate drinking, though fearfully common among the industrial classes, is yet more prevalent in the classes usually contrasted with them."

If the inspector, who ought to know what he is writing about, is right, this hits hard the popular idea that the drinking habits of the upper classes have decreased during the last quarter of a century. Excessive drinking has certainly vanished from the dinner-table, but the craving is now satisfied in a more clandestine manner. The desire for intoxicants is a matter of passion, and not of fashion. There is no salvation from this curse but in a change of heart and a reliance on the strength which Jesus alone can give.

That there is a "set-back" just now in all the movements that make for social reform in England, is very clear when we contrast the present apathy with the vigorous progress of a few years ago. The endeavours made in the direction of Liquor Law Reform, the purification of amusements, etc., received a check that has acted in a sudden and disheartening way on those engaged in them. But it is easy to be too disheartened. All tidal movements have their back-flows and pauses, even when setting towards the flood. What looks like apathy may be partly reaction against a too feverish and unripe policy. The present duty of those who have a hand in moulding public opinion is to speak hopefully of the future, to deepen the hold of vital religion on the social conscience, and to disseminate a knowledge of real facts. This will be a preparation for a grand forward movement in days to come.

According to an article in Pearson's Magazine there is more lunacy in Ireland than Scotland, and more in Scotland than England. The difference is only two per 10,000 between England and Scotland, but nine per 10,000 between England and Ireland. As to the causes of insanity, drink is responsible for twice as much as any other cause, for more than old age and adverse circumstances, and for as much as domestic troubles, mental anxiety, and love affairs combined. We suspect that the real cause of the excess of lunacy in Ireland and Scotland is that drink of which the people are so fond—whisky. It is a "night-cap" in more senses than one, covering the eyes of reason and shutting out God's light of truth. In London the excess of lunacy and its alarming increase appears to be in part due to overstrain, but there again we are struck with a difference which seems to be accounted for by drink. We mean this, that there are forty or more lunatics per 10,000 in Middlesex, but only twenty to twenty-four per 10,000 in Surrey. Is it again the spirit-drinking in the elaborate saloons which crowd the city? London has seven huge lunatic asylums, is building an eighth, and will soon need a ninth. Verily, we are demented to permit the continuance of the cause among us.

It is time the authorities turned their attention to the widespread revival of clandestine prize-fighting in certain parts of the country. This is specially the case in the mining districts, where several contests have recently occurred, resulting in the death of one of the combatants. There is an epidemic quality about these revivals of brutality which calls for firm and summary treatment; but so far magistrates and juries seem strangely unwilling to pass exemplary sentences on those who have taken part in or abetted such "sport." Unless the mischief is recognised in its seriousness, and dealt with accordingly, it may ere long become a gigantic evil most difficult to deal with. The fighting instinct is one of the most stubborn in the natural man, and one of the most destructive to society. There should be no truce with such exhibitions of it as we have recently seen, but a sharp and determined suppression.

We often hear sermons and appeals to "business men," and these are often delivered as though business were the function exclusively of the male sex. We are apt to forget that there is an ever-increasing number of women who are engaged in various forms of business. A few figures will show this. According to the census of 1891 there were then 382,000 women engaged in professional work, 87,000 in shop-keeping and commercial employment, and 3,500,000 in manual and domestic callings. Since then these figures, especially the last-mentioned, have largely increased. It is important that these should be made to feel that they are an integral part of the great business community, and that it devolves largely on them to raise the tone and standard of public life. If these women as a whole were to use their influence definitely on the side of righteousness and purity, as many of them do individually, it would have a marked effect on public morality. Ought not their opportunity to be pressed home to them?

The importance of maintaining mission-work in the central districts of our cities is beyond question. But do we hear enough about the establishment of mission-centres in our working-class suburbs? As a matter of fact, the working men of London and other large cities are showing as determined a tendency to live out in the "outer circle" as do the more comfortable classes, and no adequate endeavour is made to meet their religious wants. The cheapening of workmen's tickets of late years has greatly accelerated this centrifugal drift of population, and in some of the suburbs there are many thousands of working families who are utterly neglected, or for whom the existing means of evangelisation are utterly insufficient. One of the great difficulties of the situation is the fact of "class suburbs," which result in the separation of Christian workers from their true spheres of labour. There is a call for self-sacrifice here which is too often unheeded.

Quite a hush, so we are told, came over a large congregation as Rev. W. J. Dawson, of Highbury, pointed out with solemn emphasis that nowadays

We are quite happy without the old theological dogmas of adoption, regeneration, justification, and so forth, and we are a little astonished, perhaps a little scornful, to discover that many men seem to make so much of them still. On that softly flowing river many a great ministry has been extinguished.

He went on to express his persuasion that there will be no revival of true religion till there is a revived belief in the doctrines of grace. No; for the very means by which men are to be impressed and converted, is the setting forth of the grace of God.

Dr. Parker thinks the world has lost a good deal by "superseding the ministry of denunciation by a ministry of tea and muffins, over which we assure one another that whoever is going to ruin, we ourselves are bound for the hills of frankincense and the mountains of myrrh"; and he hopes that "some of our young men will blow an alarm in Zion, and clothe themselves mightily in the hard armour of the Lord." This is surely a word in season. The great controversy about future retribution seems to have taken all heart out of the preaching of the doctrine of judgment, whose flaming face looks at us from so many pages of the New Testament. That any teaching which neglects this principle will suffice to awaken hardened sinners is a delusion many preachers are slow to part with. No one who reads the discourses of Jesus Christ with open mind, and takes Him as his model, can afford to neglect denunciation of sin and sinners as a means of conversion.

A college tutor once described a student's sermon as "a splendid introduction to nothing," in that resembling a certain paltry little chapel that had a magnificent porch and front. An experienced minister has detected, during his holidays, a tendency in certain places to this same fault of making the introduction so long that there was hardly any time left for dealing with the great theme to which it should have led up. Perhaps it is the young man's fault. A plunge in medias res is rather trying to young nerves. It has no terrors for the President of the Wesleyan Conference, who, when preaching the other Sunday at the City Temple, gave only four short sentences of introduction to a fairly long sermon. It is best to go straight for the central truth of the text, and get as quickly as possible into touch with the hearers' hearts and consciences.

Rev. Ambrose S. Spong, of Brighton, publishes in the columns of the Independent an excellent scheme for increased pastoral visitation. It is meant to assist those ministers who cannot, through lack of time, undertake to call from house to house in a neighbourhood. A resident in each district is appointed to make known to his pastor the fact of all new families coming to live in the neighbourhood, serious cases of illness or bereavement, occasional attendants at public worship, and such as are probably accessible to a friendly visit with a view to spiritual influence. This information enables the minister to reach many waverers, and be a comfort to such as are in special need. Visits of this kind, being purposeful, are likely to be of untold benefit. The plan could be adapted and modified according to circumstances, and many a man be brought within the circle of Christian influence, who might otherwise say, "No man careth for my soul."

Manifested Unity.

By Rev. CHARLES INWOOD.*

"THAT they all may be one" (John xvii.). In that longing we learn how the Master prizes the manifested unity of his people. Clearly this cannot refer to the living, substantial unity which exists amongst all believers, whether we recognise it or no. All who are united by a living faith to Jesus Christ in all lands form the Body of Christ in this our world. It cannot mean that the Lord prayed for that, because that is implied in the very existence of his Body in his Church. It must mean that they may manifest in their outer life and spirit and conduct the underlying, secret unity which is there, if they are truly one in Jesus Christ.

And if that unity be ours I will venture to say that denominational differences, however sharply they may be drawn in the parishes and centres where we live, will have no appreciable influence whatsoever upon our estimate of the spirit and work of our brothers who are close beside us. It is the easiest thing in the world to manifest unity at Keswick, but the unity manifested here is only superficial if down in our own churches and in our own spheres, and toward brethren in other churches alongside of us, we neglect the manifestation of the same.

My heart was much pained recently in conversation with a Christian brother who told me (what I know is true) that the sphere where he laboured lay close alongside the church and sphere of two other brethren. One of them, a man of evangelical views and evangelical ministry, was friendly and brotherly and truly catholic in all his dealings with my friend; the other intensely holds and publicly teaches this doctrine of holiness, but his attitude was about as narrow and ecclesiastical as the other is generous and free. Now, that ought not so to be. There is no use whatever in our standing on these platforms and preaching these truths if, when we come alongside brothers and sisters in other churches, we allow the spirit of denominational difference to lead to jealousy and suspicion, if not to open rivalry. Unity, as the Master interprets it, means the unity manifested in our life and in our service: a fire that melts all into one mould; the unity not of a creed, not of a movement, but a real, living, pulsating heart—

THROBBING UNITY OF LIFE.

I praise God we know that, and we have that, and one of the richest possessions I have in my memory in connection with this great movement is that we have brethren and sisters here of all other churches and denominations, and as we meet, mingle, and work we do not know and do not realise any of these denominational differences. These servants of God come as close to my heart as any brother or sister inside the denomination to which I belong. We want to carry that spirit of unity out amid the strain and stress of our work at home. I pray you lay this on your heart; the Master looks and longs for it. Will you make this one fixed aim and purpose when you go back? Do not imagine that it is enough to pray, "Lord, give us more of the spirit of unity." That may not come from an inch behind your lips. Let the manifested unity of all who love the Lord Jesus be so real to you that you will pray and long and intercede with God for it, as a dying man would intercede with God for his child.

Let me also plead with you to set yourselves in the power of the Spirit against accentuating and lashing into greater fury differences in modes of expression on this great cardinal question of experimental holiness. Any men or women who set themselves to accentuate these differences are playing into the hands of him who hates all true holiness, thereby grieving Him who longs and prays and yearns for unity of his people.

Suggestive Readings.

THE SONGS OF DEGREES.—V.

Last week by an error only one line of the following verse was inserted. Will the reader kindly refer to the place.

With solemn faith we offer up,
And spread before thy glorious eyes,
That only ground of all our hope,
That precious bleeding sacrifice,
Which brings thy grace on sinners down,
And perfects all our souls in one.

Psa. cxxxiii.—"THAT THEY ALL MAY BE ONE."

THE effect of the work of Christ—the root and the offspring of David—is to unite the Israel of God together in one. This was why Jehovah desired and loved Zion, because there the twelve tribes were one Israel. They might, however, be outwardly one, without unity of heart. But when God's men of war, who can keep rank, come with a perfect heart to make the true David King over all Israel, then the brethren dwell together in unity. Nothing is so good and pleasant to God as this; it is like the fragrance of the oil of holy ointment, which upon man's flesh should not be poured, nor any other be made like it (Ex. xxx. 25-38). It is like the dew of Hermon, "that goodly mountain," which stands alone at the head of the land, white and glistering, above the mountains of Lebanon, which Moses longed to reach but was refused; the mount whose dew descended upon the hills of Zion, when, as in Gideon's sign, it was dry upon the fleece only, and there was dew on all the ground (Judges vi. 36-40). For surely Jesus, the Lamb of God, is the key to that sign of Gideon's as to all other signs.

All this we read in the light of the New Testament, and in God's light we see light. Here is Pentecost—seven Sabbaths complete, counted from the Resurrection day (Lev. xxiii. 15-21): Jesus is glorified in heaven by the Father, and on earth by his waiting people. They are all of one accord in one place. The prayer of the Lord is answered "that they all may be one in the Father and the Son, as the Father and the Son are one; for Jew and Gentile are united in the Church which is his body, the fulness of Him which filleth all in all. The savour of the good ointment goes up to God from the head and garments of the risen Great High Priest—"Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee" (Acts xiii. 33; Heb. i. 5, v. 5. 6). Moses' prayer is answered, for he has reached the "goodly mountain," white and glistering, and seen the white and glistering garments of the Son of God; has seen in vision, with Elijah and the three disciples, the Son of Man coming in his Kingdom; seen the Kingdom of God come with power (Matt. xvi. 21-xvii. 9; Mark ix. 1); they have spoken with Him there of the exodus which He should accomplish at Jerusalem, and open the Kingdom of heaven to all believers. And we see more deeply than the psalmist-prophet into the meaning of those pregnant words, "For there Jehovah commanded the blessing, even life for evermore."

Psa. cxxxiv.—"HAVING DONE ALL, TO STAND: STAND THEREFORE" (Eph. vi. 13, 14).

"Behold, bless ye Jehovah, all ye servants of Jehovah, who by night stand in the house of Jehovah." Now we reach the highest point of possible experience. We are saved to worship and to serve. The obedience of faith, in God's Elect Servant, reached its consummation on the night of Gethsemane: "Not as I will, but as Thou wilt"; and in the preternatural darkness of the day of Calvary: "He rolled Himself upon Jehovah ...In the midst of the congregation will I praise Thee" (Matt. xxvi. 39; Psa. xxii.). The acme of worship and service and praise was when, with his dying breath, He whispered into the ear of God, "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit."

Abraham believed God in the dark, and "went out not knowing whither He went"; and laid upon the altar, in Isaac, all the promises of God; calculating on his resurrection power. So all the elders who obtained a good report through faith (Heb. xi.). The proof of faith is that it trusts God in the dark It is "the evidence of things NOT SEEN." They who trust God only till the reins break, show that their faith is in the reins, and no in God.

Faith, mighty faith, the promise sees,
And looks to that alone,
Laughs at impossibilities,
And cries, "It shall be done."

Those elders lived before their time. They "all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them and embraced them." Let us beware that we do not live behind our time, and doubt or slight the promises of God, which are "all yea and amen in Christ Jesus to the glory of God by us" (2 Cor. i. 20). We can stand and bless the Lord in the house of the Lord, if we hold to our hearts Rom. viii. 28; 2 Cor. iv. 15-18.

The view of suffering taken by the Old Testament saints was, "We are killed all the day long, we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter." But the New Testament saints respond, "Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us" (Rom. viii.).

Observe the repetitions from the previous psalms of this series. In cxxi. he looks, from the first, to Jehovah, "who made heaven and earth." In a time of distress (cxxiv. 8) his help is in the same. And he closes with—

Jehovah bless thee out of Zion;
Even He that made heaven and earth. (R.V.)

In cxxii. he is glad when they said to him, "Let us go into the house of the Lord," and because of the house of the Lord he will seek the good of Jerusalem; here he blesses those who stand by night in the house of the Lord.

Zion, the place of unity and of worship, occurs seven times in these Songs, and thirty-eight times in the book of Psalms. M.

Mr. Moody and the Apples.

An interesting incident occurred at Northfield on August 25, when Rev. Dr. A. C. Dixon, preaching on "Biblical Holiness," had a good deal to say about offerings—sin offerings, peace offerings, meat offerings, trespass offerings, and whole burnt offerings. After he had pronounced the benediction and the people rose to leave the church, Mr. Moody left his seat and said: "I want your help in a matter needing immediate attention. Last year our seminary girls picked up a lot of apples and sent them to Boston. They won't be back for two or three weeks yet, and I want you to send some apples to New York this week. We have the apples, the railroads will carry them very cheaply, and I want to have some of these fine apples sent to the people of New York who cannot afford to buy them. There are a good many young people in the town, a number of young ladies from New York among them. If they will all come to my house at three o'clock, we will have an apple bee. You pick up the apples, I will give them and haul them to the station free, and we must raise money enough to pay the freight."

Mr. Moody appointed a committee of young men to collect the money and take charge of the matter here, and asked Rev. John B. Devins, of New York, to look after the distribution of the apples after they reached the city. Mr. Moody and his little granddaughter, Emma Fitt, not yet two years old, were on hand to welcome the fifty young people who responded to his call for helpers, and soon between fifty and sixty bushels were ready to be shipped. About forty barrels were sent to New York.

Is My Bible Really True?

WHERE DID WE GET IT?

By Rev. CHARLES LEACH, D.D., Manchester.

NO. XIII.—THE REVISED VERSION.

THE Revised Version of the Scriptures is the last and most correct English Bible the world has known. This will be easily understood by all if it is remembered how learning has progressed and what discoveries of valuable manuscripts have been made since King James's version was published in the early part of the seventeenth century.

It is no reflection upon the scholarly men who produced the Authorised Version of 1611 to say that they were not so well able to give the sense of the ancient Scriptures as were the great company of modern scholars who produced the Revised Version. During the last 250 years large numbers of men have devoted much time and attention to the study and comparison of the ancient manuscripts of the Bible. And to-day we are richer in the number of scholars who possess great knowledge of the Hebrew and Greek languages than our fathers were. The Sinaitic MS. discovered by Tischendorf, as we have described in an earlier chapter, lay buried among the dust and rubbish of a monastery. The Alexandrian MS., now in the British Museum, was unknown to the translators of 1611. Of the Vatican MS., which lay in the Library of Rome, the same may be said.

These three ancient MSS. are among the most valuable in the world, but they were not accessible to the men who worked to produce the Bible which has held sway in England for so long. But all these, and many precious documents besides, were at the disposal of the men who have given us the Revised Version. It is thus seen that greatly improved knowledge of ancient languages as well as the possession of more correct texts of the original Scriptures have aided the men of these days in their great and important work.

Some have wondered why it was that any Revised Version was undertaken. The old book, they say, has served well for many generations; why could it not be left to go on its way? We can quite understand this way of putting it. But if we think of the many and great changes which have gone on in our English language during the last 250 years, we shall see that it was desirable to change many forms of expression in our version of the Scriptures, forms which do not, in some cases, convey correct meanings to the readers. And, besides, we know that in many places we did not get so near to the meaning of the inspired Word as it is now possible to get; research in the languages used by the men who were inspired of God has yielded much information which was not within the reach of our fathers. All these things, and some others, not only rendered it desirable to have a fresh version, but enabled us to produce one better than that we had, good and excellent though it was.

It may be interesting to show in a few sentences how the revision was brought about, and how the revisers went to work. It was in the year 1870 that the decision was taken to get together a large and representative body of scholars, who should be charged with the grave and solemn duty of revising the Bible. A company of able men, numbering some sixty-five, was appointed. It is worthy of note that this company included scholars of all denominations. There were forty-one who belonged to the Church of England, and twenty-four belonging to other bodies, including the Church of Ireland, the Church of Scotland, the Baptists, Congregationalists, Presbyterians, Methodists.

To addition to this assembly, a committee of scholars was formed in America, who should co-operate with the committee in England. This committee also included men of various denominations, and numbered thirty-four. Putting both committees together, we get the large number of ninety-nine who took part in this holy and useful work. The great company was divided into two committees, one charged with the work of the Old Testament, and the other with the work of the New. General principles for the guidance of all were agreed upon. On June 22, 1870, the New Testament Company held its first meeting, and on June 30 the Old Testament Company first assembled.

We cannot follow these good men through all their labours, but that they were diligent and faithful is seen in the fact that the New Testament Company alone held 407 meetings in the years over which their work extended, and the total number of attendances is reported as 6426. It was on Nov. 11, 1880, that the New Testament Company finished its work, and assembled in the Church of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, there together to take part in a service of thanksgiving and prayer to God for his goodness. The Old Testament Company did not reach the consummation of its toils until five years later, May, 1885, thus having been at work for fifteen years.

As the time drew near for the completion of the work, the people eagerly looked for the revised book. For a long time printers and binders were hard at work upon the sacred volume, many thousands being employed. At the two chief places of publication, in London, the warehouses were bursting with the weight of Bibles, and stout timber props had to be put in the buildings to prevent collapse. It is said that on the first day of issue a million copies of the Revised Version were given out to the public. Not only was the Bible circulated in all parts of the world, but nearly all the newspapers called attention to it by the criticisms which they made upon it.

Though the Revised Version is so good a book, it has not yet succeeded in securing general acceptation. In the case of the Authorised Version, when it was first published a considerable period elapsed before people took to it generally; so it will be with the New Version. But that it will ultimately come into general use in England, there can be little doubt. And may the life-giving truths it reveals become the possession of all men everywhere!

[For ourselves, however, we must add our hope that it will never, as it is, supplant the A.V. We would not on any account exchange "We have peace with God" for "Let us have peace with God."—Ed.]

Mission Work at Plymouth.

For three months Mr. Thomas Payne has conducted services in St. Andrew's Hall, Plymouth. This was the season of light evenings, and for a considerable portion of the time the weather was very hot. Notwithstanding, the congregations have been large, and increased as the time went on. The expositions of Scripture and the addresses delivered by Mr. Payne have been fresh and fervent, and full of spiritual power. Christians have realised that God has spoken to them in a very special way, and that the various needs of their spiritual life have been abundantly met. Unconverted people have been convinced of sin, and have been led to seek the Saviour with all their hearts. The attention of all seemed fixed upon the Divine message, which was delivered in entire freedom from mere animal excitement.

Mr. Payne's address is 23, Hyde-grove, Manchester.

"The Light of the World."

By G. HAY MORGAN, B.Sc.

MANY of our Lord's sayings must have seemed strange, if not incomprehensible, to those who first heard them. None more so, perhaps, than his statement in Matt. v. 14, "Ye are the light of the world." Had these words been spoken of the rabbis in Jerusalem, who studied and explained the minutiae of the law, or of the Greek philosophers, whose names were familiar throughout the East, and whose writings are highly esteemed to-day—there would have been at least a tinge of probability in the sentence. But to tell a few poor illiterate fishermen, whose names were not known beyond the bounds of their native village—"Ye are the light of the world"—seemed on the surface of it to be ridiculous.

Christ, however, pierced the veil of sense, and looking beyond the limits of the present saw what these men could and would become.

Take a friend who is ignorant of the powers of electricity into one of our London thoroughfares to-day, and as he is looking into one of those tall arc lamps, and noting the two carbon cylinders which almost meet in the centre of the lamp, tell him, "These will be the light of London to-night"; he naturally replies, in his ignorance, "Nonsense! It is impossible the two pieces of black carbon can ever emit light." Well, wait until the city is mantled in darkness; then the electricity flows through the wires, and the dirty carbons become red-hot, white-hot, until they are lost sight of, and a dazzling luminosity is shed all along the street. The statement now has lost its haze of ridicule, and appears as a solid fact.

So Christ looked ahead to the time when He should have passed to the Father's side. He saw how the Spirit whom He should send would flow into those illiterate men on the Day of Pentecost. He saw that this would obliterate the darkness of their ignorance, dispel their nervousness, and make them speak with an eloquence that Cicero or Demosthenes could never boast. He saw how that Spirit would guide them into fields of truth, where man had never penetrated, and how their influence would gradually be extended over the world until millions of the best men of our race should ponder over their sayings and be inspired by their thoughts; and millions more of sorrow-stricken souls should find a balm in their utterances. He saw how ever after, when men were passing through the valley of the shadow, the words recorded by these disciples should shed a radiance to guide them safely through its perils. It is true now that "Ye are the light of the world." Christ may truly say the same of us if we be but receptive of the Spirit which He waits to impart to all the humble and the meek. We, too, may be "sons of light."

Matt. xxv. 45.

Only a wild-rose blossom,
Faded and scentless it lay;
Just in the path of the Master
As He walked in the cool of the day.

Unloved by the careless worldling,
Scorned by the passer-by;
Buried in dust and forgotten,
Fainting and ready to die.

But the Master loved the blossom,
And smoothed the dust away:
"Thou art as one of my children
In my garden far away.

Is it thus I find my children—
Fainting and ready to die?"
And the Master bent o'er the blossom
With a tear and a heavy sigh.

E. V. K.

Northfield and its Founder.

By H. L. WAYLAND, D.D.

REALLY, there is a sort of series of Divine contradictions here, such a mingling of diversities as makes the most delightful thing in life. Mr. Moody is the embodiment of enthusiasm, and yet he has as much common-sense as though he were the dullest and most insensible of human beings. He has a faith that would move whole ranges of mountains; and yet everything is as carefully provided for as though there were no Providence and no call for faith. He is very fixed and rigid in his religious ideas, and yet he allows large liberty. There is no Northfield "school of theology." Mr. Moody is as reverent as any person I ever saw; yet he is informal to the last degree. When they have sung, he says: "Now, I think that was good. Let us sing that again. When I like anything, I like a good deal of it. Dr. ——, don't you call that good singing?" And again: "Now, you over there, sing a little faster, or else you here slack up a little, and let us try to keep together."

A plain man, an unlettered man, who is not always up to the mark in his grammar and his tenses, he commands the services of the greatest scholars from all the world over, and is listened to by the students as perhaps no one else is. This fact may teach not a few lessons. Many persons of good common-sense but of modest literary ability feel that, when they are to speak to students, they must bring in a great deal of philosophy and philology and palæontology and biology; and as a result they are derided. When a plain man speaks to students, and speaks with directness and plainness to their hearts and consciences and common-sense, he is heard with attention and reverence, where he would be despised if he indulged in soaring flights and highfalutin'.

His common-sense is illustrated in his attitude toward the Press. While a good many religious teachers are calling the Press names, Mr. Moody makes it an ally, and urges every one to buy copies of the papers which report the meetings, and to send them to their friends and to local newspapers.

There is great propriety in the common designation, "Mr. Moody's meetings." Never was the possessive case more fitly used. He created the meetings, he sustains them, he conducts them, he rules them. This is very wise; it would never do to throw the platform open to Thomas, Richard, and Henry, for there would be plenty of people to make themselves nuisances, and to make the meetings a weariness; so no one speaks or prays unless Mr. Moody asks him to, and the success attained justifies the method. In seeing the absolute control which he exercises, one is led to ask: "What will be in the day (I hope very far distant) when he shall have ceased from among us?" Humanly speaking, it is not very easy to see how there can be any one who can secure the same loyal and unquestioning allegiance. But I have ceased being anxious as to what the Lord will do about his own cause; I cannot doubt that He cares more about it than we do.

As to the annual deficit (for it costs 200 dols. to educate each pupil, while the sum charged is but 100 dols., and there are 800 pupils), it is quite likely that Mr. Moody thinks it better to let each generation do its own benevolence. There have got to be buildings, and the buildings have got to be paid for; but may we not hope that the impulse and the inspiration will survive any one man and all men?

Every now and then some frugally-endowed person indulges in a diatribe about the Puritans. One of our popular clergymen is reported to have said, "The Puritans are dead. Thank God!" To which I should observe, first, I deny the fact; second, I deny the inference. The Puritans are not dead. The Northfield meetings are the very embodiment of Puritanism. They express the application of God's law to human affairs. Righteousness is the essential word at Northfield. A writer in The Atlantic Monthly on "The Future of Rural New England" says that at one time there was a prospect of a large market in Great Britain for apples from New England; thereupon some of the farmers took the opportunity to work off their poor apples. The result was that the market was killed. It would be greatly for the benefit of New England if there were a thousand just such institutions as Northfield, just such convocations as the Northfield meetings. Puritanism adds to the value of real estate.

Northfield during the meetings is the centre of the highest civilisation. Everyone exhibits courtesy and forbearance. While smoking is not forbidden, yet one may go for days and not be made aware of the presence of the vile weed, either by sight or smell; and the hideous habit of expectoration is conspicuously absent. And there is an elevation of tone, an absence of gossip (the raw material of slander). People are not talking about each other. If two young people, or even if two people who are no longer young, are a good deal in each other's society, they do not become the object of remark. Everyone minds his own business, except when there is an opportunity to help another, or rather, when there is an opportunity to help another, each one reckons that his business. It is not impossible that the fineness of the scenery, the beauty of the landscape, has something to do with this refinement of feeling; and yet, if I recollect rightly, Goldsmith has told us of the sordidness of the people who live among the Alps, and Mr. Emerson has spoken of the pigmy men who in olden times, when New Hampshire was the Gibraltar of slavery, lived among the White Hills. The grandest scenery cannot create lofty emotions and fine feelings; but I think it cherishes them where they already exist.

As I was sitting on the piazza of the Northfield Hotel, a young man was talking in an animated tone to several young ladies; and what do you suppose was the subject? He was telling them the names of the best books on the life of the Apostle Paul.

During the days that I was at Northfield (the last five days of the Students' Conference) I was struck with observing the character of the subjects presented. There was little appealing to sentiment and fancy. The mind was occupied with the foundation truths. Special attention was paid to the Holy Spirit in two discourses by Dr. Scofield, the Northfield pastor, and Dr. Torrey, pastor of Mr. Moody's church in Chicago. I have never heard the doctrine presented with more clearness and impressiveness.

The meetings were for the students and for the young; the older people would have their innings in the General Conference; but the mature were by no means excluded; and I am sure there must have been a great deal of prayer that these young men may be kept, amid the snares of college life, from the impurity which one speaker said is the great sin of the colleges; and that each one of the 600 may exert a Christian influence through all the summer, and may return to college in the fall to be a centre and source of light, to be a fountain of blessing, to illustrate those divine words: "He who believeth on me, out of him shall flow rivers of living water," words which have had amazing fulfilment in the life of Mr. Moody himself, as also in the life of his fellow-worker and fellow-hero, Mr. Spurgeon.—*N.Y. The College, Dunoon.

ALL the world over the Clyde is famous for its ship-building. Steamers of all kinds slowly rise on their huge stocks, and glide forth on the ocean pathway. No one can visit that busy river without becoming cognisant of this; but a good many who pass close by the spot, bent on pleasure or health, are unaware of the great attempt at minister-building which is being made, almost single-handed, by a born teacher.

Some years ago, on his return from the United States, Rev. D. Macgregor was called to the pastorate of a rather struggling church at Dunoon, and he was used, from the first, to do a good work there, and one which has told greatly on the town and vicinity. This is the town, remember, which is fighting so nobly against the Sunday excursion steamers, and keeping its piers shut against them!

One or two young men were specially attracted to the newly-settled pastor, and he began to help them in their studies with the view of entering the ministry. This little handful grew year after year, till first his house, and then his vestry, and finally two or three rooms were filled by them. He gave them a Bible-theology, a thorough knowledge of Hebrew and Greek (he has been known to talk Greek to them in the country lanes), lectures in moral philosophy, practice in sermon-making, and other useful items.

When it became a serious question what to do next, a palatial residence, overlooking the Clyde, with exquisite grounds, gardens, and all conveniences came into the market. Its price being greatly reduced, owing to some valuable fields connected with it being sold for building, through the kindness of various friends it came into Mr. Macgregor's hands.

Nothing could have been more opportune. There is not only room to accommodate the thirty students beneath the same roof as his family, but Mr. Macgregor has an opportunity of giving them lessons in rearing fruit-trees, plants, and vegetables, and many other practical matters; besides which, the grounds give ample scope for healthy exercise.

There must, however, be considerable and heavy outlay constantly accruing. The young men are under no obligation to pay. As a matter of fact, some of them pay absolutely nothing for all they get, and very few do more than pay for their keep. The salaries of the two tutors, the cost of maintenance, and all other expenses have to be met—but there is no list of contributors, no appeals for money. When money is short they turn to prayer.

It seems to us that their friends, or the churches from which the students come, should be urged to relieve Mr. Macgregor of the burden; but he says that he cannot begin bargain-making as to support, when he is assured of likely men. Certainly he has every reason to be proud of several of his students, who are doing well in pastorates. You may be always sure of the old-fashioned Gospel from any of them. In this College there is neither denominational nor sectarian teaching. When apportioning their gifts, Christian stewards desiring the preaching of an unadulterated Gospel should not forget the labours of Rev. D. Macgregor, The College, Dunoon. F. B. M.

The Rosemary Mission.—The report shows steady work in a poor corner of Islington, with 1008 scholars and well-attended Bible-classes. Mission services and house-to-house work are also carried on effectively. Unhappily the committee have had to face a serious loss through the defalcations of the lay missionary, who misappropriated the Mission and Penny Bank Funds and otherwise robbed the institution. The hon. superintendent is Mr. F. Warman, 1, Elwyne-road, N.

Kissing the Baby.

IT was Sister Marian's first day of work as a deaconess, and perhaps never in her life had she felt more out of harmony with her surroundings. She had come from the fragrant freshness and simple cleanly ways of a village home, and now she was being led through one of the filthiest of London courts by the Sister who was appointed to introduce her to her new duties. This Sister had not come from the country, and she was also by this time somewhat inured to the surroundings of mission work in a great city, so she could not realise the physical repugnance that almost overcame Sister Marian as she picked her way through the foul refuse of the slum.

She had not yet faced the worst, as she found to her cost when, after turning into a house and climbing to the topmost flat, her guide came to the door of a room and told her, before opening it, that she must begin her work there. "The mother is ill, and will need washing and attending to; it is a wretched place, but you must do your best." Poor Sister Marian! it was a test of her bravery to bring her into contact with work in its most unfavourable aspect at the very outset, and many a time during the next hour her private conviction uttered to herself was, "I can never stand this, I must go home again."

The room—not a large one—contained eight children, and on the only bed lay the poor mother helpless from rheumatic fever. Of the condition of the atmosphere within those four walls it is needless to speak. Sister Marian's first act was to open the window and prop it up as best she could. Then she began her ministration, ignoring her own sickening sensations, and speaking kindly and cheerfully to her patient. She had in her bag a towel and sponge, and, most fortunately, a piece of soap; but the water for which she asked with which to use them was brought to her by one of the children in a pie-dish! Happily a pailful stood near, of which she made free use, and in a little while the sick woman smiled gratefully at the unusual sensation of coolness and refreshment.

The bed was smoothed, and the sick woman laid carefully back on pillows which no amount of shaking could soften. Then she glanced wistfully towards a little morsel of a child lying on the knee of an elder sister. "Thank you kindly, nurse, you've made me beautiful; now will you wash the baby?" Sister Marian glanced at it in its indescribable loathsomeness, poor little neglected mite! and again her whole nature rose in revolt. "I cannot touch it," was her first thought. "What would the Master wish?" was her next and better one. With an unspoken prayer for help she conquered her repugnance and attended to it with as much care as though it had been a well-conditioned little cherub out of a dainty cot. Alas! there were no fresh garments to replace the unwholesome ones, but at least its skin was clean when she took it to its mother, and before laying it by her side she yielded to a sudden impulse which she could not explain to herself, and kissed the child.

With a hurried good-bye she came away, and in the reaction of feeling that set in when she once more breathed comparatively pure air, she said again and again to herself, "I never can go on with this work, it is too dreadful; I must leave." The Sister in charge was quick to detect the signs of discouragement and distaste, and with wise tact took care that the work of the next few days should not bring Sister Marian so painfully in contact with the seamy side of life.

On the fourth day she was told that the Superintendent wished to see her in the committee room. "What have you been doing, Sister Marian?" was the laughing challenge of some of her younger companions; "a summons to Mr. C——'s room generally means mischief—a lecture or something." So she proceeded thither in trembling apprehension, and found Mr. C—— sitting at a desk covered with folios and documents. He was a good man, but grave almost to sternness, and it needed long and close acquaintance to find out the sterling excellence and true kindness of heart that were thus concealed.

Sister Marian had no such acquaintance, and she felt very depressed as she took the seat which he indicated. But his tone was quiet and gentle, as he began to speak. "Will you give me an account of your first morning's work, Sister?" It was photographed too vividly on her brain not to be easily reproduced, and she told him simply the order of her procedure in the crowded room in Mason's-court. "And after attending to the mother, what else did you do?" "Then I washed the baby; it was very unsatisfactory, for I had no clean clothes for it, and it sadly needed a change, but I did my best." "And then?" "Then I laid it in the bed beside the poor mother." "Nothing else?" "No, sir, I think not. I came away after that."

Sister Marian was beginning to be puzzled by the persistent questioning, and wondered what neglected duty was about to be brought to light. "Did you not kiss the baby?" was the next inquiry. Tears started in the Sister's eyes as she remembered the struggle with her fastidious self, and the overwhelming impulse that gave her the victory. "Yes, I kissed the baby," she said in a low tone. "I do not know how it was, but I could not help it."

Then the tones of the Superintendent became almost tremulous. "Yes, you kissed that poor neglected baby. Knowing of your discouragement in that first morning's work, I have sent for you to tell you the result of that action, which, under the circumstances, seems to me so Christlike. After you left her the poor woman called her eldest child and asked her to open a box, and, from under a heap of articles where it had long laid uncared for and neglected, to bring her the Bible given to her when a girl at the Sunday-school. She took it in her thin hands, and as the tears ran down her face, she eagerly turned its pages, saying as she did so, 'We've had nurses come in before, but they didn't do the work tender like, as if they cared, but when the Sister this morning spoke so soft and then kissed the baby, I felt that if that was Christianity I was bound to have it, and I'll look for it in the Bible my mother loved.' This morning one of the Sisters found the woman softened and teachable, and heard the story; I thought it would do you good to hear it too."

The incident was told to me by Sister Marian herself, now no longer in her novitiate, hopeless and discouraged, but "satisfied with favour and full with the blessing of the Lord," on years of successful work. I tell it again here in the hope that it may prove an impulse and inspiration to some other worker in unattractive portions of the great harvest field. M. C. F.

Fifteen Years' Work for the Lord in Berlin, and Charlottenburg, Germany, is the title of a pamphlet unfolding the life-story of Pastor Julius Rohrbach, with whose mission labours our readers have from time to time been made acquainted. In connection with his work, Herr Rohrbach has opened a home for boarders, to whom he offers the advantages of Christian society with facilities for studying the German language. Communications to the pastor should be addressed—28, Krumme-str., Charlottenburg, Berlin.

The Cure for Anarchy.

THE following letter to Senora Canovas appeared in the Spanish and French Press. We have been asked to give this English translation:—

"My heart has been one of the many which have been deeply moved at the news of your terrible bereavement. Words cannot express the sympathy I feel for you. But deeper still was the effect produced upon me by your expression at the funeral of him for whom you weep; 'I wish all those who are here to know that I forgive the assassin of my husband.'

"In reading these words, I feel, Madame, that you have a much clearer view than many others of the true remedy to be applied to this evil anarchy which assassinates. Repression, brute force, the guillotine will never arrest it. In this duel between society and some of its erring ones, blows will always be answered by blows; the sword will call for the sword; violence will engender violence. For man is powerless to arrest the action of the great natural law that each seed sown can only produce a crop of its own nature.

"Seeing that the instinct of your heart dictated to you the true line to follow, a personal forgiveness, why not carry this feeling to its logical and natural conclusion, and let it result in an official and legal pardon? That would be a blow to anarchy far more powerful than such a weak and ordinary one as to shoot or guillotine a man one holds in his power! Your position as the mourning widow of the deceased, and as a high dignitary of the country, gives to you, and to you alone, the possibility of obtaining from the Queen the pardon of the assassin; and thus affords you an opportunity, perhaps unique in the midst of our modern society, to demonstrate that at Calvary we have the only principle which has any efficacy to destroy evil—love, and unbounded forgiveness.

"Has not the experience of fifty centuries shown conclusively that brute force has miserably failed as a means of reforming humanity? Is it not time to try the Divine weapon of Him whose dying word was one of forgiveness? The Curé of Ars, that simple and powerful Apostle, described the supreme remedy in these words: 'The world is conquered by Him who loves it the most.'—Your humble servant,

Cape Town.—The annual meeting of the Cape Town Y.W.C.A. was held on August 10, Rev. Andrew Murray presiding. The report shows that the work is growing, and the need of larger premises has become urgent. "It is very grievous to have to refuse a bed to young women fresh from England, and without friends or home in the colony. The proposed new building will cost £8000, of which about £1100 is already in hand."

The Tramps' Mission has for its object the spiritual enlightenment of the many homeless men and women in the country. These people are largely met in the casual wards of workhouses. We make a brief extract from the latest report:—"During 1896 forty fresh unions were supplied with Bibles, Gospels, and Christian literature for the exclusive use of casuals, and eight unions received additions to their libraries Four hundred and thirty-three unions have now been supplied with libraries, etc., and there remain 214 unions unsupplied. Gospel services are now held by voluntary workers in 180 unions, and in some the chaplains invite the casuals to attend Divine service on Sundays with the inmates." In cases where they evince a strong desire to reform they are received into the Labour Homes of the Church Army. The hon. sec. of the Mission is Miss Susan E. Barnett, 2, Eldon-villas, Battledown, Cheltenham.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, September 26.

"Every day a portion, until the day of his death, all the days of his life."—Jer. lii. 34.

IF the King of Babylon did thus for a captive king, his prisoner, will your Heavenly Father do less for you? He created you to need the daily portion, and cannot be oblivious of his own constitution of your nature. You wind up your watch each day, because you know that otherwise it would stop; and God will not be less thoughtful of your constant need of reinforcement. "He knoweth that ye have need of all these things." His faithfulness guarantees that there always will be the portion of good for the body, always the portion of love and light for the soul, always the portion of Holy Spirit quickening for the spirit.

It is easier to die once than to live always. It is not easy to meet the continual demand of recurrent duty; not easy to live a full and strong life, that never dips below the horizon, or sinks in the fountain-basin. But it is possible, when the soul has learnt to leave all care with God, waiting on Him for the supply of all its needs, and esteeming that He is the only really satisfactory portion we need. "The Lord is my portion, saith my soul."

Those who can trust God in these directions are not only abundantly satisfied of his great goodness, but are able to send portions to others. Like the disciples, they share out their slender supplies and get twelve baskets full in return. "Freely ye have received, freely give."

MONDAY, September 27.

"The Lord is righteous; for I have rebelled against his commandment."—Lam. i. 18.

In these plaintive elegiacs, Jerusalem, by the mouth of the prophet, laments her fate. But the story of her desolation is mingled with confessions of her sin. She asks boldly if any sorrow could be compared to her sorrow, and then confesses that not one pang or stroke had been in excess of her sin. This is what sorrow does for us all.

Sorrow has been fitly called the mother of all joy. She alone creates the darkness, in which we can distinguish the real meaning of God's dealings, and understand the true nature of our wild wanderings. Her neutral tints subdue the soul's pride, and turn it away from the glare of human ambition. Beneath her teaching we learn to view aright the evanescence of all things human, and to see that the eternal is alone real amid a world of illusions.

Sweet sorrow, who the earth hast ever trod,
Dreaded and shunned, till, by thy burning kiss,
The heart was fired and flamed serene to God;
O kind stern friend, we leave Thee on Time's shore,
The only friend of earth whom we shall see no more.

Perhaps your sorrow will be allowed to press on you more and more sorely till you have been led to self-examination, confession of sin, and acknowledgment of the rightness of God's dealings with you. There is an alloy of pride in your nature that must be destroyed. If the fire is not hot enough, its heat must be raised till it suffices. Let your present pain lead you to the feet of Jesus, accepting the lesson and discipline you need so sorely. He does not afflict willingly, and when his end is gained your pain will cease.

TUESDAY, September 28.

"The prophets have seen visions for thee of vanity and foolishness, and they have not discovered thine iniquity, to bring again captivity."—Lam. ii. 14.

The prophet is addressing Jerusalem, ruined, desolate, and afflicted—the city waste, her children in Babylon. Of course the main question was as to their return from captivity, and deliverance from their yoke. The false prophets were perpetually seeing visions of deliverance that were never fulfilled. Now this kingdom would come to their rescue, now that. But they were empty dreams. The captivity would never be turned, until the iniquity which had led to it had been discovered and put away. But the prophets had no desire or ability to do this. Now this is true of yourself as an individual and as a Christian worker.

As an Individual: You are suffering in one way or another: in body, or relative, or circumstance. Your one thought is to obtain deliverance, and your mind is filled with vain dreams of how it is to come. It would be better far to ask God to discover to you any reason for the chastisement. If He says nothing, then believe that there is still some wise end in it for yourself or others. But He may indicate some reason for His strokes.

As a Christian Worker: Your earnest endeavours have failed. You suppose that some new method will bring success. There may be some reason in yourself which will account for all. Ask God to discover it. Oh, for faithful prophets to discover our iniquity!

WEDNESDAY, September 29.

"Thou drewest near in the day that I called upon thee: thou saidst, Fear not.—Lam. iii. 57.

Jeremiah is referring to his own experiences of the dungeon, into which the malice of his foes had plunged him. As he reached its lowest depths, he began to call upon God, and continued to call. His reliance was on the name (i.e. the nature) of God. This is the most potent argument that any soul can employ. Not our faith, but his faithfulness: not our trust, but his trustworthiness. "Act worthily of that great name, which Thou hast taken for Thyself, O God, we beseech Thee."

No sooner was that appeal made than it was heard. "Thou heardest my voice." Yea, the very breathing of the persecuted soul was heard by the Most High. A mother listens for the breathing of her babe in the dark. It will tell her so much. The soft measured breath, or the labouring gasping breath. God never hides his ear from our breathing; or from those inarticulate cries, which express as words could not do the deep anguish and yearning of the heart. If you cannot speak, cry, sob, groan, be still. God can interpret all.

Then He draws nigh. Of course, He is ever nigh. "Nearer than breathing." But He gives a sweet consciousness of his presence. The dark dungeon of bereavement, or sorrow, suddenly becomes luminous with the radiance of the Shekinah, the stillness is broken by the approaching footfall of the Almighty Friend, who is never so near as when lover and friend are unable to help. Oh, how tenderly He draws nigh! Solitude indeed hath charms, for it is our Saviour's opportunity, and the dungeon becomes desirable, for it is the ante-room to the presence-chamber of our King. Happy they who have learned the secret of the Lord, and know how to discern his re-assurances. He that hath ears, let him hear. How re-assuringly and tenderly Jesus can say, "Fear not."

THURSDAY, September 30.

"Of whom we said, Under his shadow we shall live among the nations."—Lam. iv. 20.

The people tell the sad tale of the pursuit of their foes. Swifter than the eagles, they chased them on the mountains, and laid wait for them in the wilderness. Then they tell how their king fell into the hands of them who sought his life. He was dear to them as the breath of their nostrils; his person was sacred as the Anointed of the Lord; they had thought that even though they were carried into captivity they would find some alleviation to their hardships in dwelling under his protection; they said, "Under his shadow we shall live among the nations." But even he was taken in their pits.

What a likeness and a contrast to our blessed Lord! There is likeness. He is as the breath of our life. As we inhale the air around us, so we expand our souls to drink in of his most blessed nature. We open our mouths, and draw in our breath, his Spirit for our spirit, his blood for our souls, his resurrection strength for our bodies. He is the Anointed of the Father, who anoints us. Because He is the Christ (Anointed), we are Christians (anointed ones). His shadow is a most grateful and widespreading one, beneath which we may dwell in safety.

But how great the contrast. Though He was once taken in the pit of Satanic malice and the shadow of death, yet now He liveth to be the shield and protector of his people wherever they are scattered among the nations. These words will be read in all parts of the world by lonely Christian workers and sojourners. Let them be of good cheer. He that sitteth on the throne shall spread his tabernacle over them. They shall hunger and thirst no more, neither shall the sun strike them. However far our bodies are from one another, we all dwell beneath the shadow of the Lord, which is as a great rock in a weary land.

FRIDAY, October 1.

"Turn thou us unto thee, O Lord, and we shall be turned. Renew our days as of old."—Lam. v. 21

Weary of chastening, and longing to have again all the blessed enjoyments and privileges of the past, the backslider desires to be right with God, as he used to be. But he is often met with great initial difficulties. He would pray, but cannot; he would feel broken and penitent, but his heart is as hard as the nether millstone; he would take the old pleasure in the service and worship of the Most High, but it evades his grasp. This perplexes and daunts him.

What should be our attitude under such circumstances? There is nothing better than to adopt the cry of the prophet, and ask God to turn the soul, and renew its blessed and holy experiences. There will be no doubt of our being turned, if He turns us.

It is not difficult to resume the attitude, emotions, and work of past days, when we have yielded ourselves absolutely to God, and have cast on Him the responsibility of making us all that He has taught us to desire. Let Him assign what standard He chooses, there will be no difficulty in our attaining it, if He fulfils in us all the good pleasure of his will, and the work of faith with power.

The happy life is that which does not need to ask for the olden days to be renewed, because it is ever anticipating that it will be better further on, and that the dawn will grow into the perfect day; but where the past was better than the present is, let us ask that God would restore the years that the caterpillar and cankerworm have eaten. Just because God abides for ever, and his throne is from generation to generation, He is able to renew the soul with new pulses of energy and life: as each spring He makes the world as fair as on the morning of creation. "Renew our days as of old."

SATURDAY, October 2.

"When the living creatures went, the wheels went beside them."—Ezek. i. 19.

There was perfect harmony between these ideal beings, which the prophet recognises as the cherubim (x. 20) and the wheels, which must represent the circles of nature.

"A living creature, fourfold and yet one, a partaker of the divine nature of the living God, with the forces and qualities of the lower creation—the lion's majesty and power, the ox's patient strength and labour, the eagle's keen perception and aspiring flight—added to the intelligence of man: such was Ezekiel shown that redeemed humanity should be."

All things are in perfect unity and obey the Divine will. Our lives are not the sport of chance, but are divinely ordered; and when we live consciously and voluntarily in the will of God, we find that all things serve us. All things are ours, whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come. All are ours, and we are Christ's, and Christ is God's.

What a blessing it would be if our life were as obedient to the Divine impulse, as these wheels to the spirit of the living creature. Too often when the Spirit moves we lag behind; and when He would lift us up to heaven, we cling to the earth. We need that the Spirit of Life, which is in Christ Jesus, should enter into us, and inspire us with his own purpose. Oh that there might be between Jesus and us something of that immediate and almost automatic response which subsists between the will and the members of our body. Ponder and pray over verses 20 and 21. F. B. M.

The Perth Conference.

[From a Correspondent.]

THIS old-established Christian assembly was again held in the "Fair City," from Sept. 13 to 16. The Conference was favoured with beautiful harvest weather; this doubtless prevented not a few in the agricultural districts from being present. Many of the founders of the Conference thirty-five years ago have passed to their rest and reward, and similar gatherings are now held yearly in many other parts of Scotland, yet the numbers attending were large, and considerable interest was awakened. There was an enjoyable quiet and freedom from the rush of excitement attending such assemblies when greater crowds are present.

The general subject chosen for consideration was an all-important one—"The Christian's Relation to the World." No subject could be more practical in its bearing on common life and duty; none could have a more direct bearing on the work of missions at home and abroad.

MONDAY, SEPT. 13.

A reception-meeting was held on Monday evening. Refreshments were provided, and opportunities afforded for the introduction of visitors from a distance, and then a hearty welcome was given in a few warm words by Mr. W. E. Malcolm, of Burnfoot. A prayer-meeting in the Free Middle Church followed; prayer was offered by Professor Blaikie, Rev. James Smith, and Dr. Fergusson. Rev. T. C. Udall gave an address from John xvii. 18.

At the same hour a Women's Evangelistic Service was held in the City Hall, largely attended, when a Gospel address was given by Mrs. Webster, of the Tent Mission, Dundee.

TUESDAY.

A morning prayer-meeting for one hour was held in the Hall, Tay-street, presided over by Dr. Fergusson, and proved a refreshing season. Reports were given of various evangelistic efforts in rural districts among miners, and in London.

At eleven o'clock, the opening meeting was held in the City Hall, Lord Kinnaird presiding. The Bishop of Sierra Leone (Dr. Taylor-Smith) spoke on the Christian's relation to the world, founding his remarks on John xvii. 11-23. Nothing impressed him more, he said, on returning to this country than the increasing worldliness and unbelief of the Church. The returned missionary is chilled and hindered by those from whom he might expect help. If Christians are filled by the Spirit and kept by the power of God, they will be more than conquerors; they will not only conquer but gather the spoil from the enemies of the Cross. Our Christian life should be as a flowing river—a resistless force increasing in width, in depth, and power until it reaches the sea.

Christians should realise that they are sent into the world—all the world—because of the world's need. The Continent of Africa is still one of the darkest places of the earth, and the habitation of cruelty. In the town of Coomassie there are the remains of hundreds of slaves to be seen. At the September Festival a great feast was held, and each one sacrificed a slave. Six hundred slaves were killed. He had counted thirty human heads under one tree. This was done 150 miles from the coast line where British ships pass. In closing the Bishop solemnly urged preachers, teachers of the young, workers, Christians in all spheres to sanctify themselves for the sake of others.

Dr. John Smith, of Edinburgh, followed, referring to the remarks by the Bishop of Sierra Leone on the worldliness of professing Christians. He said the Christian is one who is reckoned dead to the world and yielded to Christ. He often found that the old nature is not dead but very much alive. The Christian is in that world that came from the hand of God. Through the sin of man creation groans, but Christ died in and for the world. There are two aspects of the Christian's relation to the world:—(1) The negative. We must count our old nature dead. It is impossible to lay down rules for others in this respect. Asceticism is of no real value in and for itself. (2) The positive. The Christian should yield Himself to God, by becoming a working Christian, and submitting every power of mind and body to the control and direction of the Holy Spirit.

At 2 p.m., the subject for conference in the City Hall was the practical application of the subject. Dr. Blaikie introduced the subject in a paper. Accounts were given of work among the non-churchgoing by preaching the Gospel in theatres, halls, and mission-rooms in London, by Rev. T. C. Udall, of London; among navvies in Scotland, by Mr. M'Rae, and of other work in various places by several speakers.

At 3 p.m. a meeting was held for ministers, Dr. Blaikie, Dr. John Smith, with others, taking part. The subjects were "The kind of preaching needed" and "Power from on high essential." A prayer-meeting for children was held at 3.30, presided over by Mr. Malcolm, of Burnfoot. An evangelistic service closed the day's proceedings in the City Hall. Powerful addresses were given by Rev. J. Smith and J. R. Hewison, from India.

WEDNESDAY.

At the forenoon meeting in the City Hall, the Earl of Moray presided. The subject was, "How a Christian can live in the world and for it." Rev. T. Currie (Edinburgh) spoke on the Christian's relation to the world. Rev. A. T. Donald (Mertoun St. Boswells) spoke from the words, "Ye shall receive power when the Holy Ghost has come upon you." Christians do not get this power to be bottled up and kept to themselves, but to be used for the conversion and edification of others. Rev. Sholto Douglas said that Christians should shine—not covering over the light by the bushel of worldliness, or placing it under a bed (which was a type of the sleepy Christian). Like Enoch they should walk with God every day.

In the afternoon a Foreign Missionary Conference was held, Lord Overtoun presiding. Short reports were given by missionaries from India, Africa, China, and Formosa.

The evening meeting in the City Hall was crowded to hear missionary addresses. Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., who presided, said the British nation had under its government one-fourth of the human race, numbering 350,000,000 of human beings. Of these 300,000,000 were heathen or Mohammedan. How great is the responsibility of British Christians to spread the knowledge of Christ among their fellow subjects.

Rev J. R. Hewison, of India, spoke of the work of the Anglo-Indian Evangelization Society among lonely Englishmen in India. He gave striking instances of conversion through the personal visitation of agents of the Society.

Rev. T. Currie, Edinburgh, spoke of work in Bombay as seen during a recent visit. There is a great day coming for India, when the caste system will crumble to pieces.

Lord Overtoun spoke of the work of the Livingstonia Mission. Not only are adults taught, but there are Sunday-schools, medical mission, instruction given in various trades, agriculture, with an elementary knowledge of ambulance work. The mission had lately received from Mr. Rhodes a large tract of land, nearly 100 square miles, at Kondowi, near Mount Walla, in a healthy upland region, and they had established a training institute for young men and women. In Nyassaland they had never fired a single gun and the Gospel had turned the district upside down. During the last six months 285 men and women had confessed faith in baptism.

Revs. Dr. Christie (Manchuria), D. Fergusson (Formosa), and others, also addressed the meeting.

THURSDAY.

At the morning meeting Rev. Sholto Douglas gave an address on "The Red Heifer"—the need of constant purification by the blood of Christ and purifying influences of the Holy Spirit. Rev. D. M. McIntyre said the world was not an institution but a temper, and it must be met by another temper. Paul asserted his liberty, but laid down his liberty at Christ's feet.

A communion service was held in the afternoon in the Free Middle Church, the floor of which was filled by those partaking. Rev. Geo. Milligan presided. Rev. Sholto Douglas, Professor Blaikie, and Dr. Robson also took part. An evangelistic meeting was held in the City Hall at 7, when stirring addresses were given by Revs. J. Smith and G. L. Carstairs.

A closing meeting for praise and prayer was held in the hall, Tay-street, on Friday. The Conference has been both stimulating and refreshing, especially for the manifestation of an enthusiastic spirit of missionary zeal.

WOMEN'S MEETINGS.

Women's meetings were held in the Hall, 6, North Tay-street, on September 14 and 15. On Tuesday afternoon Dr. Beatrice Garvie, an outgoing medical missionary, spoke of the station at Rajputana, and appealed for more volunteers to carry on the work there. Miss Sutherland, Perth, gave a brief description of her work of visiting the women in the Perth Prison and trying to help them when they are liberated; and also of the mission to fisher-girls during the summer months. Miss Lorimer, Edinburgh University, described the work of the British College Christian Union. Miss Brown Douglas gave a very interesting review of the progress of the Y.W.C.A. during the last twenty years, and spoke both of its spiritual and outward growth, mentioning some of the more newly formed departments of work. Mrs. Tait, St. Madoc's, said a few words about the Scotch Girls' Friendly Society, and its co-operation with the Y.W.C.A. Mrs. Blaikie, Edinburgh, gave a short address on temperance, especially in connection with the British Women's Temperance Association. She appealed for new workers among the younger generation.

On Wednesday afternoon the meeting was addressed by Mrs. Christie, Manchuria, who gave an interesting account of work among the Chinese women and girls, and spoke encouragingly of their increase of interest and willingness to learn. Mrs. Campbell Lorimer, Edinburgh, told the interesting story of the origin and growth of the Gordon Memorial Mission in South Africa. Mrs. von Fischer, Bavaria, gave a touching account of the destitute Armenian widows and orphans whom she had visited in Constantinople, and of the attempts that are being made to give them employment.

Mill Hill School.—Owing to the increase in the numbers at Mill Hill School, it has been found necessary to provide further accommodation for the boys. The additiona premises are in process of preparation, and will be available for use next term. The Governors are also erecting a number of new studies for senior boys, and extensive chemical and physical laboratories with a large lecture-room. A large schoolroom, to accommodate 250 boys, and the new Chapel will be ready early next year.

A Chinese Witness.—Dr. Waples, of Kalgan, North China, reports the case of an intelligent Chinaman, who, by a surgical operation, was relieved from a most distressing difficulty in his throat, which had rendered his speech almost unintelligible. Accompanying his cure was a glad reception of the Gospel, and with great joy the man returned to his own village, praising the doctrine which healed both body and soul. On Dr. Waples visiting, some time later, this village, he was warmly received by the villagers, and found that already three families had accepted the Christian faith through the healed man's testimony.

Rev. William Ready,
OF DUNEDIN, N.Z.

IT was suggested some time ago that six months' service in the Police Force should be an essential part of the training of every minister. The subject of this sketch has not passed through that discipline, but he has had an equal opportunity of acquainting himself with the sufferings and needs of the "submerged tenth," for he was himself a slum child. Thrown on the London streets at the age of six by his drunken father, he earned his living, until he was double that age, by picking up scraps of food and tumbling for coppers, with no more comfortable shelter at night than a railway arch or an ash-box. Heredity and early training count for much, but, thank God, there are more powerful influences than even these, or we should never have heard of William Ready, except, perhaps, from the columns of police news.

The hand that pulled him out of "Darkest England" was that of a City missionary, who seized him one day by main force, and, in spite of struggles, conveyed him to Mr. George Müller's Orphanage at Bristol. He spent about a year in this institution, where his audacity and rebellion against restraint got him into many scrapes. Here he obtained the rudiments of education, having previously been ignorant even of the alphabet, and for the first time saw a Bible and learnt something of its meaning.

He left the Orphanage to be apprenticed to Mr. William Perryman, of Yeo Mills, Chagford, Devonshire. Mr. Perryman was, and still is, a zealous worker in connection with the Bible Christians, and was for several years a member of the most important committees of that denomination. It was through the influence of his master, who not only preached the Gospel from the pulpit, but lived it in the home and in the mill, that young Ready became converted.

He remained for some time at the Chagford Mills, and was then engaged for a while in the same occupation at Lambeth and Southampton. During his residence at the latter place he became a candidate for the ministry. His trial sermon, preached at a little chapel at Selsey from the text, "I am ready to preach the Gospel to you that are at Rome also," was a characteristic deliverance, for the evangelistic spirit was so hot in him that he addressed the members of the district meeting as though they were hardened sinners. His application was successful, and, after a short stay at the Connexional College at Shebbear, he was appointed in 1885 to be second minister in the Hatherleigh circuit.

Early in 1887 he left his native country for New Zealand, from which colony an urgent appeal had come for more pioneer workers. He was first sent to the Banks Peninsula, where several times he rang the bell for worship without inducing a single person to attend. At last he went to an open space near some houses and preached to the bare walls as earnestly as though a large congregation were in sight. This unexpected perseverance broke down the stony indifference of the inhabitants, and by the time Mr. Ready left the neighbourhood a flourishing work was in progress.

But the great task of his life was undertaken in April, 1890, when, with no friend at his side but his young wife, and with only a few pounds in his pocket, he entered the beautiful city of Dunedin. This city already possessed so many churches, and had such a character for decorum and respectability, that many of its leading men thought it an insult to suggest that another effort at evangelisation could be needed in so religious a locality. Mr. Ready was told very plainly, by ministers among others, that he was not wanted. His judgment of the needs of the city proved, however, to be sounder than that of its own residents, for an analysis of the composition of his present congregation shows that there were many hundreds in the population quite outside all places of worship, who were only waiting for such a voice as his. In spite of all opposition and criticism, to use his own words, he "hardened his heart, stiffened his neck, and went at it."

On his first Sunday night in Dunedin, when the church services were over, he took his stand, accompanied by his wife, in the Octagon, and began singing "Where is my wandering boy to-night?" When the crowd had collected, he called attention to a notice on the other side of the square announcing a lecture to be given by an infidel, admission one shilling, subject "Is the Bible true?" Mr. Ready offered to answer that question without charging his hearers anything. This unusual choice of a text was characteristic. No one ever had a more appropriate name than Mr. Ready, for promptness in turning every opportunity to good account is one of the outstanding features in his career.

The work which began outdoors has continued outdoors until the present day. But before the young evangelist had been in the town a week, it was supplemented by regular work within a hall. The first building which he hired accommodated 350 people. At his first service there were 330 seats to spare, but within a few weeks it was necessary to come early in order to get a seat at all. After eighteen months Mr. Ready migrated to a much larger building, the Lyceum, which had already had a history before he came to it. It had been built in 1882 by the Free Thought Society of Dunedin, and was constructed to accommodate comfortably 1000 persons. But there was no principle of life in this organisation, and its audiences gradually dwindled away, until the proprietors were glad to let it, even for the purpose of a Gospel-preaching place. It is worth noting that the leaders of that society, some of whom were men of great influence in the colony, have long since abandoned their propaganda. The treasurer has joined the Anglican Church. The secretary has become an evangelist in Victoria. Others among the speakers have been attendants at Mr. Ready's own services in the same place. To remove from a hall holding 350 to one that needed 1000 to fill it was a bold step. But the Lyceum, with Mr. Ready on its platform, was soon crowded to overflowing. A well-known Australian journalist, who called himself "the Vagabond," was surprised to find hundreds of young men in the audience. Sunday after Sunday scores were turned away.

Another migration occurred in August, 1893, when Mr. Ready left the Lyceum for the Garrison Hall, a building of twice the size in the same street. This also was quickly filled on Sunday evenings, and the regular congregation is estimated to be the largest in the Southern world. Recently, by the union of various Methodist churches in New Zealand, Mr. Ready's work has acquired the name of the Methodist Central Mission, Dunedin. He is still its pastor, but his place is being supplied at present by a young minister during his own visit to England.

It is needless to say that Mr. Ready's doctrines are evangelical, and his spirit evangelistic. He has not captured the multitudes by whittling down the sermon, for his discourses often last an hour, and are heard without any complaint of undue length. At the Bible Christian Conference at Exeter, the other day, he held the attention of a packed congregation for three-quarters of an hour on a hot summer afternoon by his vivid exposition of the character of Nehemiah. He has no brogue, but his Irish descent betrays itself in the sprightliness of his humour and the quaintness of many of his turns of expression.

He has always made open-air services an important side of his work. He has established a Christian Endeavour Society, which supports a Sister of the People, as well as many other appurtenances of a flourishing church. One of the most interesting of his agencies is a Chinamen's class with twenty-five regular attendants. From the first the mission has been self-supporting, and occasionally very large sums have been raised by special efforts, the minister's account of his own life, in his lecture entitled "From the London Streets to the Pulpit," having sometimes brought in as much as £50. While industrious as a pastor, Mr. Ready has found time to throw himself heartily into the temperance movement and other good causes, and in recognition of his labours was presented, on leaving Dunedin, with a eulogistic address by the executive of the Otago Prohibition Council.

This is but an outline of one of the most remarkable and encouraging careers in the recent history of evangelistic work. Pages might be filled with accounts of striking conversions and other features of interest, showing the stability and depth of the work. At the farewell meeting it was noted that both the circuit steward, the society steward, and the poor steward were among the converts of the mission. Evidently the Gospel has not yet lost its power to raise men from horrible pits, and set their feet upon the rock.

Lake Mweru, Central Africa.

THE Bukongolo range of mountains, which gird the west and interior side of this lake, is the Eastern border of the Garenganze country, where Msidi for more than a quarter of a century lorded it in a despotic manner. Since his death five and a half years ago, the whole country has been open to us, and long distances have been covered with the Gospel.

But look at that vast parish lying between the two Lualabas—a huge triangle with apex far down in cannibal Lubaland, and conjecture the feeble attempts of the old-time two missionaries. This probably because we had ventured in too far for a field of labour, Msidi's kingdom lying just halfway across the continent. Owing to a hopeless block for many a day on our road out to the Atlantic Ocean we were virtually cut off from our base of supplies in far-away Bihé; only letters got through, and these sometimes at intervals of more than a year. We were thus compelled to bore our way east, and have now got a good footing on Mweru, which is a truly strategic base; the caravan road out to Lakes Tanganyika and Nyassa begins here.

To this day around the lake there is a song, "Ingeresa wa lala pa mava"—"Livingstone who slept on the waves." Three years ago the otherwise conservative chief Kazembe at once gave us canoes to cross over into his territory on hearing that I was "Ingeresa's brother"; the word being used all over Central Africa to denote a common nationality and mode of life. At last we have a nice steel boat, and can most gladly abandon the native dug-out, which compelled us to hug the shore, thus necessitating long detours.

There are now five brethren and a lady on the field. Two have gone into our old field in the Lufira valley, where the Belgians have a post and the successor of Msidi I. has a good-sized town.

The Msidi régime, in many other respects so merciless, beneficently brought tribesmen of many dialects to speak a common lingo, and this mongrel lingua franca opens up the land to us as far south as the feeders of the Zambesi. Last month we baptized our first disciple after all these years; tremblingly but believingly we are resolved to go on. The young man before his baptism addressed the company of men gathered around.

Our mission village here, which began two and a-half years ago, with a nucleus of a dozen houses or so, has now streets of houses of three and two rooms alone running in line for a mile and a quarter. This year's end, we hope, will see the second mile finished. Nkuva, the landlord of all these parts, is with us, and almost all the tribe of Vashila fishermen—poor souls all of them, who were harassed by Arabs formerly, and latterly by Soldats who loot the country. But as we had a footing in the Garenganze country long before these Belgians had, we do not propose to abandon our old parishioners whether far or near. As for any moral power we have over this people, we will never relinquish that. After a long spell of preaching in and around our base here, we are off, my wife and myself, for the far south destination—none other than Ilala, where Livingstone's heart lies buried. Why should the old man's voice be allowed to die away in the silence? The testimony was to be in the mouth of "two or three." D. Crawford.

Jews in Paris.—The work among Jews in this city is steadily going on. The various services, meetings, and Sabbath-school have continued without flagging. The Jews become more and more interested in the Gospel, and in the reading of the New Testament. Through the kindness of some friends, we were able to send about fifty children to the country, some for three, and others for four weeks. Both children and parents were delighted, and could hardly realise that Christians should take such practical interest in them.—119, Rue de Rome, Paris. L. C. Mamlock.

Work in Angola.

I CAME to Africa about eleven years ago as a member of Bishop Taylor's self-supporting mission, and have been here since, doing what little I can to spread abroad a savour of his name by telling among the heathen that the Lord is King. We were the only missionaries in this province until the Jesuits came here in 1890 and established a large centre in Malange. We are still the only Protestant mission in the province.

This is a very inviting field for missionary labour. It is a garden of Eden for its healthfulness, compared to the Congo and the coast. We have begun a regular line of missionary work among the native villages, and are kindly received by the natives, who agree to build halls or native houses of meagre dimensions, made of sticks and grass, to conduct our meetings in. These will serve for schoolhouses. It is good to get these people interested enough in themselves and children to do anything for their own enlightenment. I think nearly everyone is convinced that in order to help this people effectively we must go among them and get acquainted with them, that they may see our unselfish design in seeking to do them good. They can read us in a short time, and we hear them say among themselves, "This is another people," "These are men of love"; meaning, that we are different from the traders and white people generally. If we have done nothing else for the past eleven years, we have gained their confidence, and this is no small thing.

Now the time seems to have come for a forward movement on the line of teaching and preaching in their villages. At the same time we must walk carefully, and give no unnecessary offence to the Portuguese Government, who look on all missionaries as ambassadors of some earthly king or queen, sent to take the country. They think that in all countries, as in their own, Church and State must be joined together, and missionaries of whatever nationality are therefore seeking to annex this province to their own respective country. Nevertheless, we have all the toleration that can be expected in a Roman Catholic country, and the King of kings leads his army forth in every land, conquering and to conquer. Our need now, as in all ages of the Church, is to be filled with the Holy Spirit; for against a Pentecostal Church the gates of hell cannot prevail.

We have seen a few here pass triumphantly to heaven, but the great mass seems still untouched, and they are dying around us daily with no one to tell them of Jesus, the sinner's only hope.

We are in the midst of darkness that can be felt. Yea, where Satan's seat is, and where he rules by superstition and witchcraft. When Bishop William Taylor placed his first pioneers in this field, his counsel to them was, "Go to work and get this people saved." We have been at it, and are at it still. But what are a dozen missionaries among so many thousands? Robert Shields.

Home of Industry and China.

A GOODLY company gathered round Miss Macpherson, on Wednesday week, to pray for the winter's work, and hear parting words from several C.I.M. missionaries. Much thankfulness was felt that the beloved leader in the Home of Industry was able, in fairly good health, to be present and speak, and that she is enabled still to take full oversight of her beloved work.

Miss Macpherson, in the course of a few sentences, expressed praise to God. The past year has been one of great peace and calm; seldom a week passes but we hear of some at home or in Canada, turning to the Lord, and this is the joy of all joys.

Mr. C. T. Studd gave an exposition of the revivifying of the dry bones (Ezek. xxxvii.) The prophet found himself face to face with a very awkward congregation. Called to prophesy to heaps of bones—what good could it do? Well, it was his to obey. He did not stop to ask questions—the ruin of many—but did as he was told. Here is our first great lesson. A valley of dry bones is a forcible emblem of China. What good can we do? Let us obey. If the hand of the Lord be upon us, if we are in touch with the Lord Jesus Christ, there must be power. See, as the prophet speaks, there is a stir among the dry bones, the Spirit of God comes upon them, "they lived and stood up upon their feet, an exceeding great army." So shall it be with workers who go in the power of the Lord, where He wil have them go, and ready to do simply and only his gracious will.

Brief words—spoken with much simplicity and fervour—followed by Misses Guthrie, Gold, and Churcher, about to start for China, and Miss E Culverwell, now returning after a furlough at home. The latter, whose lot it had been to be again and again a pioneer of the Gospel in new cities, showed how wonderfully the Lord, in the midst of the most severe difficulties, had sustained them and opened the way. In one of these cities one of the first converts was the chief gaoler—a cruel man, an evil liver, and a slave to opium. He came to the Mission ladies—the two Misses Culverwell—wanting help to off break the habit. He was told, "You cannot, save in the strength of God." "I don't know Him—who is He?" Opium medicine was given, and while taking it he suffered awful pangs in the crave for the drug. Friends said, "Take just a little.' "No, no, I'll die first." So the fight went on, until at length he was led to the Saviour, and found rest. Since then he has been blessed to many. He has left the gaol, opened a shop, and is constantly preaching the Gospel to his own people.

A farewell meeting for Miss Annie Taylor and her party for Tibet will be held at the Home of Industry on November 3.

The National Refuges.—During the past week the Admission Committee of the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children have received into the Society's Homes at Bisley, Twickenham, Sudbury, and Ealing, over twenty poor boys and girls who had been left destitute under very distressing circumstances. The children went first to the London Home, 164, Shaftesbury Avenue, whence they were drafted to the country branches.

Operative Jewish Converts' Institution.—The annual report opens with a very instructive sermon by Rev. W. Wynne Willson, rector of Hanborough, Oxford. During the year twenty-three persons enjoyed the benefits of the institution, and eleven remained in residence at the end of the period. In addition to the twenty-three resident converts, nine former inmates and two Christian Jewesses were employed, thus making a total of thirty-four Hebrew beneficiaries. The report says:—"The institution aims to train the converts in obedience, diligence, faithfulness, truth, and every Christian grace, in order that they may accomplish the life-work of every believer, preaching Christ by adorning and illustrating his teaching. The Holy Scriptures are the basis of their training, and the study of them is facilitated and promoted." The work of the institution is printing and binding; the address is Palestine House, Hackney Downs, N.E.

A Coloured Diary.

"WAYWARD TOM"—that was his mother's name for him; other people called him "that disagreeable lad." He was indeed a sad scapegrace, twelve years old in age and quite fifteen in mischief. Not that he was really bad at heart. He liked good people, and he liked to be good himself when it cost him no trouble. But self was always first with Tom. It mattered nothing to him that he vexed his father and grieved his mother, and made himself a nuisance to his friends, so long as he could get his own way and please himself. So never a day passed but Tom was in trouble. No lad got the cane more frequently at school, or was oftener in disgrace at home. Tom's mother mourned in secret, and asked the Lord what would become of her boy if all the days of his youth passed thus. But secret sighs and tears would never cure Tom. That his mother knew well, and being a wise woman she devised a plan to shame the lad out of his waywardness.

It was New Year's Day, and Tom expected a present. His mother produced a small parcel. "It is nothing much, Tom," she said; "you know you were to have no New Year's gift unless your conduct improved greatly, and since Christmas I think you have been really worse than ever. Still I thought that perhaps this would be useful to you."

Tom tore off the paper eagerly, and found a small pocket diary. "Well," he said, after a pause, "it isn't much of a present, but I daresay it will come in handy." He thrust it carelessly into his already bulging pocket.

"Stay!" cried his mother, "give it back to me, please. I am going to keep that diary for you."

Tom stared.

"Now," said his mother, "I am going to make this diary a coloured record of your life. You see there is a space for each day's entry. In these spaces I shall paint in marks with my colours. Every day when you have been naughty, bad-tempered, and self-willed all the day through, I shall paint in a black mark; on days when you have been naughty for the most part, but still trying to be good, I shall paint in a red mark; when you have been more good than naughty, I shall put in a blue mark; and on days when you have been bright and helpful and obedient all the day through, I shall fill the space in with gold. I am doing this because I want to make you think about the days of your youth. Go now, my boy, and try if you can't fill the year with golden days."

What Tom replied is best left unsaid. He felt ashamed afterwards, and made a sort of resolve that the diary should be coloured throughout in blue and gold. But the resolve was soon forgotten.

On the last day of the year Tom's mother handed over the pocket-book to him. "Look it through carefully," she said, "then come with it to me."

Tom carried the book off to his own room, and turned page after page with eager haste. Soon his cheeks flushed, the flush deepened, and tears, real tears, stood in his eyes, and almost overflowed. Every page had its black day, some had two and three, very many days were marked red, a few only blue, and from beginning to end there was not one golden day! Tom knelt down. "O Lord," he prayed, "I'm going to have another shot at it. Help me to get some golden days." Then he looked through the diary again. There were four days together left blank. What did that mean? Tom puzzled for a minute. Suddenly a gleam crossed his face. He ran down quickly, opened his mother's box, dipped a brush in liquid gold, and filled in each blank space with a shining dab. Then he went to his mother.

"Well?" she said.

Tom placed the book silently in her hands.

"My poor boy," she exclaimed; "so there was not one——" She stopped in surprise. "Why, what is this? Four days marked with gold?"

Tom hung his head. "I did it, mother," he said. "I was so ashamed not to have one golden day, and then I saw those blank spaces, and I remembered I had influenza then. You know how bad I was, and in bed. I thought I couldn't have been naughty those days, I was too ill; so I got your box and marked them with gold."

There was a long pause. Then Tom's mother said, "So my dear lad was only really good all last year on the four days he was too ill to be naughty."

"I'm going to try again, mother. I've told the Lord so." Another long pause. "But, mother, I did try last year; a little, anyway. Why didn't I succeed?"

"Perhaps, Tom, because you didn't ask God to help you."

"But I said my prayers every day, mother."

Tom's mother smiled. "Ah, my lad, saying your prayers is one thing; praying is quite another."

"How, mother?"

"You said just now you told the Lord you were going to try again. What did you tell Him?"

"Why," said Tom, "I told Him I was going to have another shot at these golden days, and asked Him to help me."

Tom's mother smiled again. "It sounds rather a strange way of putting it, Tom, but that was praying."

Tom did try again. His mother coloured another diary for him. At the end of the year there was not a week without its golden day. A third year he tried. In this year there was not a single black day. A few were marked with red, but the greater number were coloured in blue or gold. After that a coloured diary was no longer needed. All Tom's days were blue or gold. His mother never called him "Wayward Tom" now. When she spoke of him to others there was a glad, proud look in her eyes, and she said, "My noble lad."

My dear young friends, will you try, by God's help, to make the days of your youth all golden days?

Amy's Dream.

COULD it be true, or was she only dreaming that she would never walk again, never run and skip along like her brothers and sisters, but always have to lie, unable even to get off her couch unless others came to her assistance?

What wonder the hot tears fell in a shower down the poor little pale face as the sad, sad truth forced itself upon Amy Danvers' mind.

Only a month ago she had been the brightest and merriest of Captain Danvers' merry band of children. Ah, how well she remembered the morning upon which all her trouble began! Bright, and clear, and frosty, with the sun sparkling upon the frost diamonds and all the puddles frozen into delicious little slides. The Danvers children set out for their walk in the highest spirits, and soon the road echoed with their merry voices and happy clear-toned laughter,

Exactly how the accident happened no one seemed to know; but as Amy and her brother Cecil were sliding they came into collision, and Amy fell heavily to the ground. She was soon up again, though, and laughing as merrily as ever; but, alas! the mischief was done. In a few hours the little laughing face was white and drawn with pain; and the good old doctor, who had known her from a baby, shook his head and talked of possible injury to the spine, of exactly what nature he could not yet decide.

And to-day, a great physician from London had been called in, and his verdict most reluctantly given was that poor Amy would never walk again.

The sad news had been broken to her unintentionally; for Mrs. Danvers worn out with grief and anxiety, had intended putting off the evil day when Amy must be told until the child was stronger; but a conversation held just outside her door, between her nurse, who supposed her charge to be sleeping, and one of the servants, had revealed the bitter truth, and brought poor Amy a perfect anguish of suffering.

She had hidden her feelings successfully, though, and had even tried to smile when her mother had come to give her her "Good-night" kiss; and now night had come. The pretty room, lit up with the ruddy glow of the fire, was quiet and still, save for the gentle breathing of the nurse, asleep in her bed in the corner, and the ticking of the clock on the mantelpiece.

Never to walk again! "Oh, if I could but die!" the poor child moaned. "Oh, what will Dollie and Cecil and Margery and Bob say when they know that I shall never go hunting violets or primroses again, never run races with Cecil?" But here a storm of sobs stopped her words, which, with characteristic unselfishness, she tried to smother under the bedclothes until she found rest in sleep.

She dreamed that her room was filled with a soft silvery light, while close beside her stood two figures more beautiful than anybody she had ever seen in her whole life.

The bright visitants appeared to the eyes of the wondering child to be twin sisters, so exactly alike were they, except that while one had a most joyous and sunny expression, her sister's face was touched with a sweet gravity, and had a somewhat more serious look.

"Little loved one of the King," the more joyous of the angel-sisters exclaimed, kneeling beside the child's bed, and with soft tender arms drawing the poor tear-stained little face to rest against her breast. "We, his messengers, are sent to you to comfort you in your sore trouble. I am Hope, and this, my twin-sister, is Faith; and the King's command is, that we are never to leave you until we bring you safe to his dear home, where all your pain will be forgotten.

"It is not often," the other radiant spirit, whom her sister had called Faith, explained "that we are permitted to reveal ourselves to those whom we are sent to guard, but dear little one, our King has entrusted to thee a difficult piece of work to do for Him. There is no higher work on earth than to glorify our Lord in the patient endurance of suffering; and therefore, because He knew of thy anguish, when first the blow fell upon thee, He bade us come and strengthen thee."

Amy listened with wide-open blue eyes, from which the tears had vanished, entranced by the sweet tones of the angel-sisters, as Hope whispered that in the darkest hours, although Amy would not be able to see them, she and her sister would ever be watching over her, waiting for the "little while" of earth-life to pass, to welcome her to the never-ending joys of Heaven—their Home; while Faith spoke tenderly of the love of the King who had died for her, and painted in glowing words, his beauty, his beauty, his tenderness, his never-failing pity and compassion.

"Faith, Hope, and ——," Amy exclaimed dreamily, while the angel-sisters with one accord uttered in tones of unsurpassed sweetness the word "Love."

"Ah, little one, and the greatest of these is 'Love.' That is our King's tenderest name; and even as they spoke the word, the silver light in the room grew clearer, brighter, and there stepped from out of it a Figure, at whose coming the radiant spirits fell back and bowed their heads in worship, while He, the King of Love, bent over the wondering child, and laid his hands in blessing on her head.

What He said to her was for Amy's ears alone; but no mortal words ever caused such wondrous transformation. When the glorious voice ceased, a faint reflection of the light irradiating that lovely countenance was upon Amy's face, a happy smile curved the rosy lips which had been drawn with pain and anguish; while the blue eyes shone with a joy that none could ever take away from her again.

Once more the tender hands rested upon her head in loving benediction, and a voice sweet and musical as the sound of "many waters" whispered:

"Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

Then the silvery light seemed to enfold the glorious Figure by the bed, and the angel sisters, who still stood with bowed heads behind Him, and then gradually faded, and as Amy looked up again her little room was just as it had been the night before, except that the golden sunshine was pouring through the window, and nurse was just coming in at the door with her breakfast-tray.

* * * *

Later on in the day, Amy whispered the wonderful dream of the night before to her mother, and she added bravely:

"Mother, darling, I am not going to fret, even though I shall never be able to run about any more. Oh, the King is so lovely, so lovely, and if He wants me just to lie still for Him, why, I can do it; for I know He is with me all the time, though I cannot see Him."

The mother's eyes filled with tears, but she only whispered, "God bless you, my darling."

And Amy kept her word. In spite of pain, in spite of weariness, she was so bright, so sweet, so unselfish and sympathising, that Amy's room was the spot round which all the sunshine of the house seemed to centre; while Amy herself waits ever for the "little while" to have passed when those angel-sisters, Faith and Hope, who watch beside her, shall come to her again with the glad message that the King wants her in his home above. UNCLE TOM.

Rabbi Lichtenstein's Work.

THE fourth annual statement of the London Council for Rabbi Lichtenstein opens with a characteristic letter from the venerable Rabbi. We make brief extracts:—

"For ten years past I have unweariedly striven, both by voice and pen, to exclaim, 'Come ye, O house of Jacob, let us walk in the light of the Lord.' This is the continual fire which burns, but not consumes, which enlightens without blinding. 'The light is sweet, a pleasant thing it is to behold the sun.' From America, India, Australia, from far and near, I receive appreciative letters, which give me opportunity by request to send large numbers of Scriptures and helpful writings for distribution.

"In Budapest there is scarcely a house of my acquaintance where the New Testament is not a treasured book, and scarcely a week passes without one or more baptisms taking place. The rabbis certainly object to the frequent public notices of withdrawal from synagogue, which the law requires of candidates for baptism; and when prominent members of the community notify their separation a storm breaks out. This was the case recently when a wealthy landowner, with his children and grandchildren, received baptism; and again immediately after, when a newly-elected Jewish peer, in his seventy-third year, with his numerous family, was baptized.

"But especially a great sensation was created when a rich, educated lady, the granddaughter of a former rabbi, and the daughter of a former president of the synagogue here, declared herself a Christian. There was thunder from the Jewish pulpits and abuse hurled at 'traitors' and 'seducers.' 'Away with them—unclean!' they cried to one another—but the voice of God speaks, 'What God has cleansed that call not thou common or unclean.'"

The hon. sec. of Rabbi Lichtenstein's London Council is Rev. David Baron, 23, Boscastle-road, Highgate-road, N.W.

The Care of Foundling Children.

REPORTING on last year's work on behalf of foundling children, Mrs. Ransome Wallis says:—"We have at the present time twenty-seven children in Vine House, Walthamstow, and about twenty boarded out in cottages. That some change will shortly be necessary in the housing of our large family of babies is evident. Considerations of health necessitated our own removal from Walthamstow to live on the Surrey Hills last year, and though we have managed to carry on the work by spending one day a week at Walthamstow, it obviously would be better in every way to have the children nearer to us in Surrey, where we could give more constant, personal supervision, both to the children and to their mothers when they pay their visits.

"We feel that our past experience would lead us, rather than seeking a large house for the Home, to adopt the village system. Several cottages in an enclosed piece of ground would house our present fifty children and form a nucleus for a larger work. Some twelve or fourteen children would occupy each cottage—the elder ones attending a central school in the day, the tiny ones remaining in the cottage or out in the air. This would break up the number of children under one roof, and would, it is thought, not only improve the general health, but enable us to receive infants much younger than we are able to do at present.

"We have made out plans for such a scheme. We are encouraged to persevere when we think of the hundreds of little lives who, in such a village home, might be sheltered and trained for God, and of the hundreds of poor young mothers who might by this means be led to the Saviour of sinners—all this, too, at small cost, as the mother's payments cover more than half of the annual expense of the child, which we estimate at £16 a year."

There are many ways in which the benevolent may help this good work, particulars of which are given in the report, which may be had from Mrs. Ransome Wallis, Copthill, Burgh Heath, Epsom.

China.—News comes from Melbourne that Mrs. Saunders (mother of the sister martyrs of Kucheng) is on her way to China. Her passage has been taken in the s.s. Australasian, which was to leave Sydney for Hong Kong on or about Sept. 8. Mrs. Saunders goes out under the auspices of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Dublin University Fuh-kien Missionary Society.

Mission to Theatres.

THE London City Mission has now several missionaries labouring amongst actors, actresses, and others employed in theatres. An interesting account of this work is given in the L.C.M. Magazine for the month. The first missionary to the Strand theatres gives a review of his fourteen years' work, showing how access has been gained, how confidence has been won and a hearing obtained for the Gospel. Many instances are given of "men, women and children who have been helped, cheered, comforted, and in many cases blessed and brought to know the way of righteousness."

The missionary to theatres and music-halls in north-east and south-east London, who visits thirty places of amusement, cites some telling cases, and adds:—

"There are many difficulties, and the work is of a most trying nature; but these impediments are only the natural outcome of attempting spiritual ministration under circumstances which are particularly incongruous, they do not arise from any opposition on the part of those concerned. Every opportunity has been sought, so far as means would allow, to show by kindly act and tender word that the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ is built upon a foundation of love; that our Saviour is an embodiment and living manifestation of that holy passion; that God Himself is love, and that he that loveth not knoweth not God."

This Mission to Theatres and Music-halls is an effective and much-needed Gospel effort, and well received by managers, artists, and employés. The committee, therefore, desire entry to every temple of amusement in London, that the Gospel may have free course with its conquering and subduing power. In this good work they ask the generous and devoted aid of Christians of every name, as results already show that the blessing of God is resting upon this effort to spread more widely a knowledge of salvation.

North Midland Evangelistic Mission.

A GOOD report comes to us concerning the fourth year of Gospel labours by Mr. James Neech, of 20, Colegrave Street, Lincoln, the evangelist of this Mission, which has as president Mr. Alfred Haley, of Holmfield, Wakefield, with various references to clergymen and others. Last summer the tent was pitched in and around Bradford, meetings continuing for a month in each of five places. Altogether, the season's work, although somewhat interfered with by inclement weather, resulted in much encouragement. Children's services held weekly were largely attended. Winter missions were held with the co-operation of Christians representing various denominations; and among the testimonies received was one from Rev. W. Carpenter, Guyhirn Vicarage, Wisbech, who speaks in very favourable terms of the services held by Mr. Neech in that neighbourhood.

A Devotional Day for the promotion of the spiritual life is being arranged for the third year in succession, to be held in St. James's Hall, Regent-street, on Friday, October 22. There will be meetings at 11, 3, and 7, with addresses by Dr. Monro Gibson, Prebendary Webb Peploe, Rev. H. P. Hughes, Rev. M. Guy Pearse, Rev. F. B. Meyer, Rev. C. G. Moore, and others. It is desired to make the day a time of spiritual reviving and strengthening for London workers of every denomination in view of the coming winter's work.

Brazil Mission.—On the evening of Wednesday, Sept. 8, the lecture-hall of the Y.M.C.A., Mount Pleasant, Liverpool, was filled by friends assembled to take leave of Mr. MacCarthy, a missionary, who, on the following day, embarked, with Mrs. MacCarthy and their infant child, for Rio de Janeiro. Mr. J. B. Nevin, M.D., presided, and, with kind and sympathetic words, introduced the speakers. Mr. Fanstone, the valued representative of the society in Brazil; Mr. Braga, a Brazilian gentleman, deeply interested in Christian work in that land; Mr. Maxwell Wright, whose name is associated with evangelistic effort in many Portuguese-speaking countries; as well as Mr. MacCarthy himself, already known as a worker in Ireland and on the Continent, addressed the meeting; and limelight views were shown. Brazil being so generally unknown, and the season unfavourable, it was very gratifying to find a crowded hall; and we trust that interest may have been aroused in many, who will henceforth, by prayer and effort, remember the vast and comparatively uncared-for land which may truly be called "Half a Continent."

Colportage in France.

IN many of the departments of France there is a good work going on in a quiet way by means of colporteurs, who attend the various fairs and markets, and there get the opportunity to dispose of a good number of Testaments and Bibles. This is especially the case in the Charente and Charente Inférieure, where one enterprising colporteur—a thorough Frenchman in every way—travels long distances every week on his bicycle heavily laden with Testaments. On arriving at a fair, he pays the small fee required for a stall, and by an ingenious arrangement converts his bicycle into a stand, where he displays his books.

Open-air preaching of the Gospel is not allowed by the law in France, but every vendor of merchandise is allowed to explain the nature of his wares. Our friend takes advantage of this permission, and openly announces the wonders that are to be found in the Book that he offers to all the world at the low price of 2d. His earnest tones and pleasant manner soon attract a large crowd, and a brisk sale goes on. He then varies the proceedings by singing a hymn out of the well-known McAll "Cantiques Populaires," to the accompaniment of his violin; and again, as a new crowd gathers, proceeds to set forth some more of the wonders of the Gospel; and so on for three or four hours, occasionally pausing to enter into conversation with some bystander who wants to ask questions.

In this manner my friend manages to dispose of forty or fifty Testaments at each fair or market that he attends. Both English and Continental Bible Societies are extremely generous in placing Bibles and Testaments for sale at low prices, and thus by steady, hard work the colporteur manages to support himself; and all will admit that the net gain of 1d. on each Testament, or, say, 4s. a day, is thoroughly deserved, when one considers that refreshment and many incidental expenses have to be met out of it.

The great success the colporteur has met with has given him the idea of endeavouring to obtain a tent capable of holding about 100 people and a small cart on which to transport it from place to place; but this will require money, which is not an easy thing to raise in France. In addition to this colportage work, he has also a regular mission hall in the place where he resides, and gathers a good congregation there every Sunday, to whom he preaches the Gospel with much power.

It is interesting to meet quiet, unpretending workers of this sort, who are doing a good work in France.

Anyone who may feel inclined to enter into correspondence with the colporteur whose work is here described can have his address from Monsieur Hathaway, Lapéruse, Chabanais, Charente, France.

A FRENCH COLPORTEUR AT WORK.

Scripture Gift Mission.

THE work of this Mission is well known to our readers. The Gospel portions which have been so widely disseminated in several languages, are now being followed by booklets giving the Epistles, all of them illustrated in the same handsome manner. From all quarters reports are received of these portions being readily received and read by the people. Recent additions are—the issue of the Epistle to the Romans in English in a bright lithographed cover; also the Epistles of James, Peter, John, and Jude (in one cover). Both these portions are specially suited for distribution in Roman Catholic countries.

The Mission has just been strengthened by the appointment of Mr. F. C. Brading as deputation and organising secretary; he hopes to conduct meetings on behalf of the Mission in any centres where he may be invited. In some cases the original pictures used in illustration of the portions will be available for inspection; in other cases a series of lantern slides will be shown. The hon. sec. of the Mission is Mr. W. Walters, 84, St. Paul's-churchyard, E.C.

The Racecourse Mission.

THE Racecourse Mission, led by Mr. Josiah Nix, visited Doncaster during the race-week, and held large and enthusiastic meetings. On the previous Sunday Mr. Nix preached in Priory-place Wesleyan Chapel in the morning. In the afternoon he led a large open-air meeting in the Market-place, and a very enthusiastic meeting was held in the Corn Exchange at night. Mr. O. L. Heatley also held services during the day.

The work on the Course and in the Market-place and at the chapels has been owned of God to the conversion of some. One important feature of the effort was the hearty co-operation of several ministers of the town, who not only showed prayerful sympathy, but gave practical personal help. The workers were much encouraged as they saw ministers and others standing together, shoulder to shoulder, fighting the devil on his own ground.

The work on the Course is very different from that at Epsom. Mr. Nix remarked in his address on Friday night that 90 per cent. of the people at Epsom had probably never been through the Sunday-school, but on Doncaster Racecourse he thought 90 per cent. had been. This was manifest by the great thirst for the Word of Life. Owing to the liberal terms of the British and Foreign Bible Society about 5000 gospels were distributed. The workers could have used 50,000, so great was the demand.

In one case it is stated that some forty or fifty men met after the races one day, and every man had secured a gospel. Instead of discussing horses, races, jockeys, and bets, they talked about the Word of Life and compared the Gospels. About 100,000 tracts were also given, and very many persons were spoken to personally about salvation.

There is no Gospel tent at Doncaster, as on Epsom Downs, but the local friends are praying and hoping for a tent next year. Meetings were held every day on or near the Course, and there were not a few interesting cases of pledge-signing and conversion; it was real work, and a hand-to-hand struggle with the devil. During the evenings large and enthusiastic meetings were held in the Market-place, led by Mr. Nix, who was assisted by various brethren. On Thursday evening a pledge-signing campaign meeting was held in Spring-gardens Chapel, and thirty-five signed the pledge. This was turned into a consecration meeting, and many gave themselves fully to Christ. The week closed with a thanksgiving meeting at Spring-gardens Chapel.

Spezia Evangelical Schools.

IN a recent letter, Rev. Edward Clarke tells the story of a determined attack upon his Bible schools, but with the goodness of God the attack was repulsed with triumphant effect. The circumstances called for great firmness and promptness of action on Mr. Clarke's part; and it is gratifying to note that the course he took vindicated his mission work and saved his beneficent institutions from destruction.

In few words the story is as follows:—In the spring, while Mr. Clarke was detained in Scotland recovering from the effects of an omnibus accident, he was informed that unless he presented himself in Spezia without delay the mission schools would be closed. At great inconvenience, he left for his sphere of labour, and readily presented himself to answer charges of having broken the law in carrying on his work. The charges were not true, but suspecting a plot, and finding difficulty in making any impression on the Government official, he explained the object and procedure of his schools to a superior officer, who in due course inspected the schools, and spoke of the work in terms of warm approval.

Mr. Clarke was not willing, however, to leave matters there. He went to Rome, and had an interview with the Minister of Education, who gave assurances of sympathetic support to the utmost of his power. As a result of these measures, the evil designs of the enemy have been frustrated, and the work goes forward with renewed vigour.

City Workrooms.—The need is very great for more ladies to take short services in the dinner or tea hour in City workrooms. Helpers will be welcomed who can take these services weekly, or even once a fortnight. Apply to Mrs. Fisher, Hon. Sec., 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

Sailors in the South Pacific.

FOR several years past our resident missionary in Apia (Samoa) has carried on a coffee-house and free reading-room in the interests of sailors and others calling at or making a stay in port. The effort has been greatly appreciated by our British sailors from the warships which from time to time visit this port, as also the sailors from German warships, and from the regular trading and mail steamers. The place also fills a gap for the shore people, and offers to them a temperance house of rest and refreshment for body and mind. The reading-room is well-supplied with newspapers, magazines, books, table games, etc., and our sailors have indeed found the place to be a great comfort and refuge when on shore.

On Sunday evenings after regular service—a delightful hour is often spent in the singing of hymns from Mr. Sankey's collection. Recently such an evening was spent with many from two of H. M. ships, whilst Mr. William Crosfield, of Liverpool, was visiting, and this gentleman was so delighted with what he saw, and so persuaded of the beneficial influence exerted, that he gave a handsome donation towards the up-keep of the place.

Such a place and such a work is somewhat beyond the intentions of our Society (the London Missionary), and we cannot expect direct financial help from that quarter, but the directors are in sympathy with what is being done. We are sure that Mr. William Crosfield, J.P., of Liverpool, and Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, our Society's foreign secretary, will be pleased to commend our work in this direction to any friends who may wish to help an effort of this kind.

In recognition of the good being done amongst the sailors of our Navy, Miss Weston has kindly taken upon herself the responsibility of a year's rental. It is hoped that in time the enterprise may become self-supporting, but until then it is always a matter of anxiety to the resident missionary as to how the expenses are to be met. Rev. W. E. Goward and Mrs. Goward are alone responsible for this work, and upon them falls the anxiety and work of management, but both are most cheerfully borne by them. We should be glad of help from anyone, either in the way of subscription or donation, or newspapers, illustrated periodicals, or books.

I am sure we shall all feel grateful for the help of The Christian in making this effort more widely known, and in making an appeal for needed help.

The Veddahs of Ceylon.

Dear Sir,—May I supplement Mr. E. Walker's recent letter in The Christian with a few more words about the Veddahs. Their case indeed is most urgent; help to do any good must come soon. They are a dying race, spiritually and bodily. The terrible disease paraugi is slowly but surely exterminating the race. It is a horrible skin disease most infectious, and caused in some cases probably by insufficient and bad food.

Some years ago Rev. W. Perry, Principal of Trinity College, Kandy, lost his life through accident, in an attempt to find out more about these wild men of the woods. A gentleman in the Ceylon Civil Service, lately deceased, who had been stationed near some of the Veddahs in the Beritenne country, and who took much kindly interest in them, described them as being isolated beings and most improvident, a feast one day and nothing the next. The men have no knowledge of cultivation, and live by what they kill, or on roots of trees. They are perfectly ignorant and untamed, and have no knowledge of God. Several attempts have been made to civilise them, but without much success. What they greatly need (the rock Veddahs especially) is a medical missionary. To reach the soul the body must first be cared for. Will no one help to subscribe annually £40 a year for this work? That amount, with subscriptions already promised, would go far in relieving present distress, preventing disease, and above all spreading the good tidings of the Gospel.—Yours, (Mrs.) E. B. Mackwood.

Among Roman Poor.

THE annual report, by Mrs. Wall, of Gospel and medical work among the poor in Rome is as interesting as its many predecessors. The pages give the life-stories of men and women who through reverses of worldly fortune have come to great spiritual riches. We make brief extracts:—

"Lucia is persecuted because she has believed in the Lord, yet perfect peace fills her heart, and no complaint comes from her lips. Her poverty obliges her to live in a large room on the ground floor where fourteen or fifteen other families are crowded together. These poor ignorant people think they are doing right in treating Lucia roughly; is she not 'the excommunicated one'? But dear Lucia, instead of inveighing against them, treats them with all kindness and forbearance, and often joins her little girl in singing hymns of joy to the Lord. She is always ready to testify to all around of her faith in Jesus and of his great goodness to her.

"Often the poor woman goes to work in the country, and walks many hours of the night to be on the fields at dawn. At times while walking in the dark, vague fears of what might happen assail her and make her troubled, but she turns her thoughts to the Lord, and becomes once more calm and strong, and goes on her way singing, 'Safe in the arms of Jesus!' 'Oh! if you knew, Signorina,' she said to me a few days ago, 'how beautiful it is to sing to the Lord in the silence of the night when the moon and stars are in the sky! I assure you that in those moments I feel nearer to our good Father in Heaven.' Lucia has given her whole heart to Jesus, and is a sincere and faithful believer, ready to speak of her Saviour to the people whom she meets, and not hindered by the scoffs of the greater number of her listeners.

"Antonio D. is eighty years old. He lives in a kind of dormitory, a great hall on the ground floor, with several other families. He is ill, and lies on a miserable straw mattress covered with an old sheet and a bundle of rags for a pillow. The dirty walls are hung with images of saints, virgins and crucifixes. The first time I went to see him he was lying on his mattress with his hat on and dressed. I spoke to him of the Saviour, and he listened with attention; I taught him some verses, and prayed with him. Each time I have been to see him since he has asked me to sing and pray with him."

Suffering and superstition go hand-in-hand in the stories told by Mrs. Wall, but it is a real pleasure to read of the suffering assuaged and the superstition overcome by the power of Gospel light and truth. Copies of the report may be had from Mrs. Wall, 35, Piazza in Lucina, Rome.

Moslems in Tunis.

We have been much encouraged by the number of Mohammedans who have been attending our lantern meetings in this town. These were held in an open court, but an agreement has been signed which has permitted us to turn a low-class canteen into a Gospel Hall. Encouraged by the success attending the lantern meetings held during the early part of the summer, Mr. Michell and myself purpose holding two lantern meetings in different parts of the town every week for Arabs, one being in the hall just acquired. Six months' rent has been paid, table, seats, etc., are ready to furnish the place.

We invite those friends who are interested in North Africa to give thanks with us. From time to time strangers from inland tribes come to Tunis, and may be attracted to such a place as that now taken, afterwards returning to their homes with at least a portion of truth from God's precious Word. Unfortunately our little stock of slides has been repeatedly shown, and it is desirable to increase their number. If any friend is led to help in this service we should be very thankful. Slides can be sent to me, c.o., Mr. E. H. Glenny, Hon. Sec., North Africa Mission, Barking.

West London Mission.—This Mission has sustained an active and successful open-air campaign in Hyde Park during the past summer, under the leadership of Mr. Piper. The chief missioners have now returned after the holiday change, and Revs. M. G. Pearse and H. Price Hughes preached in St. James's Hall on Sunday last to large congregations; that of the evening was an overflowing one.

Official Testimony to Missions.

IT is not often (says the London correspondene of The Scotsman) that missionary enterprist receives a more handsome testimonial from an official quarter than that contained in the latest report of Sir William MacGregor, Lieutenant-Governor of British New Guinea. Owing to the roundabout method in which Sir William is obliged to communicate with the Imperial authorities—British New Guinea is administratively attached to the Colony of Queensland—his reports appear in Brisbane some time before they make their official appearance in this country; and from a copy of the report to Lord Lamington which has reached me I see that early this year Sir William MacGregor paid an official visit to the western districts of the territory under his administrative control. At Saguana, on the Fly estuary, he carefully examined the work being carried on by Rev. James Chalmers, attended service—when nearly a hundred persons were present—and visited the schools while the pupils were being taught their ordinary lessons. It was this branch of the missionary work that naturally appealed most to Sir William MacGregor as an administrator. Nearly thirty boys and girls live about the mission establishment and attend school with tolerable regularity.

How thoroughly Sir William MacGregor appreciates the civilising efforts of the missionaries as an aid to his administration is demonstrated by the steps he took in settling the new district of the Morehead river. Having induced the people to build a large and strong village, he agreed to establish there a force of six constabulary, and at the same time requested Mr. Chalmers to establish a new mission station on the river—a request to which Mr. Chalmers promptly acceded by promising to send two teachers to the new station.

The Gospel in Mexico.

In a circular letter on his work, Mr. Eglon Harris, of Orizaba, writes: "At Fortin, last week, one of the colporteurs met a man who told him how I gave him a Bible and tracts in Tehuacan. He produced the Bible, which he had evidently read, and said it was the best gift he had ever received. Thus, after nearly six years, we see how the Lord keeps the seed from perishing.

"This month we sent 'El Sembrador' to 3454 in Spanish-speaking lands outside of Mexico. By working day and night, we have the pleasure of now seeing a huge pile of 28,000 papers ready for the next mail. To-morrow our labour will be lost to our view, carried by train, diligence and mules, at a merely nominal cost to every part of this Republic, and by steamer to all the other Republics of Spanish America. The list includes members of congress, priests, doctors, lawyers, schoolmasters, etc., but it is our joy to think of the thousands of the poor and unlearned of this world to whom we are permitted to send God's message of salvation. Oh, that Christians would realise what a subject for prayer lies in this! The seed is scattered. A shower of earnest prayer would carry it into hearts, and a continuance of prayer would be our assurance of a common harvest."

Mr. Harris has for some time been praying for a fellow-labourer. On this point, as well as in regard to the work in general, communications should be addressed to Mr. John Mercer, Harburg, Fallowfield, Manchester.

Chelsea Preventive and Rescue Homes.—The report states that the past year has been one of trial and difficulty, the Homes being almost constantly full, and, as usual, there have been troublesome cases, which have been a great trial of faith. Still there has been the joy of seeing a few turn to the Lord and continue in well-doing. Many a poor young girl has come into the Preventive Home quite friendless, and having received just the help she needed is now doing well in service. In the Rescue Home there has been more anxiety and care. Twenty-five mothers and seventeen babies, besides all the other rescue cases, have passed through the Home during the past year. Nearly all these, while they are waiting for returning strength or watching over the little lives given into their keeping, begin to look up to God. It is urged that were the needed funds forthcoming much more might be done. The secretary is Mrs. S. E. Moor, croft, 3, Norman-street, Chelsea, S.W.

Mission in Perth.

Under the auspices of the Perth Evangelistic Association, a most successful mission has been conducted by Mr. T. W. Canning, of the Evangelisation Society (Scottish branch). Prior to the mission, notices had been sent to the leading Christian workers, and a spirit of expectation was engendered thereby, and when the evangelist came the ground was prepared for the sowing of the seed.

On Sabbath morning, August 29, Mr. Canning gave a Bible-reading to Christian workers. In the evening the tent was packed to its utmost capacity, and many could not gain admittance. In the after-meeting some twenty anxious souls were dealt with. On Monday evening the tent was again full, and continued to be so throughout the mission. The Word was with power; every night souls were seeking the truth in a quiet, subdued after-meeting, where those who had felt the power of the truth and who wished to yield to the claims of Christ were met by experienced workers who dealt with the hindrances in their way. On the second Sabbath still greater crowds came, and it was at once felt that a more commodious place of meeting must be secured. Again the Word was with power, and the large after-meeting testified to the deep conviction of many by the Holy Spirit. The second week was much as the first; every night the evangelist brought out a fresh aspect of truth, and with a like result. Old-established believers were refreshed by the clear presentation of truth, backsliders were reclaimed, and sinners saved. On the last day of the mission some 2000 people gathered in the City Hall to hear the evangelist's closing address.

Another special feature of the mission was the addresses to the children—fourteen of these were given—all of which were full of Gospel truth. Quite an interest was created among the young people, and although there were in the same vicinity a circus and a show, the tent was fairly filled with young people night by night before the ordinary evangelistic meeting. Altogether the workers are rejoicing in the good work which has been accomplished.

Secretary to the Perth Evangelistic Association.

Open-Air Work in Edinburgh.

A worker writes from Edinburgh: "The open-air work here this summer has been well to the front. Such work is pretty much a 'sowing in faith,' but we have been cheered to hear of blessing to souls, not only after many days, but in some cases at the time of the meetings going on. The Mormons have been very active in this respect; but I do not think they have had much support or sympathy—that is, when they have been known. They have been careful, however, not to let their hearers know too much all at once.

A farmer was once asked why as a rule he had such good crops. He replied, "Because I steep my seed." Why do we not see greater results from our preaching to-day? Certainly the Gospel has not lost its power, but we fear many of those who preach it have. May one cause not be that we do not steep our seed enough, or, in other words, there is a lack of prayer—so much to do, and so little time to wait before the doing? It may be common-place, but it remains true that we can never have any real blessing without earnest and continuous prayer. We want in Scotland a revival of the spirit of real prayer. We hear of some who are meeting for this one object, to wait upon God in united supplication. Oh, for many more who shall band themselves together to importune for blessing on our beloved land. We need, not less effort, but more definite believing of prayer.

The race of God's anointed priests shall never pass away;
Before his glorious face they stand, and serve Him night and day.
Tho' reason raves and unbelief flows on, a mighty flood
There are and shall be, till the end, the hidden priests of God.

Helping Workers Abroad.—A correspondent writes on the subject of Christians helping workers abroad by sending to them letters, copies of papers, and other literature. He says: "There are many in England who, though unable to send money, would willingly encourage workers, and contribute home newspapers. Missionaries in isolated districts would be only too glad to be in more frequent communication with home and friends, and I have seen how they store up religious newspapers, from which they doubtless get useful hints." Any missionary list would furnish intending helpers in this line with the names and addresses of lonely workers in distant lands.

Scottish Notes.

A conference in connection with the Church of Scotland Young Men's Guild was held at Uddingston last week, when the neighbouring towns and villages were well represented by delegates. A number of ministers gave addresses. All collections, after defraying expenses, were allocated to the Guild's Mission at Kalimpong, on the borders of Tibet.

Three quiet days for waiting upon God were observed last week at Hillhead, Glasgow.

In addition to the work of the Weaver Brothers at White Memorial Free Church, Glasgow, Mr. J. W. Moodie is at work at Trinity Free Church, while Mr. James Macfarlane is being much used of God at St. George's Cross Tabernacle. Mr. John Climie is about to hold a mission at Free St. Enoch's Church.

Every year is bringing further developments in the use of the optical lantern in connection with evangelistic work among the young. The Glasgow Sabbath School Union has made arrangements for missions on such lines in a number of its schools, and Mr. Thomas Pratt is vigorously prosecuting the same work in the towns and villages of the west, under the direction of the Home Mission Committee of the Free Church of Scotland.

Much interest was excited among the Christian workers of Langholm by a visit of Mr. Robinson Souttar, M.P., last week, when he addressed the Sabbath evening meeting of the Town Mission.

The Border Union of Sabbath Morning Fellowship Association has held its half-yearly meeting at Hawick. New organisations at Jedburgh and Stow were received into the Union. In addition to visitors from these towns, Galashiels, Innerleithen, Selkirk, Walkerburn, St. Boswells, and Kelso were well represented.

Conferences were held last week at Dunfermline and Kilmarnock in connection with the Congregational Union, when the subject of "The Person of Christ" was opened up by helpful addresses. At Dunfermline advantage was taken of the presence of visitors to hold special evangelistic gatherings.

The Annual Convention for the Deepening of Spiritual Life was held on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of last week at Parkhall, near Polmont, the residence of Mr. T. Livingstone Learmonth.

Weaver Brothers in Glasgow.

On the evening of Friday last the Weaver Brothers concluded a most successful fortnight of evangelistic services in White Memorial Free Church, Glasgow. The honoured name they bear of itself creates an interest in the brothers and secures for them a large audience from the very beginning of their missions. The solo singing of Frank Weaver is an undoubted attraction, while the earnest, faithful, and affectionate pleadings of Bewley Weaver secure that never an evening passes without decisions for eternity being solemnly ratified in the inquiry room.

It is the second series of meetings they have held in our church. At the close there was general regret that arrangements had not been made for a month instead of a fortnight. The deacons did what they could to remedy that by presenting an appeal to the brothers to arrange another mission with us in September, 1898.

At the close of the service on Friday evening a member of the congregation made intimation, through the minister, that he would present each of the converts with a copy of "Richard Weaver's Life Story," on condition that they come for it to the prayer meeting on Wednesday evening. As the number of names taken is upwards of seventy, this offer proved the breaking of a box of spikenard whose fragrance filled the whole house. J. P.

A Convert from Romanism, named Bunkofer, has made some stir in Southern Germany. Being a professor in the High School of Wertheim, Father Bunkofer occupied an influential position. Having adopted the reforming views of the Old Catholics, he recently wrote a vigorous letter to the Archbishop of Freiburg, announcing his retirement from the Roman Catholic Church, and setting forth in detail the errors and corruptions which he could no longer recognise or condone. The Ultramontane organs have attacked the pervert with great violence, and, as usual, insinuated that Dr. Bunkofer leaves the Papacy in order to be free from his vow of celibacy. This latter insinuation is indignantly repudiated by Dr. Bunkofer.

Oxford Letter.

[From Our Own Correspondent.]

Oxford's annual fair has once more come and gone. Much interest gathers round the old institution, thousands of people visit it during the two days. Preparations had been made for a special evangelistic effort by the members of the Y.M.C.A., and on both evenings of the fair a united open-air gathering was held. The meetings were conducted by the Curate of St. Aldate's, and he was assisted by workers from the various churches and chapels in the city. The addresses were short, practical, and full of unction. Hearts and consciences were undoubtedly touched by the fervent appeals. One woman in the crowd cried out, "I am not happy," as one brother spoke of the abiding joy to be found in Christ.

Mr. Holland, of Magdalen, whose paper on "Soul-Winning" was published in The Christian some few weeks ago, is probably going as curate to Rev. D. J. S. Hunt at Tunbridge Wells. He hopes to leave England in about two years for the mission field.

Oxford has several of its own missionaries at work in the regions beyond, and in this fact lies the secret of much of the prayerful interest shown in the work by the various churches.

The Principal of Wycliffe Hall preached the last sermon in his course on Naaman at St. Peter-le-Bailey on Sunday evening. His subject was "Gratitude" and "Decision." We cannot be too thankful that amid his many duties Principal Chavasse finds time for pastoral work. His words are greatly valued, and few will forget his soul-stirring appeals during the last few Sunday evenings.

Temperance Jottings.

Mr. Richard Coad has concluded a very successful six days' mission, held under the auspices of the Hitchin Total Abstinence Society. The Town Hall was crowded each night, and about 100 pledges have been taken.

The Gospel Temperance Mission at Accrington has held a most successful series of open-air meetings during the summer months, terminating with the present month. Large, interesting, and useful meetings have been held on all the Sunday afternoons and evenings upon the Market Ground.

Rev. Charles Garrett has initiated a new and comprehensive pledge—"That, considering the sin and sorrow caused by drunkenness, we think it inexpedient that Christians should use intoxicating liquor as a beverage; and promise to abstain from its use; and believing its common sale to be offensive to God, and most injurious to the country, will do all in our power to bring it to an end."

The North of England Temperance League reports a year of great success in every branch of its work. Over 8000 new pledges have been taken during the year, and never in the history of the League has so much literature been distributed in the four Northern counties. A series of conventions, culminating in the National Prohibition Convention in Newcastle, have been held, all of which were remarkably successful.

The Buxton Herald remarks that "There are not many gentlemen in their eightieth year who can boast, as can Mr. Thomas Wyles, of the Buxton College, of being able to carry a knapsack through a three weeks' walking tour, extending over a distance of nearly 300 miles, on three occasions ascending to an altitude of nearly 10,000 feet, and many times up to 7000 feet above sea level. But, then, he pays due regard to his three doctors, water, diet, exercise, and is a total abstainer."

The report of the Army Temperance Association confirms the previous year's records of improved physical and moral health from the abstaining habits of one-third of our army in India. Court-martial convictions per 1000 among the abstainers were, in 1896, only 5·21, as against 38·88 among the non-abstainers. In 1895 the corresponding figures were 4·70 as against 42·27. The chief advantage from this propaganda of temperance falls to the 14,000 young soldiers, whose untried constitutions used to be so undermined by alcoholic indulgence while yet unaccustomed to the somewhat trying climatic environment.—British Medical Journal.

Letters to the Editor.

THE JEWS AND PALESTINE.

Sir,—It cannot any longer be doubted that a great and singular movement is in progress among the exiled and oppressed people of the Israelites towards their ancient inheritance in Palestine. This movement cannot fail to attract the direct attention of every reader of your paper, fraught as it is with momentous consequences, not only to the Jews themselves, but through them to all the world. For when God leads his people back to Zion, we shall know that the hour is at hand for one of the closing scenes of human history. The destiny of the spiritual Israel is bound up with that of Israel after the flesh, and it is not too much to say that an expectant world hangs on the issue of these events. I speak thus of the final restoration of the Jews; and the steps, the smaller events, which appear to lead us on to that great climax cannot, therefore, be without interest to me, nor in any case fail to excite my sympathy—Yours very sincerely,

Peter Rudolph,

Alexandria, Egypt. Missionary to the Jews.

MOHAMMEDANISM IN INDIA.

Dear Sir,—The following facts cannot be too widely known. It would be a good thing if some member of Parliament brought the matter before the notice of the Government.

Within one hundred miles of Hyderabad, the capital of the Mohammedan state called the Deccan, the following occurrences quite recently took place. They can be proved by witnesses and substantiated by certain missionaries from whom I received the information. An old woman turned up at a village, inquiring if there were any poor natives who were in great pecuniary distress and would be glad to get rid of their children. One family was found, nominally Christian, who were willing, for a consideration, to sell two little girls, aged five years and eight years, to this old woman. One little girl was traced by my friends to the house of a wealthy Mohammedan who had bought her for thirty rupees. They induced the father to buy his child back from this Mohammedan.

This Mohammedan only released the child under fear of the law. He said to these missionaries, "I know it is against the law; but everyone does it," and he named no less than three Nizam's officials who were guilty of the same crime.

From information received by the missionaries in these territories it is manifest that a wholesale trade in boys and girls goes on. These are smuggled into harems in the city of Hyderabad, and are brought up as Mussulmans for immoral purposes. I refrain from comment, and subscribe myself, Indignant British Subject in India.

THE PROTECTION OF BIRDS.

Dear Sir,—The slaughter of birds goes on at such a pace that a voice of strong protest must again be raised on behalf of the myriads of animals that are being slain to satisfy the demands of a cruel and barbarous fashion in women's dress. When will women learn that birds were not designed as ornaments for the person? When will the greed of hunters, traders, dealers, and shopkeepers cease to impoverish the natural resources of the earth by making capital out of the killing of defenceless creatures?

Ladies' journals and fashion papers abound in descriptions of hats and bonnets trimmed with feathers or wings of birds, and these monstrosities are to be seen in almost every milliner's shop window. A correspondent writes to us of a hat he has seen with a stuffed swallow in it. Another sends us an advertisement beginning, "Sea swallows, kittywakes; wanted, some thousands of these birds." The comments made by both correspondents are in language too strong for us to quote.

From princess to peasant the evil is rampant. On Jubilee day the hearts of many bird lovers were made sad at seeing head after head in the Queen's procession decorated by plumes obtainable only at the breeding season, meaning a cruel destruction of parent birds and a miserable death by slow starvation to helpless nestlings.

We would implore the leading women of all civilised countries to give this matter thought and consideration. We would also beg women of every station in life not to allow themselves to follow indly such a cruel fashion.—Yours faithfully,

Hill Crest, Redhill, Surrey. M. L. Lemon.

PRISON OFFICIALS.

Dear Sir,—I should like to reply to the article on "Prison Officials," where it is stated that the writer believes there is no work in the English gaols amongst prison warders and matrons. In 1887 I had the privilege of staying with the deputy governor of Dartmoor, and of being present at one of the weekly Bible-classes for the warders of the prison. Much good was done among all the families as well. I have not seen Colonel Plummer for some time (he is now governor of Borstal, near Rochester), but I should think he is carrying on the work still, for he is a most earnest Christian and has a daughter who also visits the families. I wish there were more governors like him.—Yours truly,

S. Field.

5, Framfield-road, Highbury, N., Sept. 16.

Another correspondent writes, giving details of work carried on among prison officials by the Home Mission Committee of the Society of Friends at various Government prisons with good results. Mr. W. Liddell, of Newport, I.W., is about to take up residence at 78, Kingston-road, Oxford, and will devote his time almost entirely to that important work. He will be glad to hear from any interested in it.

Klondyke.

They rush for gold 'mid waste of snow—
Thro' ice-bound rock and river;
And never rest they as they go
With hearts that leap and quiver;
Unheeding in the fevered strife
The dangers which surround their life.

They rush for gold beneath the glare
Of scorching suns thereover:
Lone mountain height the seekers dare,
Where clouds eternal hover.
And, as they die in want and pain,
With latent breath lament their gain.

Let there be but a slender hope—
However small its measure,
With tempest and with flood they cope
To seize th' expected treasure,
And those who live to reach the mine
Fall down and hug its yellow shrine.

They rush for gold, and what do we
Whose souls by grace are lighted,
To preach the Christ of Calvary
To those in sin benighted?
In that high reach of noblest strife,
How tremble we about our life!

How fear we all the storm and flood—
How dread the foaming river;
How little trust the power of God
From all things to deliver.
When richer far than earthly gold
His message is of love untold.

Take from us, Lord, we humbly pray,
These hearts so unbelieving;
And thrust Thy labourers forth to-day
The Spirit's power receiving.
For until we, Thy servants, go,
The world Thy truth shall never know.

John Wilfrid McClure.

Mission Work in Nottingham.—For some years past work for God on undenominational lines has been carried on in Nottingham, by the United Gospel Mission, in the Albert and Circus street halls. God has owned his word through this instrumentality, and numbers have been won for Christ. Several well-known evangelists have laboured in connection, such as Messrs. H. Varley, C. Inglis, W. R. Lane, and others. Since February of the present year Mr. Walter Notman, late of the Evangelisation Society, has taken up the work of pastor and superintendent. God has given many gracious tokens of blessing. Three halls, The Albert, Circus Street, and Redoubt Street, are at present used for the work on each Lord's day and nearly every night in the week. The seating accommodation provided by these halls is for more than 3000 people. The congregations are composed of the working class, and hence outside help is needed to enable the work to be carried on. During this year extra expenses have been incurred, the result being that the committee are nearly £100 behind. Many Christians throughout the country who know Mr. Notman personally would be glad to send him and those who labour with him gifts of fancy and useful articles for a sale of work, or money. Address Pastor Walter Notman, Circus Street Hall, Nottingham.

"Last Journey to Jerusalem."—Acts xxi. 1-15.

Golden Text.—"I am ready not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus."—Acts xxi. 13.

While Paul's definite teaching roused many enemies it also procured for him some fast friends. It was only with difficulty they could get away from the Ephesian elders, "tore ourselves away" (1). Point out that, although the Gospel does not speak much of the sanctity of friendship, the New Testament is full of examples of true friendship which the teaching of Christ inspired. Setting sail they passed Cos and came to Rhodes (the island of Roses). On this island was erected the huge image of brass, by Chares of Lyndus, in honour of his empire of the sea. It stood at the entrance to the harbour, and vessels could pass between its legs. It was hurled down by an earthquake, and only the two legs were standing when the Apostle passed by. Doubtless Paul would think, "Thus shall it be with all the idols that men erect, and only Christ shall continue as the Sun of Righteousness."

At Patara they had to change vessels, perhaps because the one they had used so far was going no further toward Jerusalem. But it seemed as though the Spirit which was driving Paul to Jerusalem also prepared the way, for they soon found a ship going over to Phœnicia (2) (a strip of land bordering the sea in the northern part of Palestine). As they sailed they could just see the hilltops of Cyprus, which would recall to Paul's mind his experiences there some fifteen years before (see Acts xiii. 4-12). At Tyre the ship had to unload some of her cargo, and as this would take some days the Apostle went ashore (3). There were very few places in Palestine now where there was no band of converts to the new faith. Paul sought out the Christians of Tyre, and stayed with them during his visit.

It must have been a pathetic scene to see that little band of Christians kneeling on the seashore praying that God would watch over the travellers, give command to the winds and the waves concerning them, and that those who remained behind in Tyre might be kept faithful to their Master. Emphasise the fact that sincere prayer should be offered everywhere. Wherever the heart is contrite—in the street, on the mountains, or in the home, as well as in the church—there God is willing to hear and answer prayer.

They next landed at Ptolemais. It was of the tribe of Asher and was called Accho, and is now called Acre. They only saluted the Christians here, and then travelled down the coast by land some thirty-six miles to Cæsarea. Here they found Philip. Philip had been one of the seven chosen as deacons in the original church at Jerusalem. It is very probable that he had been present when the stoners of his brother deacon Stephen laid their clothes at the feet of Saul. It was due to the persecutions of this same Saul that the Church had been scattered, and Philip went out as a missionary to the Samaritans.

Note that there was a great deal of similarity between these two. Philip had gone to preach to the hated Samaritans, and in the way he had actually baptized the Ethiopian minister. He believed with Paul that the Gospel of Jesus was to be for the world, and not for any small section of it. The four daughters of Philip had determined to devote their lives to the service of Christ. They also preached the Gospel (9). They determined to remain untrammelled by the duties of a home of their own in order that they might have more time to give to this great work. Agabus (see also Acts xi. 28) the Prophet, by a striking illustration, told Paul of the imprisonment which awaited him (11) His friends tried to dissuade him from going to Jerusalem, but notwithstanding their tears and entreaties, that iron will was not to be moved from a purpose that seemed right. The fact was,

He saw a hand they could not see,
Which beckoned him away.
He heard a voice they could not hear,
Which would not let him stay.

Point out how we too often see that hand and hear that voice, but we do not obey them because a coward fear seizes our hearts. Let us pray for Paul's faith to do always what is right.

Evangelistic Notes.

The Workington Free Church Council has been greatly cheered by the results of a mission recently closed. Gipsy Smith was the preacher, and his appeals were so forceful and spiritual that large numbers professed conversion.

Mr. Wm. Sampson, the Cornish evangelist, lately paid a flying visit to "Hannah Memorial," Lincoln. On Sunday night the spacious chapel was crowded, and at the close, when the appeal was made for decision for Christ, several responded, and there was joy both on earth and in heaven over returning prodigals.

For many months and years there have been open-air services on the Custom House steps, Belfast, and in the Square. The main entrance is up a long flight of stairs—very wide—and it is here that the Wesleyan Methodists have their famous meeting every Sabbath. In the past these meetings have often been the scene of much strong and noisy opposition, but a correspondent of Joyful News, having visited the gatherings, writes a glowing account of the services, the intense interest, and evident results.

Mr. Josiah Spiers has been holding a mission at Torwood Gardens, Torquay, and is now labouring at Brixham, whence he goes to Newton Abbot and Plympton.

We have closed a month's mission at the Y.M.C.A., Aberdeen, led by Mr. Rowland Edwards, evangelist. Grave doubts were expressed, owing to the season, with regard to the attendances, but even the expectations of the most sanguine were more than fulfilled. Our average attendance on the Sunday evenings in the Music Hall was about fifteen hundred, with correspondingly good audiences in our own hall during the week. The addresses were clear and pointed, and brimming over with Gospel truth, put in a most striking form. Numbers were dealt with each night in the second meeting, and occasionally the message was so clear and convincing that we found several professed to see and accept salvation during the preaching.—W. Henderson, Secretary Y.M.C.A.

The month's special services in the mission tent at Star Corner, Bermondsey, in connection with the Working Men's Mission, has already been greatly blessed. On Sunday the tent was full to overflowing, and numbers who could not get in heard the word without. Many will have cause to praise God for these tent services. The evangelist has been Mr. Bennett Anderson, who is conducting a special mission at the three halls connected with this mission. His word has been acceptable to Christians, and many have professed faith in Christ through the preaching of the Word.

During the past fortnight Mr. Charles Inglis has been visiting Dublin, where God has wondrously used him in years past in blessing to his people and in the conversion of many of the unsaved. The mission now concluded has been held in a large marquee in connection with the Baptist church. Not only has the place been filled nightly, but often many who were unable to gain admission have stood outside to listen to the truth from the evangelist. Not a night has passed without blessing to souls, and amongst those who have professed conversion have been quite a number of young men. One cheering feature has been to see those who were blessed in former missions working heartily to ead anxious souls into peace and joy. E.

During the summer—May, June, July, and August—Mr. Newton Jones has been labouring in the villages, and on the sands at Lowestoft and Bognor, where much blessing has been granted. After a rest he hopes to begin work at Carlisle. He would be glad of prayer for his winter's missions.

Mr. Chas. Galletly, of the Evangelisation Society, has closed a three weeks' mission at Dumfries. The meetings all through have been well attended, and much good has been done. Souls have been saved, and there has been widespread quickening among God's people. (Pastor) A. Bremner.

Mr. Northcote Willy, of the Bible Carriage Mission, Leeds, and Mr. J. T. Smyth, of Glasgow, have conducted a fortnight's mission in a large tent in Belfast. The services were held under the auspices of the Belfast Central Mission, of which Rev. R. Crawford Johnson is superintendent. The Word was preached with power, and many were led to Christ.

Requests for Prayer.

The committee of the Society for Irish Church Missions have set apart the week commencing Sunday, October 10, as a week of united prayer throughout the mission, for blessing in larger measure on the Society's work, and for Ireland and the Irish people.

That the churches may be stirred up in regard to the grave subject of the appointment of "unfit men" for the ministry of the Gospel.

For blessing on a mission by Mr. William Forbes at Springburn, Glasgow, to begin on Sunday next.

Pastor Fliedner, of Madrid, writes: "I entreat our friends not to forget us in their Christian sympathy and prayers. Our beautiful building for a missionary college is nearly finished, and we have already asked licence to enter it, but for weeks we have waited in vain for this licence. The death of the Prime Minister Canovas, who, though at the head of the Ultramontane party, was just enough to understand that Protestants, once being tolerated, must possess their own schools, has been without doubt a new hindrance for our work. We ask the prayers of God's children."

For a mission in Worcester by Mr. Herbert R. Francis, from Sept. 19 to 26.

For blessing on three quiet days in preparation for service, to be conducted by Mrs. Penn Lewis, at 100, Corporation-street, Birmingham, Sept. 29 to Oct. 1.

For blessing on a series of meetings for the deepening of the spiritual life being held this week at the Assembly Hall, 6a, Junction-road, Holloway, conducted by Mr. Thos. Payne and various friends.

Personalia.

Lord Kinnaird, who has so long taken a deep interest in the spiritual state of India, intends on Oct. 1 to leave England on a visit to our Eastern Empire.

Mr. Robert P. Wilder has arranged to spend a year addressing theological students in the United States and Canada, after which he hopes to return to his work in India.

Miss Burgess, late Association Secretary of the Foreign Aid Society, has been appointed to assist in deputation work in Great Britain for the McAll Mission in France.

Pastor A. G. Brown preached to large congregations at the Baptist Church, Chatsworth-road, West Norwood, on the last two Lord's Days, many going from considerable distances to hear his vigorous utterances. Before these lines are read it is expected that Mr. Brown will have formally accepted a call to the pastorate of Chatsworth-road Church.

Mr. J. C. Lanphier, the founder of the Fulton-street Noon Prayer-meeting, New York, recently observed his eighty-ninth birthday, when he was able to be present at the meeting and give a brief address. The Fulton-street meeting reaches its fortieth anniversary this day, Sept. 23, when a portrait of Mr. Lanphier is to be hung on the walls.

Mr. A. F. Hills.—It is proposed that a testimonial should be presented to this devoted leader in the cause of Temperance and Food Reform. There is no wish to raise any large sum, hence the donations are limited to one shilling. Particulars may be had of the secretary, Miss Florence C. Nicholson, Vegetarian Association, Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, E.C.

Rev. Thomas Spurgeon, who resumed his ministry at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Sunday, after a season of rest and holiday, attained his forty-first birthday on Monday. During the morning, afternoon, and evening he sat in his vestry to receive the freewill offerings of the people on behalf of Christian work. The sum thus received amounted to £436 7s. 11d.

Miss Millington, of the Showmen's Gospel Temperance Mission, writes to us: "As there are a large number of fairs at this time of the year, may we ask Christian workers to include the van people in their kind efforts, by personal visitation, and by holding Sabbath meetings in-door and out? Many are realising that the Gospel is the power of God unto salvation." Miss Millington, Layerthorpe-grove, York, will be glad to forward a report of her work, and a copy of "The Caravan," free to any part of the world.

The Y.M.C.A.

The first Association in Rhodesia has been formally launched at Buluwayo.

Mr. E. P. Garrett, of the Gloucester Y.M.C.A., has been appointed general secretary at Eastbourne.

The Brooklyn Association is to receive from a benevolent friend the gift of a summer home near Bellport, which the Association has freely occupied with eighty guests this summer by that friend's kindness.

The English Year-Book of Y.M.C.A.'s (just issued, 1s.) gives particulars of work among young men at home and abroad, with lists of Associations and secretaries; forming in fact a useful synopsis of the world's Y.M.C.A.'s and their operations.

At the annual meeting of the Gloucester Association, held last week, Mr. J. W. Probyn, C.C., presided and delivered a stirring address. The report showed good work for the past year. Messrs. Hannam-Clark, E. P. Garrett, W. R. Lane, and F. Sessions were amongst the speakers.

The Foreign Missionary section of the Camden Town branch are starting an "Our Own Missionary Fund" in connection with the Agra Medical College, India; at which institution the members intend to support at least one student. As time goes on they hope to extend this fund to the support of Native Missionaries in Africa, China, and other mission-fields.

Mr. F. W. Barclay, secretary of the Sailors' Home, Dock-street, E., who was for some years prominently identified with the work at the Aldersgate-street centre, has accepted office as chairman of committee of the New Cross and Brockley Association. The neighbouring Association at Lewisham is inaugurating its work under very favourable auspices.

The report of the Bayswater Association states that God has blessed the work to very many young men. The membership has been steadily increasing, though many changes have occurred. Many young men are continually leaving the neighbourhood, but their places get filled up by others coming into the district. Seventy members and associates were enrolled last year. Deeply interesting instances are given of the way in which men have been saved from sin and helped in many ways.

A former Association secretary at Seattle is one of the fortunate miners who have made large fortunes in the Klondyke gold-mining country. In Men it is stated that Mr. Lippy not only brought back some of the gold from Alaska (for which he and his wife endured the rigours of the Arctic winter and the privations of a pioneer camp), but he has returned with the same deep consecration to our Lord and Master which characterised his life while officially connected with the Association work.

The eight days' anti-infidel campaign conducted by Mr. Isaac Selby (of Melbourne) on behalf of the Islington and Highbury Association had a favourable commencement on Sunday afternoon in Barnsbury Hall, Barnsbury-street, Islington. The body of the hall was comfortably filled, the majority of those present being men. The greatest attention was given to the missioner. At the evening meeting the address was on "Footsteps to Calvary," and was closed by an earnest appeal for surrender to God. On Monday evening there commenced a series of addresses of a more controversial character. At the close of each address an opportunity is afforded for asking questions.

Considerable interest was developed at the recent British Conference in the foreign work which is being undertaken by the English National Council. In addition to maintaining two efficient secretaries for young men's work in India—one for Bombay city, the other for Bombay Presidency—the Council desires to prosecute much-needed work in Palestine and Egypt, and to help forward the appointment of travelling secretaries for South Africa and Australia, as well as to send out an officer whose duty it shall be to organise Christian work for young men in the treaty ports of China. The chairman of this department is Mr. W. H. Seagram, and the treasurer Mr. T. F. Victor Buxton.

The London Central Association have been laying plans for the winter, and some important items appear in their programme. On Monday next a ten days' special mission to young men, at Exeter Hall, by Pastor W. Y. Fullerton, opens with a Bible-reading from the missioner at 1 p.m., and a reception to young men in the evening by Sir George Williams. From Oct. 13-15 there will be, at Exeter Hall, a great Missionary Convention, when experts will unfold the work of the various societies at work in the chief mission centres of the world. A more detailed notice will appear later on. On Nov. 3, 4, and 5, at Exeter Hall, there will be demonstrations against the prevalent social vices of the day. From Nov. 8-11 Mr. W. R. Lane will hold a Gospel Mission for young men at Portman Rooms.

Obituary.

MR. J. T. MORTON.

This noble and generous giver passed away, at his residence, at Falmouth, on Saturday, 11th inst. He had been in failing health for some time, by reason of a severe internal complaint. He took a deep interest in Christian work, especially in maintenance of the sanctity of the Lord's day. We hope to give his portrait and a sketch of his life in an early issue.

MR. JAMES HOULDSWORTH.

The death is announced, at Coltness, Wishaw, N.B., of Mr. James Houldsworth, who was a warm friend of the Protestant cause. He had been for many years a member of the committee of the Church Association, and when his health permitted he regularly attended its meetings. Mr. Houldsworth was a liberal supporter of the Association, and was one of the Manchester guarantors of the £50,000 Fund with which it was started in 1865. He was the father-in-law of Sir Christopher R. Lighton, Bart., and when he left Manchester in 1868 his loss was keenly felt. We can ill afford to lose such excellent men as Mr. Houldsworth. One who knew him intimately writes:—"He will be terribly missed by Evangelical friends. He was one of the very few who stick to the old flag. He always supported Protestant appeals and objects."

MISS EDITH CHERRY.

This young friend, resident in Plymouth, whose sweet, simple, and spiritual poems have frequently adorned our columns, recently passed away to her eternal rest, at the age of twenty-five. Physically her life was one of much weakness and suffering, but the frail vessel was tenanted by a bright, happy, devout spirit, which rejoiced in the Father's will, even when it meant trial and sorrow to the flesh. She was gifted in various ways, and it was a joy to her to use her talents for the comfort and soul-strengthening of other weary ones.

We hope in an early issue to give her portrait and a memorial sketch of her short but useful life from the pen of her friend, Mrs. M. A. Paull-Ripley. We append some touching verses written by herself at he age of thirteen:—

DO NOT SAY I AM DEAD.

When my years on this earth are ended,
And my days are numbered and fled,
Oh, say I am gone to Jesus—
Do not say I am dead.

Say not that I am lying
Cold underneath the sod;
Oh, do not speak of my dying,
But speak of my life with God.

Say not that I am hidden
Out in the churchyard dim.
Say "Jesus had need of her spirit,
And called it away to Him."

For that which we think is dying
Is only a glorious tryst,
Where, apart from this earth and its sorrows,
We meet with our Saviour Christ.

Rev. William Lee.

Bible Flower Mission.—Mrs. Turton (hon. superintendent) gives, in her monthly paper, a cheering account of progress, illustrated by cases of conversion. She adds:—"We must now plead for more workers, two having left to be trained as missionaries. Another who has been an indefatigable visitor to hospitals and infirmaries for many years, is reluctantly obliged to give up her loved work through leaving London; and there are others who from unavoidable circumstances are kept away. Surely there are some who would rejoice to fill the places now vacant, and carry the glad tidings of a Saviour's love to those who are without God and without hope. Any who are inclined to help us with the work at the Depôt, 110, Cannon-street, E.C., will also be welcome."

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

The bicentenary of the reopening of St. Paul's Cathedral falls on December 2.

Dean Lefroy has been enabled to return to his work at Norwich in renewed vigour and health.

Sir H. H. Bemrose, M.P. for Derby, laid last week the foundation-stone of a new Sunday-school for Belper.

Rev. A. F. Winnington-Ingram, the newly appointed Canon of St. Paul's, intends to resign the Rectory of St. Matthew's, Bethnal Green.

The treasurers have received from "A Friend of the Dean" a donation of £500 towards the restoration of the west front of Peterborough Cathedral.

Bishop Tugwell left England for the Niger on Saturday last. During his visit to this country he has received over £2000 towards an "Advance" fund in connection with the work in his diocese.

The course of lectures to be delivered by Mr. Eugene Stock at the request of the Committee of the C.M.S. Lay Workers' Union for London, will be given on Tuesdays, November 9, 16, 23, and 30, at six p.m.

The work at St. James's, Holloway, under the present vicar, Rev. E. Grose Hodge, is reported as flourishing in all its many branches. The congregations are large, and the various mission and other agencies full of activity.

Bishop Barry, acting for the Bishop of London, held a special service in the Church Army Training Home Chapel, Edgware-road, on Thursday, when seventeen students of the Training Home were admitted by his lordship to the position of evangelist in the Church.

Canon Stone-Wigg, of Brisbane, who has been appointed Bishop of New Guinea, is the youngest bishop in Australasia, being some months (the Southern Cross says) under the age of Bishop Wilson, of Melanesia. He will be accompanied to the mission-field by Rev. W. H. Abbott.

The Archbishop of York, speaking in Middlesbrough Town-hall on foreign missions on Monday week, said there was no work in all the world more interesting than that of Christian missions. He urged every man, woman, and child to take some part in the work of promoting Christian missions. The Bishop of Saskatchewan, Mr. H. Pike Pease, and the Archdeacon of Natal, expressed the belief that missionary effort was the great fundamental duty of the Church.

A cheque for £100 has just been sent, as "A Widow's Offering," to the hon. chief sec. of the Church Army (Rev. W. Carlile) for the purpose of placing one of the society's mission and colportage vans in the Diocese of Bath and Wells. The Church Army has now thirty-nine of these vans. Many archdeaconries are still pressing for a van to be sent, but the committee are only able to do this where the initial cost has been provided. At the close of the van mission at Barnsley last week, a lady sought out the van captain and, saying she "felt she must do something for Jesus," gave him her valuable gold gem-studded brooch to be sold for the benefit of the society's van work.

Congregational.

Rev. Charles W. Sykes has been recognised as pastor at Hornsea.

Rev. W. Houghton has resumed his ministry at Upper Norwood, after some weeks' illness.

A new chapel is being erected at Whittington on a site given by Mrs. Thomas Minshall, of Oswestry.

Rev. Thomas Simon, late of Balham, has been publicly recognised as pastor of the church at Stowmarket.

Canning-town Chapel was reopened on Sunday, when sermons were preached by Principal Vaughan Pryce.

The foundation-stone of the new chapel being built in Manor-road, Scarborough, to provide for the needs of the residents of the north-west part of the town, was laid on Friday by Mr. J. Compton Rickett, M.P.

A meeting to celebrate the first anniversary of the settlement of Rev. Charles Wickham as pastor was held in the Girls' School on Thursday, September 9. During the past year sixty new members have joined the church.

Fulham Church was re-opened on September 19, after renovation. The services were conducted by Rev. Dr. Davies in the absence of the Pastor, (Rev. H. J. Shirley), through temporary indisposition.

On Lord's Day both Mr. Pearse and Mr. Price Hughes resumed their ministry at St. James's Hall, Mr. Pearse taking the morning service, and Mr. Price Hughes the evening. The St. James's Hall congregations and collections during the holiday period have been larger than in any previous year. The new minister, Mr. Lax, has made a most encouraging start, and his preaching has already been followed by conversions.

The famous Wesley Chapel in Church-street, Spitalfields, one of the largest and oldest places belonging to the Methodist body in London, has (says the Westminster Gazette) just been sold to the Jews for a synagogue. Less than twenty years ago the most famous preachers of Methodism drew crowded congregations there, and Wesley preached often in the early days. Only a few months ago Artillery-lane Chapel was turned into a synagogue, and an effort is being made to secure another large chapel in Whitechapel.

Appeal.

Books Wanted.—Being interested in young girls, I am trying to start a branch of the Young Women's Christian Association in this district, where I am working as mission sister. I am greatly in need of some story and useful books to form a library in connection with it. I know in many homes old books are stowed away and allowed to get musty, when they might be educating the minds of young girls who are too poor even to buy a book, but can easily obtain a penny novelette, which only poisons the heart and mind. —Address, (Sister) Laura A. Ellis, 1, Viewland-road, Plumstead, Kent.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

WITH a view of still further extending the circulation of The Christian, Messrs. Morgan and Scott are prepared to send, carriage free, to any reader resident in the United Kingdom, on receipt of Postal Order for 6s., thirty-six copies of the current issue of The Christian and a handsome 12s. 6d. Paragraph Bible (with references) printed in large type, and bound in Persian morocco, with gilt edges. Readers in foreign countries included in the Postal Union can secure the same advantage on forwarding a Postal Order for 9s. 6d. The publishers expect that the thirty-six copies of The Christian sent with the Bible will be given to friends not already acquainted with the paper, but likely in consequence to become regular subscribers. Further particulars of this offer are given in an advertisement on page 8 of the present issue.

We believe that the reading of a weekly journal such as The Christian does much to stimulate missionary and evangelistic zeal both for the home and the foreign fields, and we ask the co-operation of all our friends in extending its influence. In order to assist such efforts, our publishers will be pleased to forward parcels of specimen numbers of the paper to anyone applying for same who can distribute them to advantage. We shall be specially glad if ministers, evangelists, Sunday-school teachers, mission superintendents, and other Christian workers will avail themselves of this offer ; and we are convinced that fresh workers and new donors will be secured by these means for the support of the many Christian enterprises which are chronicled in our pages from time to time.

We learn that Young Men's Christian Associations, while much used of God in preparing workers for other fields of service, are themselves often placed in difficulty in the endeavour to find labourers who possess the special gifts required for carrying on their own distinctive work. The sphere of a Y.M.C.A. secretary, owing to the many-sided character of the duties he is called upon to render, is doubtless more than ordinarily exacting, and is scarcely likely to prove permanently attractive to any but those who consciously devote themselves to it in obedience to the Divine Will. The Associations represent a world-wide missionary movement among an important section of the population of this and other lands, and the results of their efforts bear a direct relation to the advancement of all forms of missionary enterprise. This aspect of their work should, we feel, appeal with increasing force to young men who possess the necessary endowments for rendering such service as is urgently in demand at many centres.

One of the secondary results of the Greek indemnity problem, as now settled, will be the inability of the Greek Government to give any further effective assistance to the Thessalian refugees. These number at least 150,000, and are for the most part homeless, without food, and with only such clothing as they brought from their homesteads. Hitherto the Greek Government has done its best to keep them alive ; but its crippled finances and the exhaustion of the generous gifts of Greek merchants in foreign lands, make it essential that a wider effort be made to save them from starvation. The Greek Refugees Committee is therefore making a strenuous effort to appeal to the people of the British Empire and to continental nations for liberal supplies in the form of money, blankets, and clothing. The plea is all the more forcible when we consider that these poor people were in no sense the cause, but purely the victims, of this disastrous war, and that the winter will greatly accentuate their sufferings.

News from India is a mixture of good and bad. The good is that there has been a copious fall of rain in certain parts of the country and that there is no longer any need to keep the Mansion House Fund open, although a large number of persons are still on the relief works. The bad news is that unrest and fighting still continue on the frontier, but the worst is contained in telegrams by Reuter saying that the plague has crept over a wide area and invaded scattered villages, spreading itself gradually and unobserved from hamlet to hamlet. The Bombay Gazette fears that the Government of India may be subordinating the medical service to frontier work, and that it does not realise the peril that would threaten India through the weakening of the machinery necessary to combat the plague. It says that "consequences would thereby be entailed infinitely more disastrous than anything which is happening on the frontier." So think those on the spot, but, we fear, Britain's main attention will be given to the fortunes of the army in the field. The moral meaning of the Indian question has yet to be evolved.

One of the practical evils of our ecclesiastical divisions is the inevitable tendency to overlap in work. In spiritual affairs it does not matter so much, for it will do folks no harm to find two persons of widely divergent views seeking to bring men nearer to God. But the evil is most manifest in the distribution of charity in poor districts. A recent case, for instance, showed that a family, pleading poverty, was being assisted by three churches—Anglican, Baptist, and Wesleyan—and many were the queer tricks practised to keep each church in ignorance of the fact. If churches cannot unite in their creeds, they might, by a little more co-operation in charitable work, save themselves the chagrin of discoveries like the above, and save the poor from much degradation.

The people of Bradford-on-Avon have made themselves exemplary by their unusual licensing appeal. They asked the magistrates that the public-houses of the town may be closed at ten instead of eleven o'clock p.m. Of course the magistrates had no power to act. They may lengthen the hours, but cannot shorten them. But the question has been raised, and temperance workers will not be slow to press it on the attention of Parliament, so that those who have the power to grant licences shall also have it within their province to shorten the hours of any particular house or all the houses under their jurisdiction. Few would dispute the fact that it would be better for the morals and health of the frequenters of public-houses if their temptations were abbreviated by even one hour per day.

It is a good sign that there is so much sensitiveness with regard to children and drink. Many parents who think it quite right for their children to abstain, and encourage them to do so, are nevertheless "moderate drinkers" themselves. Better this than the consistency which would urge the children to do as they do. Now there is also a strong feeling against children being served at public-houses ; the only pity is that that feeling does not extend to the persons who send them there. However, it is a contagious thing, and will spread more and more. At many of the Brewster Sessions the justices cautioned publicans against serving children under thirteen years of age. But the publicans resent this as illegal. It may be, but for all that it is eminently moral, and the justices will go on doing it until law and morals are harmonised in this particular. Meanwhile, let it be observed that in France, Russia, Hungary, and Belgium, there are stringent laws against serving children.

Appearances at present are in favour of a School Board for London which shall not be, as The Standard calls the present one, "a synod of wrangling theologians," and which shall not allow the priest to be supreme. The wrangling will be over before the election, and the priest will have got the worst of it—some hope and think. His own side is getting tired of him. The people can, of course, decide the whole dispute, and in their hands it will soon rest. Let them restore the policy which at the beginning made the London Board so mighty a power for good among the poor children of this vast City.

A correspondent in India, an officer in the Army, sends us "with shame and confusion of face, with sorrow of heart and indignation of spirit," a description of provision made for the protection of British soldiers in India from the results of immoral indulgence. It is sufficient to say that the facts are attested by four persons beside the Christian officer who pens them, and constitute, as he says, "an abominable connivance at immorality evidently done by authority and obviously done at the suggestion of some army doctor." Our esteemed correspondent deplores the fact that army doctors are not compelled by regulation to lecture young soldiers on immorality, showing what it is and what it begets.

It has often been pointed out in these columns that the health of our Indian Army might be greatly improved by the care of the officers, and by punishing men who, through wilful misconduct, unfit themselves for duty. The Commander-in-Chief in India is of the same opinion. He says :

> Such men are fitting subjects for all the restrictions of discipline that can be imposed upon them, as they habitually render themselves unfit to fulfil the engagement they have entered into with the State, and throw upon their most self-respecting comrades the burden of their duty.

Only let the same measure be meted out to offending officers as well as offending men, and let it be to the praise and advantage of both when they keep themselves equal to their duty.

According to reports and warnings from across the Atlantic, the bicycle craze is having a disastrous effect on church attendance in America. One prominent minister says that not only non-churchgoers, but thousands of people who had hitherto been faithful to Sunday observance, now regularly spend their fine Sundays wheeling in the country. It is the greatest crisis, in his opinion, that has befallen the Church since the Reformation. We hope this is an exaggerated statement, but the serious growth of the habit on this side of the Atlantic during the past summer is suggestive of a grave danger. Would it not be well if during the coming winter the leaders of our Bible classes, etc., were to deal wisely and fairly with the Sunday question? With many young people lack of guidance, rather than any vicious tendency, accounts for their growing slackness on this question.

The Headmaster of Dulwich College, in a temperate and important article in the current National Review, utters a needed word of caution on the abuse of athletics in public schools. He asserts that there is a perilous tendency on the part of schoolmasters to encourage games with a view to making their schools popular. The result is that "the intense interest taken in athletics by boys at school destroys the interest which they take in their lessons." Naturally, he says, two boys out of three really like their lessons; but, owing to this absorption in sports, the present proportion is often reversed. This is a state of things fraught with danger, both educationally and morally; and Mr. Gilkes appeals both to schoolmasters, who should resolutely restrain athletics within proper limits, and to parents, who should train their children into a correct judgment as to the value and limitations of these sports and exercises in a schoolboy's life. This last suggestion is a most important one. The time will come when every schoolboy will have the governance of his own leisure at college or in business, and the sooner he begins to use a sober judgment on his own account the better his prospects of surviving later temptations.

The average missionary has fared but poorly at the hands of the contemporary novelist, but, as the Independent points out, there is a welcome change taking place, and some of the finest of more recent tributes to the value of missionary work have come from writers of fiction. Robert Louis Stevenson's warm words on the labours and character of Rev. James Chalmers, of New Guinea, will be fresh in our readers' minds; and now we find Mr. Louis Becke, another South Sea novelist, bearing eloquent testimony to the work done by Rev. F. Lawes in the Coral Islands. This tardy change of attitude is due to a better knowledge of the real facts. It is the ignorant and the prejudiced only who rail at the results of missionary work, and when ignorance and prejudice have had their day the patient and uncomplaining service of the devoted men and women who are engaged in extending the influence of the Gospel will win the admiring homage of the world.

Later advices from South Africa make it clear that an utterly illegal treatment has been meted out to the Bechuana prisoners of war, referred to in these notes last week. The apology offered by the officials is that these people had the choice given to them of being tried for high treason or the acceptance of a compulsory apprenticeship at nominal wages—a condition indistinguishable from slavery. It is to be hoped that the authorities will thoroughly investigate this shameful matter. There seems to be a periodical outburst of savagery in the treatment of natives on the part of a certain section of the white population. Information has been coming in of barbarous and heartless cruelty towards some bushmen during the campaign. These charges are made by responsible people who do not shirk giving their names, and should be inquired into without delay for the honour of the British name.

Rev. Thomas Green, an ex-chairman of the Congregational Union, writes to The Independent expressing his regret that in the programme of its forthcoming meetings at Birmingham, "a very marked prominence is not given to the Romish controversy." He does not think that silent contempt is the right method to adopt in dealing with "the unblushing audacity, the distortion of history, the perversion of fact, the artfulness of insinuation, and the impudence of assumption" on the part of the Romish Church, which are more rampant than ever. Mr. Green would have every opportunity seized for warning men of the wiles of the deceiver. The worst of it is, that the danger to young Nonconformists does not come from the Romish Church direct, but from Anglicans, who entangle them in many snares. They begin to talk about "the Catholic Church" without apparently knowing that the Romanist denies the right of the Anglican to such a title, and the Anglican to the Romanist. With great swelling words they are beguiled and led astray.

According to the Roman correspondent of The Pall Mall Gazette, there are not less than three Popes, and not one, as the outside world imagines. The first is called the White Pope, who is titular head of the whole Church; the second is the Black Pope, who is chief of the Order of Jesuits; the third is the Red Pope, whose jurisdiction is over all the bishops of the world, and who is so called because he always wears the red robes of a cardinal. These supreme officials are supposed to act in complete unison, but frequently they are in conflict instead. A knowledge of these facts, so seldom made known to the public, throws a suggestive light on the alleged supremacy and infallibility of the titular Pope, and on the supposed "unity" of the Catholic Church. This "unity," like charity, "covers a multitude of sins."

For the third time the Oswestry Guardians have appointed Mrs. Price as relieving officer for their Union. Opinions will differ as to whether a woman may always be an advisable person in this capacity, but that a Christian person is needed for such work few will deny. Hard, unsympathetic men distributing the doles of the parish have given cause for the old phrase, "as cold as charity," and the word which in Christian England should have been the standard of warm Christian sympathy has degenerated into a synonym of all that is harsh and unfeeling. The lot of the aged poor might be made much more bearable if the funds of the ratepayers were dispersed by Christian hands.

Mr. Charles Booth is busy making inquiry for his next volume on the influences (chiefly religious) which are being brought to bear on the people of London for their general improvement. We hope that those who give information will emphasize the fact that however needful the better housing of the poor may be—and it is a crying need in some districts—this alone will not be of much service. External reforms do not form even the chief part of the true panacea for London's woes. We have frequently seen drunken idle people put into a neat cottage by charitable friends, and the cottage has very soon been transformed into a pigstye. The occupants need regeneration as well as the houses they occupy. Without the former the latter is but a short-lived blessing.

There is much need of greater preparation on the part of preachers for the public reading of the Scriptures. It is indisputable that many a lesson is made as futile as a soulless and mechanical method of reading it can cause it to be. The passages chosen should be carefully studied beforehand, and every shade of meaning have its corresponding emphasis and change of tone. The Bible is a very human book in the best sense, and it must be read in a human way. It is also a Divine book, and the preacher's reverence for the truth it reveals should be conspicuous in his manner to make its meaning clear, and give due force to that meaning—these are the essentials of good reading. When Ezra and his companions "read in the book of the law of God," we are told that it was done "distinctly," and that they caused the people "to understand the reading," and when Baruch read the words of Jeremiah in the ears of the people "they were afraid, and the conscience of the king was troubled." If this were always done by modern preachers we should hear of more conversions of sinners and more edification of the saints through the lesson of the day.

It was a saying of Professor Finney's that "to lead souls to Christ you must lead them away from themselves." And to lead them away from themselves you must not be always turning their eyes inward in self-introspection. Self-examination and self-knowledge are both necessary, but the old saying that "for one look at self there should be many looks at Christ" is a true one. "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God." If the soul is to believe, the word of faith must be preached, the object of faith must be lifted up. To lead souls to Christ you must let them see Christ.

The readiness of some preachers to attend to every study except theology, "the queen of the sciences," may be traced to the over-confident sayings of men who know nothing of theology at all that it is a dry and profitless thing, and that if a preacher would be interesting he must be acquainted with the newest book. The old soul-saving ministers aimed at an object a good deal higher than being interesting; they aimed at awakening the conscience and subduing the sinner to Christ; and for this end preachers must know and love their message, as well as fear and honour their Master.

"Old Age" is becoming quite popular in the press. This will appear very foolish to the pessimistic youth who at twenty-five thinks he has drained the cup of life's experiences, and who wants only determination to dash it to the earth. One has often thought that the portraits of our notable men show them to be much more haggard and worried at forty than at seventy or eighty. In mid-life the battle is sternest; after that comes well-won peace. The fact is, old age is noble or ignoble in proportion to the purity and goodness that preceded it. A man who has spent his days badly will say, as Byron did at thirty:—

> My days are in the yellow leaf,
> The flowers, the fruits of life are gone,
> The worm, the canker and the grief
> Are mine alone.

But he who has cherished an unselfish purpose and wrought with faith in God can, when his work is done, settle down with reposeful spirit in the eventide of his life. It is a very ancient contrast, these two verdicts on life. Solomon, from a palace, cries, "Vanity of vanities, all is vanity." Paul, in a dungeon, says, "I have fought the good fight; I have finished my course'

The Seven Miracles
In St. John's Gospel.

By GEO. F. TRENCH.

THE works of God in Nature are remarkable in the contrast presented by the order, the strict regularity of form, the proportion and symmetry of their construction in some departments of the physical creation, and the apparent absence of these qualities in others.

As illustrations of the latter, take the map of the heavenly bodies as seen on the sky at night and the map of the world, or any of the continents of it, on a schoolroom globe. No systematic arrangement can be discovered; the distribution of the stars in their constellations is without visible design, the outlines of the earth's surface without form or proportion.

But when we turn to the animal and vegetable creation this seeming confusion disappears, and harmony, proportion, and elegance of form come to view; not here and there, as it were, accidentally, but always and everywhere, in infinite variety and perfection. Whether it be the branch of the palm tree, the leaf of the fern, the ear of wheat, the scales of the fish, the plumage of the bird, or the wings and antennæ of the insect; everywhere and always Nature has been adorned by the hand of the Creator with all the glory and beauty of His divine art.

To those who habitually see in Nature one of the volumes of the book of Revelation, it will be a matter of no surprise to find in Scripture, which is another volume of the same book, a like display of this grace of form, and the elegance and harmony of arrangement.

Take the Psalms for example. There it will be seen that the exigencies of Truth, History, Prophecy, Benediction, Denunciation, are consistent with poetic forms of construction and the rhythm of repetition.

Psalm cxxxvi repeats at every one of its twenty-six stanzas the same exquisite refrain. The verses of each section of Psalm cxix. open with the alphabetical title at its head. Each successive verse of Psalm cxlv. begins with a letter of the Hebrew alphabet, all in their exact order, with one exception, due probably to error of transcription.

Careful examination of the structure of the Psalms discloses, besides the ordinary poetic arrangement, an interior order or balance of thoughts, by which, when discovered, much light is thrown upon many otherwise difficult passages, and the principal theme of each psalm is emphasised by its repetition. This may be fully studied in Dr. Bullinger's book, "A Key to the Psalms."

Once the principle is recognised as proper to Scripture, opportunity will not be wanting for its discovery in many unsuspected places, and not only in the poetic portions, but even in the historical and doctrinal books. Our present object concerns the structure of the Gospel of John in so far as regards the selection given therein of our Lord's miracles of blessing and mercy to men, of which there are seven. They are as follows:—

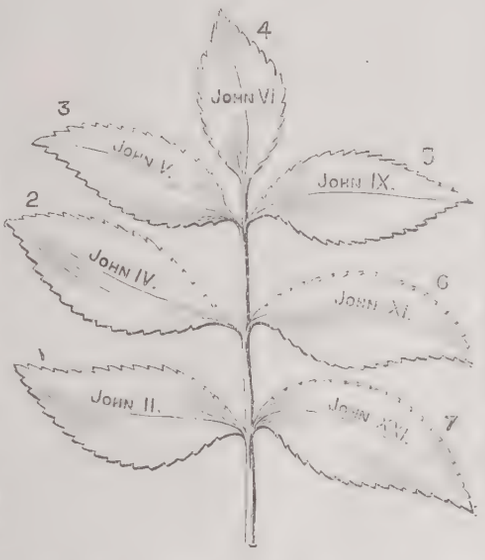
(1) The conversion of water into wine.—Chap. ii.
(2) The recovery of the nobleman's son.—Chap. iv.
(3) The healing of the impotent man.—Chap. v.
(4) The feeding of the multitude.—Chap. vi.
(5) The giving of sight to the blind man.—Chap. ix.
(6) The raising of Lazarus.—Chap. xi.
(7) The draught of 153 great fishes.—Chap. xxi.

It will be observed that the personal miracles of the Incarnation, the walking on the sea, and the Resurrection, are not included in the above, as belonging to another category.

The question now arises, How may these miracles be connected with one another; in what grouping may they best be studied so as to extract the Divine instruction of each in its relation to the others?

In ch. xx. 30, 31, we read—"And many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples which are not written in this book: but these are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name." That is, the Apostle does not profess to give a complete consecutive narration of the Lord's miracles, but has been inspired to make a selection of those recorded as being germane to his purpose here set forth. If there has thus been disclosed a Divine design in the selection of this particular group of "signs," it will become us to seek for the method or system that underlies that selection, and the reader will perceive, when the proper grouping is made, how rich a field of truth, and what otherwise undiscovered beauties, lie stored in these simple narratives of our Lord's gracious deeds.

If anyone in his country walk will pick at haphazard a leafy twig from half-a-dozen different kinds of trees, he will see how varied in their order are the arrangements of the leaves upon the stalk. Probably no two of them will be found exactly alike in this respect. For the purpose of this illustration, take an ash stalk or twig with seven leaves, and the arrangement will be found to be as shown below:—



The seven leaves on the stalk form three pairs with a central single top one. The first and seventh, the second and sixth, the third and fifth are the pairs; the fourth stands alone in the centre at the summit.

It will be seen at once that, if this is the Divine order selected for the miracle narratives of John, we shall not have to seek the connection between the first and the second, but between the first and the seventh; not between the second and third, but between the second and the sixth, and so on. If this is done, the parallelism will be found to be complete and beautiful, while, if a comparison which might at first sight appear more simple or natural is made, it will be a very forced or laboured process to show any symmetry or connection whatever.

Let us now proceed with the examination under the light of this parable from Nature, and see if the key fits the lock.

The first pair of miracles to be compared are those of chap. ii. and chap. xxi. The miraculous conversion of water into wine and the miraculous capture of fishes. Are there any points of contact here? Yes. What are they? Let us see.

(1) In both cases the company is gathered for a meal.

(2) In neither case was it a case of urgent demand or extreme need; in the one case there had been already a supply of wine, in the other the breakfast had been already prepared (xxi. 9).

(3) The supply when given is in both cases far and away beyond the need of the cases. In the one, six great waterpots of purification are filled with water by the Lord's command, to be turned into good wine. In the other, 153 great fishes are provided for twelve persons. That is, both exemplify the Kingly liberality of Him who giveth us richly all things to enjoy; the generous super-abundance of the gifts of God, whose promise is for the life that now is, as well as of that which is to come.

(4) Both miracles are wrought at the Lord's command by the hand of others.

(5) Both are followed by the declaration that the disciples discovered his glory. In the one (ii. 11) "He manifested forth his glory and the disciples believed in Him." In the other, "None of the disciples durst ask Him, "Who art Thou?" knowing that it was the Lord. "This is now the third time that Jesus showed Himself to his disciples after that He was risen from the dead."

I will not pause to enlarge on the doctrinal lessons to be learned from these comparisons, but point to the significance of the two miracles as illustrations of salvation. The first was a great conversion. Natural water is converted into supernatural wine. It is the great truth that man must be regenerated if he is to see the kingdom of God. Water of purification will do no good to him whose nature in its essence is corrupt. The change must be internal.

The second is a great capture. Out of the sea of this world's sin and selfishness souls must be captured for God. Not only converted, changed as to nature, but yielded up for possession by Christ. He spreads His fisher's net to catch men, to draw them in to God, to Himself and to Heaven. They are henceforth, even though regenerate, not their own. No longer free, but willing captives, and the treasured property of Christ. "For all thine are mine, and I am glorified in Thee."

(To be concluded.)

The Love of God.

Tune: 18, Bristol Tune Book.

COME heart of mine, and soul, and strength,
With all your energies combine,
Fitly to sing the breadth and length,
The depth and height of Love Divine!

Its breadth embraceth all the race,
Both Jew and Gentile, bond and free:
Where sin aboundeth, there doth grace
Much more abound, a boundless sea.

Its length! Ah, Lord, no reckoning made
Can show how far it doth extend;
Where can the measuring line be laid?
Where the beginning? Where the end?

So deep this love, so far beyond
All fathoming of puny men,
That souls in lowest depths are found,
And raised to life and light again.

And who can e'er declare the height
Of love that meets all human need
And which to thrones of heavenly light
The fallen sons of men doth lead?

Forgive me, Lord! No tongue can tell
Thy matchless love, so freely given;
In breadth and length unsearchable,
Deep as the grave, and high as heaven!

Commemoration.

"Let us keep the feast" (1 Cor. v. 8).

TO the Children of Israel the Feast of the Passover was pre-eminently THE Feast. The redemption of which it was the memorial was, in God's estimation and in theirs too, so great that it had changed even the order of time itself. From the mouth of the Lord Jehovah had come the words, "This month shall be unto you the beginning of months; it shall be the first month of the year unto you" (Ex. xii. 2).

But it was not as a memorial that it obtained its greatest significance. The true glory of the Passover Feast was found in the fact that it prefigured a surpassingly great Redemption—it manifestly was the type of the death of the Lord Jesus Christ.

There can be no possible doubt about the connection of the two things in the Divine mind and purpose, for the words are entirely conclusive: "Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us" (1 Cor. v. 7).

From a more cruel bondage than that of Egypt the Lord hath brought his people forth, the precious blood of the Lamb of God being the redemption price, and the redemption token. "Therefore let us keep the feast," urges the Apostle.

Other feasts had passed away, with the sacrifices and ceremonials which belonged to the dispensation of types and shadows, but of so surpassing an excellence was the fact of which the Passover was the type that it pleased the Lord to perpetuate the memory of it, and to give us, in the Lord's Supper, a memorial which should surely appeal to every redeemed heart "till He come." The sacred lips, so soon to pale in death, were those to assign to the symbol its true place in the estimation of the believer. "This do...in remembrance of Me."

Few words of Christ have been so pressed and tortured in order to bring out of them that which never was in them, as have the words which refer to this ordinance; and the undue prominence which has been given to the simple rite as a sacerdotal act, and one essential to salvation, has led many of us, perhaps, to say, and some to think, less of it than we otherwise should do.

But the grievous error which leads some to teach that the Lord's Supper is a mass, or a sacrifice, must not rob us of the due and rightful significance of an institution so solemnly appointed, and so calculated to awaken and deepen the most tender and spiritual feelings. Nor should we, in our eagerness to disallow the unscriptural claims made for the rite, yield one iota of its real importance and helpfulness.

The devout Israelite so esteemed the privilege of participation in the Passover feast that—in the case of those who were positively unable to avail themselves of it—special provision was made by the Lord's own appointment (Numbers ix.). Whereas, if through mere negligence or indifference the opportunity were let slip, the result would have been a cutting off from the privileges and communion of the congregation.

Can we truly say that the majority of Christians in our day are as unwilling to absent themselves from the Lord's Supper? Is not a very little thing too often permitted to interfere with the sacred engagement binding upon us to "show forth his death"?

We say not a word with regard to real and actual hindrances; but must it not be confessed that very unimportant "other engagements," the pressure of merely trivial duties, or even an attractive service elsewhere, is sometimes enough to account for empty places at the Lord's Table? Has it not been repeatedly found that young inquirers and non-professors are stumbled by these absences?

Briefly, is there no reason why we should remember ourselves, and pass on to others of those who love Christ the rallying word, "Let us keep the feast"?

Is our greater freedom a reason for disregarding the summons? Surely not. We are "made free" in order that we may serve, with the service of love instead of the constrain of fear. We are set at liberty in order that we may bind ourselves voluntarily to do the will of Him who loved us and gave Himself for us. "Therefore let us keep the feast"; and keep it in reverent and holy gladness, as the answer of our hearts to his own heart's love, ever seeking our blessedness, and seeking too to promote our communion with Himself. It is, indeed, the feast of love, the acknowledgment of what we owe to Him whose broken body and freely-shed blood are the only hope and only sustenance of our souls.

"Let us keep the feast," too, as the expression of the life's true bent and purpose, which must surely be a continual showing forth of the Lord's claim upon us. Let us keep it in lowliness of heart, remembering that it was our sins which were borne upon the tree; but also with assured and joyous confidence in that all-sufficient atonement which has, once for all, dealt with sin and put it away for ever.

Here, O my Lord, I see Thee face to face;
Here would I touch and handle things unseen;
Here grasp with firmer hand the eternal grace,
And all my helplessness upon Thee lean.

Here would I feed upon the bread of God;
Here drink with Thee the royal wine of heaven:
Here would I lay aside each heavy load;
Here taste afresh the calm of sin forgiven.

This is the hour of banquet and of song,
This is the heavenly table spread for me.
Here let me feast, and feasting, still prolong
The brief bright hour of fellowship with Thee.
(Bonar.)

LUCY A. BENNETT.

[Let it be emphatically added that in the Lord's Supper we show forth his death until He come; that we show forth to God and to the holy angels, to Satan, to demons and to men, that we live by OUR Lord's death, that we have life because we eat his flesh and drink his blood, not in a material but in a far more vital, even a spiritual sense. That as baptism is our testimony, that we are born again, so the Lord's Supper is our testimony that our new life is sustained by continually feeding upon Him by faith. If "High Congregationalism" means more than has been here expressed, will our brethren kindly make it clear? And will they define what is meant when they speak of sacramental grace?—ED.]

Popular Services in Yonkers.

THE pastor of the First Church, Yonkers, Rev. George F. Pentecost, D.D., coming from the Marylebone Church of London for that purpose, has his second service each Sabbath at four o'clock in the afternoon. He has recently spent the early evening hour passing through the main streets to discover the habits of the people, and finding such numbers out of doors and evidently not on their way to or from worship, he has conceived the plan of inaugurating a series of popular Sunday-night services in the largest and most central audience-room of the city—namely, Music Hall. These will begin on the evening of Sunday, October 3, and are expected to continue each Sunday evening until the close of the year. While none will be excluded from these popular gatherings, Dr. Pentecost does not expect the presence of regular churchgoers.

Dr. Pentecost is admirably equipped for the conduct of such a campaign, and is greatly strengthened in his purpose by the hearty approval and co-operation of his session and congregation.—N. Y. Evangelist.

Study of the Scripture.

BY D. L. MOODY.

I THINK the time has come when the Christian Church should be thoroughly aroused to the lamentable neglect of the study of the Word of God among its members, and to its great importance. As I go from church to church all over this great country, I am brought everywhere in contact with those who are reckoned, indeed, in the membership of some church; but they have no assurance of salvation, have never known what it is to lead a soul to Christ, would find it impossible to lead in prayer, and are content to live day after day surrounded by the unsaved without bringing to them the knowledge of the only Saviour. I am simply appalled by the great waste of life-energy in the Church of Christ—by the number of those who must waken some day from their spiritual lethargy to find that all opportunity for service for the Master is gone for ever, and they themselves, if saved, yet so as by fire.

I am meeting, too, with earnest souls who would gladly be up and doing in the Master's service, but feel that through neglect of the Word of God and lack of training they are sadly unfitted for effective work. My soul is often deeply stirred by coming across the many workers toiling in their own strength, weary and discouraged over the lack of result. How gladly would I be the means of bringing to them the message and living experience of our Saviour's words: "Tarry... until ye be endued with power from on high." "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you and" (note the order) "ye shall be witnesses unto Me." Oh, that all might know the ease and joy of service when "the sword of the Spirit which is the Word of God" is wielded in the hand of the Holy Spirit.

We need trained workers on all lines of Christian usefulness, those who have been brought face to face with eternal verities, who have had the living experience of salvation, sanctification, and the infilling of the Holy Spirit, and have become wise to win souls. To meet this need, I believe, there ought to be centres where many might come aside for contact with and regular instruction from those who have had long experience in dealing with souls and the upbuilding of Christian character. Such a centre exists in Northfield, Mass., where a few years ago a training school for Christian women was opened. The course extends over a part of two years. Already numbers have come to us, and are now doing effective service all over the world. While Bible study and methods of work hold the place of pre-eminent importance in the school, certain other branches are taught if desired.—Boston Congregationalist.

Pastor Stearns at Mildmay.

ON Sunday evening, September 19, Pastor D. M. Stearns, of Germantown, Philadelphia, preached in the Conference Hall, and on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday evenings, and on the afternoons of Thursday and Friday in Room No. 6, gave missionary talks and Bible readings on the Book of the Revelation. He related some of his experiences in his late visits to the missionary fields of Ceylon, India, China, and Japan; these were refreshing and encouraging, and calculated to stimulate interest and co-operation in the great work of Foreign Missions.

The Bible readings were intensely helpful and admonitory, evidencing a devout and profound acquaintance with this wonderful portion of Scripture, which it is to be feared has been sadly neglected by many Christians. All the meetings were times of spiritual encouragement and profit.

"Truth Before Everything."

WHY is it, how is it, that over some spirits comes, long before they are called into active service and conflict, a feeling of restlessness and a sense of hope and fear concerning the future? They seem to be moved by a moral impulse toward an unknown fate, which they would fain embrace, but from which they shrink, like birds of passage which "know their appointed time" for departing from one land to another, and, fluttering to be gone, yet remain a few days longer in the old home. Was it a spirit of prophecy or an uncomprehended sense of duty to be done that caused Mrs. Josephine E. Butler, who wrote the Life of her father, John Grey, of Dilston, in 1869, to consecrate the last pages of that book to the subject of purity of character? John Grey was a country gentleman whose days were spent far from cities, who was honoured by men of the highest standing, and loved and revered by humble neighbours in quiet villages, and who chiefly saw depravity and crime as they came before him as a magistrate. Yet Mrs. Butler's heart urged her, before she finished her memoir, "to say a word in regard to the purity of his character." She felt bound, as one who had been nurtured in a truly Christian home by a noble, upright, magnanimous father and a wise, tender mother, "to testify to the existence in our English homes, not among women only, but among men also, of purity of heart, of innocency of life, of constancy in love." Not one man alone was in her mind, but of one only was she free to speak. And "such was the gentle purity of his nature, that when anyone alluded in his presence to any particular example of the vileness of the times, or of fashionable vice or villainy, the pained and puzzled expression of his face would cause the speaker to hesitate, to cease, for it was evident that some allusions were not even understood by him, and that the approach to such subjects was painful only." When a daughter can thus write of her father, it is not surprising that she should retain an unshaken faith in the purity of some men, and that she should be as ready to champion the cause of men as of women, that in ethics she should know nothing of sex.

Mrs. Butler believed, as all but hopelessly bad men do believe, that there are pure men and pure women, and thus it was easy to believe that all men and all women could be and ought to be pure. Without such a faith underlying all her work and character, as the bed-rock upholds a fortress or a cathedral, she could have done nothing in the great cause which has consumed her days.

But that home of her girlhood, first under the shadow of the Cheviots, and next among the pleasant woods of Dilston near the Tyne, was also a place where the doctrines of grace were held fast, in a simple, humble faith, and where the effects of grace were manifest in kindness, gentleness, peaceableness, love, and unswerving justice. It fell to Mr. Grey's lot often to have to act as mediator, arbitrator, and judge, and as this was done with the fearlessness of love, it was necessarily done with absolute justice. A keen, almost painful, sense of justice has always marked the spirit of his daughter. Love of fair-play is a passion with her. Hence the firmness with which she meets and resists all oppression of the poor and down-trodden.

The atmosphere of her home was fitted to create and foster truthfulness of thought, and word, and act. which is justice within and without. Parents and children were interested in all sorts and conditions of men, and the worth of all was appreciated. Kind words were the language of the home, but flattering words, the subtle praises which intoxicate pride and pervert conscience, were not heard; compliments did not abound, though there was no lack of appreciation. The way in which one of the servants described Mrs. Grey's death expressed much of the character of her late mistress, and also of the family: "It was just like the mistress: she made not a bit of fuss about dying." Neither has it been the way of her daughter, Mrs. Butler, to make a fuss. To do her work, to do it justly, to be fair to the worst of people, to stand up for the most abject, to make no trouble except on a question of righteousness, and then to be ready to go on agitating until the wrong is removed and the right is done, to avoid all shows and mere popular "demonstrations," these things have distinguished her through all the years—now twenty-eight years this month of September—that she has stood before the British people.

If it was a high privilege to know a pure father, it was an even greater privilege to have a pure husband, and not only pure, but also tender, firm, self-sacrificing, ready to honour the work to which his wife felt herself called. Such a husband Josephine Grey found in George Butler. The number of husbands who would allow their wives to bring a fallen, friendless girl into their house, to be nursed until she died, who would go and speak to her and read to her, who would be the Good Samaritan and the Good Shepherd, is, we fear, not very great. He was one of the few.

It is in serving people that we get to know them and sympathise with them; their wrongs become ours; and we finally identify ourselves with them. Fallen girls are frequently the most wronged of our population; treachery, lust, cowardice, pride, selfishness, hardness of heart, having combined for their overthrow. But that they should be set aside in their misery and poverty by a legal enactment for a life of shame is the last and greatest wrong they can suffer; and this wrong was inflicted in 1864 by the British Parliament, and again in 1869 by a stronger measure. Our Governments have sometimes wrought wickedness of a very black hue, but none ever wrought folly and shame like this, to make the life of an "unfortunate" a recognised legal trade, and herself a chattel, a thing for the use of libertines. Such a deed, when its nature was known, could not but wound the soul of anyone who cared for the outcast as Mrs. Butler did.

Now came to a crisis that faith in purity, that keen love of justice, that hatred of oppression, that pity for the sinful and sinning, which God had been cherishing in her heart since her girlhood's days. Appeals were made to her to act on behalf of this class now, but, like some others who have been called, she "fled from the face of the Lord." She worked hard at other things, hoping God would accept this service and excuse her from the other. In an old manuscript book she wrote: "September, 1869.—'Now is your hour, and the power of darkness.' O Christ, if thy spirit fainted in that hour, how can mine sustain it? It is now many weeks since I knew that Parliament had sanctioned this great wickedness, and I have not yet put on my armour, nor am I yet ready. Nothing so wears me out, body and soul, as anger, fruitless anger; and this thing fills me with such an anger, and even hatred, that I fear to face it. The thought of this atrocity kills charity and hinders my prayers. But there is surely a way of being angry without sin. I pray Thee, O God, to give me a deep, well-governed, and lifelong hatred of all such tyranny, injustice, and cruelty; and, at the same time, give me that divine compassion which is willing to live and suffer long for love to souls, or to fling itself into the breach and die at once....This is perhaps, after all, the very work, the very mission, I longed for years ago, and saw coming afar off, like a bright star. But seen near, as it approaches, it is so dreadful, so difficult, so disgusting, that I tremble to look at it; and it is hard to see and know whether or not God is indeed calling me concerning it. If doubt were gone, and I felt sure He means me to rise in revolt or rebellion (for that it must be) against men, even against our rulers, then I would do it with zeal, however repulsive to others may seem the task."

The call had come; but what would her husband think and say? She could not act alone, as she had thought and prayed and suffered alone. When she told him he might well be pale and silent for some days. Then they could speak freely, and he said, "Go! and the Lord be with you."

The fire of Mrs. Butler's wrath has never died down; and what smoke of human passion hung above its bright, consuming flame has long since been dispersed. Her hatred of injustice, her pity and love for women, have borne her into and safely through scenes of danger; she has faced officials, high and low, who had the dreadful work of administering the horrible system of regulating vice; elections have felt her presence; and again and again her evidence has been taken by Parliamentary Commissions and Committees. Her pen and tongue have pleaded incessantly for justice. While rescue and preventive work has had much of her attention, it has been the legal and constitutional aspect of the social question which has had her chief thought. She has made herself thoroughly familiar with the schemes, deceits, and subterfuges, of regulationists in every land. Nevertheless, her name has not become a synonym for "a political woman"; the pure motive, high aim, and Christian spirit of her crusade have made that impossible.

Two years ago it seemed as if Mrs Butler's great life-work, so far as England and India were concerned, was finished; but the present Government, encouraged by the promise of support by Lady Henry Somerset, has undone the toil of years. Mrs. Butler writes: "My own countrywomen have been the first in the world to set their seal to the infernal doctrine of the necessity of vice, and to proffer to our Imperial Government, before the whole world, what Lady Frederick Cavendish rightly calls their 'counsels of despair.'" But she does not despair for the principles that have guided her public and private life from the first. Wounded with a sense of shame, recognising the sad fact that womanhood is no longer solidaire, but is literally cut in two, on this vital question, she returns to the conflict with the inspiring battle-cry, "Truth before Everything." No compromise, no waiting for backsliders to return, no silence as to the action of some misguided friends, but "Truth before Everything."

Rothesay.—A well-attended conference has been held here in connection with the Faith Mission, extending over several days, on the spiritual life and the work of foreign missions.

The Dents in Bertie's Cot.

A TRUE INCIDENT FOR YOUNG MEN.

WHAT was the matter with Bertie H——? His mother wondered; his father wondered. The usually bright face was clouded over. The young fellow went about with a troubled look—had done so for many months. Ah! God the Holy Ghost was dealing with his heart in a wonderful way. He was suffering from a conviction of sin. Would that our hospitals were full of such patients!

For many years his invalid mother had prayed for him, and the answer was coming. One night at supper, when the plate, scarcely tasted, had been pushed away, she could bear it no longer, but quietly asked, "Is anything the matter with my boy?" and then again, "Is it about your soul, Bertie?" "Yes, mother, I have been sore troubled for many months and cannot get peace."

How lovingly she took him to the throne of grace, and pleaded with God to lead him from conviction to conversion.

Not long after that he set out for his usual Sunday afternoon Bible-class which he had attended regularly for a long time, little thinking what a memorable Sunday afternoon it was to be to him; for it was there he passed "from death unto life." He stepped from uncertainty into assurance—out of self into Christ. He went home a rejoicing child of God.

My God is reconciled,
His pardoning voice I hear;
He owns me for his child,
I can no longer fear.
With confidence I now draw nigh,
And Father, Abba Father, cry.

Perhaps he could not have explained how the change came about; but who can explain conversion? "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth: so is everyone that is born of the Spirit" (John iii. 8).

He only knew that the joy was in proportion to the long distress of soul under which he had laboured. But how often a glorious spring full of promise and beauty succeeds a long and bitter winter; and so it is in the Kingdom of Grace.

Bertie's bright face told everyone that his winter was over and gone, and that the spring flowers had appeared upon the earth. Best of all, he early learned the sweet secret of keeping those flowers always in bloom, for Bertie laid hold on prayer and made it a power in his life.

He came home every day at twelve to his lunch, and his mother noticed how quiet he was in his room upstairs. One day she toiled up the stairs after he had gone, and pushed open the door of her boy's room. There, on the edge of the cot, were two dents where his elbows had rested, and she read his secret at once. The young man spent the middle of the day on his knees, pleading for grace to be kept from temptation. Like Daniel of old, he knelt three times a day; and always, after that day, the loving mother crept upstairs to look for the dents in Bertie's cot, knowing full well that he snatched those few moments from his dinner-hour to wait on God in prayer.

She measured her boy's spiritual life by those dents in his cot. She knew that as long as prayer was a power in his life so would he grow rapidly in grace. Now and again she missed the dents, and grieved in secret over it, but as a rule the little signs were there to comfort her anxious heart.

Are there any dents in your cot, young reader? Does some loving eye, on earth or in glory, mark them day by day? Do you know what it is to spend a certain time each day on your knees? Then you know the secret of a rejoicing Christian life. Make prayer the habit of your life. Let the "dents in your cot" be always there—figuratively or in reality.

Restraining prayer, we cease to fight,
Prayer makes the Christian's armour bright;
And Satan trembles when he sees
The weakest saint upon his knees.

How to Reach the Prisoners.

SHE was a "shut-in" herself—shut in year after year by double hip disease to a bed of suffering. But unhappy? Oh, dear no; that I am sure of. Though I never saw her, I know her very well. Our introduction was through the medium of that American association called the "Shut-In" Society, which by means of the Post Office brings the well and active to the bedside of the invalid, and conveys back again such lessons in cheerful patience and trustful courage as help us who are in the world not to become of it.

Naturally, I began our correspondence by offering sympathy for the wearisomeness and monotony of her life. I received in return a disclaimer so replete with bright cheeriness that I realised my sympathy had knocked at the wrong door. Her life wearisome and monotonous! Not at all. She is one of the busiest and most uniformly happy persons I know. She invents and makes exquisitely dainty decorations from the silky coating of the milkweed seeds and the downy thistle balls. The proceeds from the sale of these she devotes to defraying the cost of postage, cards, booklets, etc., for her crowning work of the year—the Christmas letters she sends annually to the criminals in the prison of the American State in which she lives. Besides the letters that she writes, she enlists friends and correspondents in the work, with this understanding—that each letter must be exclusively religious, and must contain neither the name nor address of the writer. When she finds among the letters contributed certain that she considers especially adapted to do good, she (friends perhaps aiding) makes several copies of them. Thus, steadily working throughout the year, by Christmas time she has hundreds of letters prepared, each one containing a pretty card or booklet; and then they are forwarded to the chaplain of the prison, who distributes them on Christmas morning among the inmates.

Who can say what it may mean to these other "shut-ins," hardened though they be, to receive from without on that day of days a personal message of the glad tidings of great joy, penned by a living hand from a loving heart? The chaplain testifies that there are prisoners who have carried their letters about with them, reading and re-reading them until the paper is worn through, and that he has found the whole scheme an assistance to his own work.

Is it not possible that, under proper surveillance, this sort of personal contact with the prisoners, at least at Christmas time, might be allowed in English prisons, even if visits and conversations are interdicted?

The Royal Naval Scripture Readers' Society reports twelve readers now at work. Considering the vast increase in the Navy, it is felt that the present number of readers is wholly inadequate. Those who are at work are highly appreciated, and have been of the utmost service to many of our gallant tars. The secretary is Col. M. H. Farquharson, 112, St. Martin's-lane, W.C.

To the Antipodes.

By Pastor GEORGE WAINWRIGHT.

BY the good hand of God upon us we have accomplished, without accident and without a single day's sea-sickness, our voyage of over twelve thousand miles. We have come through greatest extremes of climate; have had experience of severe storms—especially after leaving the Cape. Yet the voyage has been not only safe, but enjoyable and profitable.

Of the ship (the Tongariro) and of Captain Mayoss and his officers we have nothing but good to tell. The captain's kindness and attention we shall not soon forget. Among the passengers, too, we found several bright, devoted Christians, and experienced "the fellowship of kindred minds." Besides the Sunday morning service in the first saloon, we had children's meetings in the afternoon, and evening services in the second saloon. Rawei, the Maori evangelist, was invited by the captain to conduct service one Sunday night, and another day to lecture on New Zealand and the Maoris in the first saloon. Even if my daughter had not been with me, it would hardly have been possible to feel lonely.

Capetown we saw under unfavourable physical conditions. A warm welcome was given us at the Y.M.C.A. Mr. Watts, the acting secretary; Mr. Drake, a member of the Association, and once a scholar in my Stockton Sunday-school; and Rev. E. Baker, the Baptist minister, gave us a season of happy fellowship. We were delighted to hear of spiritual awakening in the churches, and of united open-air services in connection with the Y.M.C.A., which were making a decided impression upon the people of Capetown.

At Hobart we attended a memorable prayer meeting on Monday night, August 9, at the Baptist Chapel. I was supposed to lead the meeting, but such a meeting needed no leading. It was a thanksgiving meeting; and among the causes for gratitude special mention was made of the coming of their new pastor (Rev. James Blaikie, an all-alive spiritual man) and of the conversion of many young people. But before we could begin our thanks, a sister rose and mentioned the conversion of a young man in the hospital for whom prayer had been offered the previous week. Then the utterances of thanksgiving followed in quick succession one after another. When the hearts are full the prayer-meeting never "drags."

We found, too, that the missionary spirit lives among the Tasmanian Baptists. They have a society of their own and agents at work in parts of Bengal. They have a Missionary Prayer Union also, but do not pledge themselves to any definite amount for their missionaries' support, who consent to take only what the churches can raise.

It is too early yet to speak of Christian work in Sydney. Christian activity is taking many and varied forms. The movement for securing "life abundantly" among Christians was represented in an important convention at Petersham held last week. What could have been better than the topic for consideration, "Christ's claim—Master and Lord"? Summer schools, after the pattern of Mr. Moody's at Northfield, are soon to be introduced here by Mr. Sallmon, the new travelling secretary of the Australasian Student Union.

Young Emigrants for Canada.—From Euston last Thursday morning the fourth party of emigrants for the current year from Dr. Barnardo's homes started for Liverpool on their way to Canada. The party consisted of 101 boys and 106 girls, who have sailed in the Dominion Liner Labrador. Including these the trained children sent out from the homes to Canada and the colonies now number 9,394. Some of the older lads in this party will be placed out at the industrial farm in the North-west, where ten thousand acres are being developed under the auspices of the Homes.

Southampton. — The Soldiers' and Sailors' Institute is doing good work. It is much appreciated by those who use it, among whom have been widows and motherless children sent home from India. It was opened early this year and over 1700 beds have already been made up for soldiers and families and naval sailors. At Portsmouth all departments of work for the benefit of the Service are maintained. We accompanied the Portsmouth brigade on the Sussex manœuvres with Gospel tent and coffee-bar, and had a crowded tent and much encouragement.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, October 3.

"Be not afraid of them, neither be afraid of their words."—Ezek. ii. 6.

EZEKIEL'S lot was cast in difficult times. His people, to whom he was sent, whether by the Chebar in captivity or still lingering around their doomed mother-city, were as briers, thorns, and scorpions. Embittered with their many sorrows, convicted by conscience of their guilt before God, compelled to trace a close connection between their sins and their punishment, it was inevitable that they would turn with peculiar dislike on any one who dared, like Ezekiel, to be an incarnate conscience to them, reminding them of their evil ways, remonstrating, exhorting, pleading.

Many readers of these words are in similar circumstances. Missionaries who are obliged to rebuke, not only the sins of the ungodly, but the inconsistencies of their own converts; ministers at home on whom the burden rests of protesting against popular and fashionable iniquity, or addressing stern words of rebuke to influential but worldly members of their churches; even young clerks or working-men whose life is thrown among the godless and profane, and who seem called upon to lodge their solemn warning against words and ways that are not good. Providing these enter their protest lovingly and tenderly, with no thought of their superiority, with no mere desire to wound and annoy, but to warn the sinner and to uphold the claims of Christ—their mission is a very salutary and necessary one. But it is sure to bring on them a storm of dislike.

At such times there is nothing for us but to abide in the presence of our Master Christ, weeping for the sins we rebuke, interceding for those who revile. Not fearful nor afraid, not flinching from our duty, but hearing his sweet reassuring voice, saying, "In the world ye shall have tribulation, be of good cheer, I have overcome the world. Be not afraid."

MONDAY, October 4.

"Eat this roll, and go speak."—Ezek. iii. 1.

To each of us a hand is put forth, and therein is the roll of the Book. We must feed on it for ourselves. We must find God's words and eat them; they must be the joy and rejoicing of our hearts. It is specially incumbent on those who have to go forth and speak, to open their mouths and eat the roll.

Sometimes our message must be written within and without with lamentations, and mourning, and woe. It can hardly be otherwise, when we are called to speak to people who are of a hard forehead and a stiff heart. It is very sweet to receive God's messages, but it is bitter to have to deliver them when they proclaim, as they must, the inevitable and disastrous results of sin. Oh, that we might not shrink to declare the whole counsel of God, whether rebellious men will bear or forbear. Perhaps there has not been enough of this element in our preaching. All sunshine, the Arabs say, makes the desert. The harvest will fail unless the frost of winter has thoroughly broken up the clods. But whenever we dwell on the sterner aspects of God's truth it must be with bitter tears. "I tell you, even weeping," the Apostle said, "that they are enemies of the Cross of Christ."

They who will eat the roll and deliver its message are privileged to be lifted up by the Spirit (12), to behold the holy ministry of Heaven (13), to receive the sacred confidences of the Most High (22), to have the mouth opened by God Himself (27). Let all other books be covered by the dust of neglect, but eat the roll of Scripture.

TUESDAY, October 5.

"Then said I, Ah, Lord God!"—Ezek. iv. 14.

The prophet was bidden, in a series of striking and significant actions, to show the people the impending fate of their nation and city. Amongst other injunctions there was one so abhorrent to his soul that he craved its mitigation. "Ah, Lord God!" he said, "spare me from this." And God was entreated, and reduced the pressure of the burden proposed to be laid on his servant.

May not the counterpart of this happen in our own experience? We may be feeling that certain trials are insupportable, or certain demands beyond our power to meet. At such hours of bitter anguish it is quite permissible for us to go into the secret place of the Most High and gasp out our complaint, saying, "Ah, Lord God!" God likes us to speak freely with Him in this way, and sends gracious mitigations of our griefs. "Ah, Lord God," we say, "let this cup pass from me"; and, lo! an angel is sent to strengthen us. "Ah, Lord God," we cry, "this cross is too heavy, this thorn in the flesh too sharp, this diet too nauseous"; and immediately there is some response of greater grace or lightened burden.

Oh, suffering child of God, get alone with Him, and talk freely. Do not hesitate to tell Him all that is in thine heart. Perhaps the injunction that costs thee so much has been laid on thee for no other reason than to force thee to a degree of childlike familiarity and importunity, which had never otherwise been attained. It is a sublime moment when the human soul dares to plead its cause with God, saying, "Ah, Lord God!"

WEDNESDAY, October 6.

"I will do in thee that which I have not done, and whereunto I will not do any more the like, because of all thine abominations."—Ezek. v. 9.

It is an awful thing when those who have sinned against conspicuous privilege and opportunity come under the rod. Their punishment is infinitely heavier than that of such as have never known. The servant that knows his Lord's will, and does it not, is condemned to be beaten with many stripes. It was because Capernaum had been exalted to heaven that she was cast down to Hades. If an archangel falls, it must be to hell.

The child of God, like Israel, is set in the midst of the nations to testify to pure and undefiled religion; but if he rebels against God's judgments and statutes in doing wickedly, his chastisement is necessarily in proportion to the eminence of his former privileges. God cannot afford to deal lightly with the sin of his own people. Were He to do so, He might be accused of partiality, and they might presume. Well may the author of the "Imitation" say, "Esteem not thyself better than others, lest perhaps in the sight of God, who knoweth what is in man, thou be accounted worse than they."

It becomes us to search our hearts to see if we are rejecting any of God's judgments, and refusing to walk in his will, or defiling his sanctuary with detestable things. A small black spot on a white ground is more noticeable than a larger one on a dark ground. A slight inconsistency in his child may lead to very heavy chastisements on the part of the Father in heaven. The nearer a pupil reaches towards perfection the sterner is his master's discipline. God is taking great pains to make saints of us!

THURSDAY, October 7.

"They that escape of you shall remember Me among the nations whither they shall be carried captives, how that I have been broken with their whorish heart...and they shall loathe themselves."—Ezek. vi. 9.

We never realise what sin is till its passion is over, and we have time quietly to remember. Oh, the terror of those hours of remembrance and remorse. Sitting in the captivity of the prison, or serving in the heavy bondage of fetters, the soul has time to review the bitter path by which it has come to such a pass. And the most terrible element in remorse is the personal one: "Shall remember Me."

One of our great writers depicts a heartless, thoughtless husband standing beside the newly covered-in grave of his wife, and saying: "Ah, Milly, Milly; dost thou hear me? I was not tender enough to thee, but it is too late to alter it now." The wife who has broken away from her husband, bringing desolation on a once happy home, and heart-break on the one she really loved, will have her time of remorse when she remembers him, and how he was broken by her sin. And she will loathe herself. Similarly, as we review our past life, and see how we must have grieved the tender spirit of God, we fall at the feet of Jesus and cover them with tears and kisses.

What a marvellous word is this! "I have been broken." Our sin can give God the heart-break, because He loves us so. Indeed, on the cross the Lord died of a broken heart; of this the issuing stream of blood and water was the sign. What spectacle is more calculated to break hearts than this. Oh, heart of stone thou too must break, when thy Lord is broken by thy sin! And we loathe ourselves, lying in the dust before Him.

FRIDAY, October 8.

"Their silver and their gold...shall not satisfy their souls."—Ezek. vii. 19.

This chapter is full of alarms! An end: The end is come! (2). An evil, an only evil, behold it cometh. An end is come, the end is come (5, 6). The time is come, the day is near (7). Behold the day, behold it cometh, thy doom is gone forth (10). The time is come (12). At such a crisis, what can silver and gold do? Let not the buyer rejoice, nor the seller mourn. None shall return. The sword is without, pestilence and famine within.

Generally silver and gold stand for much among the children of men, they are the keys to the unlocking of the treasures of life. But when the supreme crises come; when all hands are feeble, and all knees weak as water; when the day of the wrath of the Lord breaks, there is no help in silver and gold, they cannot satisfy or save.

We forget that we are destined for immortality; and that God hath set Eternity in our hearts. How utterly impotent gold and silver, the things of earth, the abundance of goods which a man may store in his barn, to appease the conscience, or arrest the remorseless hunger of the soul for peace and purity and satisfaction. He is the happiest who is largely independent of these things, who lives a pilgrim life reckoning that his enduring city is with God, whose treasures are heavenly and incorruptible. Only when the universe is crashing to its doom, shall we learn to estimate aright the preciousness of those unsearchable riches with which Christ hath made us rich.

SATURDAY, October 9.

"Chambers of imagery."—Ezek. viii. 12.

What disclosures were these! In the entry to the Temple court stood the great idol, here described as an image of jealousy; because, speaking after the manner of men, it greatly provoked the Eternal Spouse of Israel! The seventy elders engaged in worshipping every form of creeping things and abominable beasts, portrayed on the walls of the secret chambers! The women weeping for Tammuz, whose yearly death and resurrection were celebrated with licentious orgies! The five-and-twenty men with their backs toward the Temple! Is it to be wondered at that God could not spare, nor have pity?

But are there no chambers of imagery in our natures, which were meant to be the sanctuary of the eternal? Is it quite certain that evil thoughts and imaginations have not imprinted themselves on the walls of the heart? Ah, it may be so. What seems fair and beautiful in the eye of man may be concealing terrible secrets, open only to that of God. In the secret of our hearts, we permit unclean birds to brood; in the darkness of our soul, wild thoughts wander at will. What need there is to adopt the venerable and touching words: "Cleanse the thoughts of our hearts by the inspiration of thy Holy Spirit, that we may perfectly love Thee."

There is deliverance from all this, by the grace and through the blood of the Lord Jesus. He can save and keep. He can so fill the soul with his presence that sin shall be utterly abhorrent. We may become so sensitive to the least approach of evil as to shelter ourselves in Him, before the first symptom of temptation shall have gained force and volume for its attack. Holy Spirit, keep thine own temple, we pray thee.

Amongst London Missions.

THE WORKING MEN'S MISSION.

WHILE many have to ask, Why do we see so few conversions? there are humble workers who, labouring amidst the most hopeless and reckless classes, have to rejoice in tokens of harvest. Their efforts are direct and purposeful; they seek to win sinners to the Saviour; and by God's grace they do win them. Evidence of this is forthcoming in the formation of a band of converted people saved from the depths of sin, and fervid in their desire to become the means of saving others. This lesson we have learned afresh in visiting a South London Mission, just as it is to be learned at many another centre—wherever Christ crucified is plainly set forth, there souls are to be found seeking salvation.

The headquarters of this Mission are situate in a back street running off the notorious New Cut, and in the heart of what Mr. Charles Booth, in his "Life and Labour of the People," declares to be one of the poorest and most densely crowded districts in London. Here some twenty-one years ago the Brothers Young, with the enthusiasm of young converts, began open-air services. These led to the opening of a little room, with empty boxes as improvised seats. By-and-by this was closed, and after a time of waiting on God a footing was gained in a warehouse in Collingwood-street, which has now been developed into a humble but commodious Mission Hall, of which, until his death, the late Mr. C. H. Spurgeon was president. The seven founders of this Mission — four brothers Young, the father (now seventy-nine), and two helpers—are still, it may be noted, active in Christian work. Situated as it is in a district where the struggling poor are herded together, and where sin and sorrow go hand in hand, the Mission is really a bright and burning light in

A DARK AND DESOLATE SPOT.

The open-air services are the most characteristic feature of the whole circle of operations. Summer and winter testimony is borne at the street corner. Good singing and straightforward words attract the people around, and large numbers are found willing to stand an hour listening quietly. The services in the hall are also well attended, and many, touched in the open air, come in seeking the way of life. A large and well-conducted Sunday-school, with 500 scholars, forms another hopeful feature of the work, and many of the young people give evidence of a real change of heart. A sewing-class has been the means of winning many girls from the terrible temptations of the streets, so forcibly illustrated in a paragraph which appeared in the newspapers recently on street ruffianism in the Blackfriars-road. Other useful agencies include mothers' meetings, Gospel temperance services, Bible-classes, Bands of Hope, and house-to-house visitation.

In the winter special work is carried on amongst the destitute poor, who here abound. The soup kitchen is open to the starving, who may obtain a large basin of soup and two slices of bread for one penny, or a small basin with one slice of bread for a halfpenny. Moreover, thoughtful provision is made for destitute children and the penniless poor. Last year over a hundred thousand shivering hungry mortals were thus fed. But all this involves cost, and demands sympathetic aid.

OUTLYING BRANCHES.

One of the best evidences of life is growth, and so this vigorous Mission has hived out into other poor districts. A mission hall has been opened in York-street, a crowded corner in the Walworth-road. Here, under the care of two voluntary workers, a good work is being done. The Gospel services, experience meetings, open-air testimony, and Gospel temperance effort have been vigorously maintained and followed—as the mission roll attests—by tokens of blessing.

A second branch of the Mission is in full operation in Decima-street, Bermondsey. Here the open-air services at Star Corner form an important feature. Crowds of the labouring classes are found each Lord's Day morning and evening ready to listen to the simple but earnest setting forth of the Gospel. Consequently the indoor services are well attended by the same class, and many who have been living far from God, knowing practically nothing of Him, have been led to rejoice in his salvation. The operations here include a good Sunday-school, vigorous Gospel temperance effort, largely in the open air, and other familiar mission agencies.

A SPECIAL GOSPEL EFFORT

is now in progress in connection with this Mission. Rev. J. Bennett Anderson, "the singing evangelist," has been holding a series of Gospel meetings at each of the three branches. The tent services in Bermondsey New-road attracted crowds of the poorest classes. The Gospel appeared to be in great power, and some ninety men and women professed acceptance of Christ. One very remarkable feature of these meetings is the number of persons attending under the influence of strong drink who were completely sobered, and we have reason to believe converted by the Spirit of God on the same night. These services are being continued by the helpers, and each night some souls are found seeking salvation. Meanwhile the evangelist himself is at Collingwood-street, where he will conclude his last four weeks' services on Friday, October 1. His opening services on Sunday, September 19, were crowded. Some seventy of Mr. Fegan's boys were present to help in the singing. Large outdoor meetings were held, and thus many careless passers-by were induced to enter the hall. A very hopeful children's service was held in the afternoon, when Mr. Anderson proved himself very happy in addressing the young folk. These services have gone on during the past week, and, so far as man may judge, many, both young and old, have been led to decision for Christ. Doubtless, in days to come, the results will be manifested yet more clearly in the addition of many zealous workers to the earnest bands now labouring in the New Cut, Walworth-road, and Bermondsey.

One regrets to find that this Mission, which God is so evidently using, is hampered considerably by lack of funds. The superintendents are the brothers T. and J. Young, 33, Nelson-square, Blackfriars-road, S.E., who will be glad to communicate with any willing to aid the work.

Cheshunt College. — The new session at Cheshunt College was inaugurated on Thursday by an address by Dr. Robertson Nicoll on, "The Idea of the Church from the Nonconformist Standpoint." The speaker pointed out that while Nonconformists have been accustomed to lay great stress on the invisible Church, which consists of true believers, they must not too much neglect the idea of the visible Church. Speaking as a Nonconformist he asserted his belief in the unity of the Church, and that its ultimate goal was both internal and external unity. The miserable taunt that there were two hundred sects in Britain had been exploded; speaking broadly, there were, in fact, but three, viz., (1) Congregationalists and Baptists, which might be counted as one; (2) Presbyterians; and (3) the various Methodist bodies. These last, he thought, would soon unite; the Congregationalists and Baptists would surely not always keep apart on that one question; and Presbyterians had strong affinities with both, and with the Methodists.

THE LATE

Mr. J. Barnabas Bain.

NOT quite a year ago we reported the death of one who had for many years been known to our readers as a devoted Gospel preacher and worker for the public good. Not yet is the beloved labourer forgotten, and we now give a few biographical details from a little book, In Memory of John Barnabas Bain, by James Gunn. (Paper 6d., cloth 1s. From the Author, 29, Arkles-road, Liverpool.)

A native of Stirling, in Scotland, Mr. Bain was born in 1848. When very young he lost his parents, and was brought up by a pious grandmother. After leaving school, he went to Glasgow, where he was apprenticed to the trade of boiler-making, and entered upon life with much promise. Before this time he had been exercised regarding eternal things, but it was not until now that he was convicted of sin and assured of Christ's willingness to save him. This change was wrought in him while standing at a street corner in Glasgow listening to an address by the late Richard Weaver. Shortly afterwards he surrendered himself to the service of God, and entered upon the enjoyment of true liberty in Christ Jesus.

Thus, early in his teens, was the young man led into the ways of wisdom and peace. Endowed with courage, and equipped with Bible knowledge and an experience of grace, he at once began to speak for Christ. His efforts in the open air and slum kitchens led to opportunities to preach in various centres; and, though taunted and scoffed at in the workshop, young Bain had the joy of knowing that God was owning his endeavours.

At the age of twenty-three, after much prayer, and in spite of business inducements, Mr. Bain resolved to relinquish his trade and devote his life to mission work. His first field was at Carlisle, where he was associated with the late Mr. Carr, an earnest Christian, with whom he had much in common. After a period of hard and successful work his health became impaired, and on medical advice he made a trip up the Mediterranean. One result of this journey was a feeling of pity for benighted Spain, where Gospel effort was by no means commensurate with the greatness of opportunity. He made up his mind to serve Christ in the Peninsula. It was with reluctance that Mr. Carr and other friends in Cumberland released him from his home sphere, but at length he entered upon pioneer work in the south of Spain, making Huelva his headquarters.

Having acquired the language, Mr. Bain launched out into work, circulating the Scriptures and preaching the Gospel. Religious toleration is a very nominal thing in Spain to-day; it was still less worthy the name twenty-five years ago. More than once Mr. Bain was thrown into prison for selling the Scriptures, and on many occasions for no greater offence he was stoned, "knifed," and shot at by Romish devotees. After a time the Rio Tinto Mining Company decided to open primary schools in their populous villages, and Mr. Bain was appointed to superintend them. He started this work with two children, but within a few years large premises were provided to meet the needs of over 700 boys and girls who sought admission.

In 1873 Mr. Bain married Miss Isabella Wood, of Carlisle, who proved a true helpmeet, doing much to make the work in Spain a lasting success. In 1877 he was laid low with fever, and a return to England was prescribed as the one condition of recovery. Health having been restored by this means, Mr. Bain returned to Spain, but only to say farewell to his many friends. It is gratifying to know that the work at Rio Tinto has developed greatly during recent years. There is now a church and minister, with five schools well officered, also five missionary teachers, one native preacher, and many voluntary workers.

Having returned to England, Mr. Bain joined the staff of the Evangelisation Society, under whose auspices he laboured in various parts of England and Scotland. During 1879 and following years, he preached with stirring effect in and around Aberdeen, in the island of Stornoway, and elsewhere in the North; coming down to England, he laboured with marked success in the Midlands and in Southern counties. At length, in 1888, he accepted the post of superintendent of the Liverpool Town Mission, with which he was connected until the day of his death. The post was one of great responsibility; but, combining good organising ability with true missionary devotion, Mr. Bain was undoubtedly the right man for the place and the hour.

(From photograph by Mr. W. H. Glassey, 139, Hall Lane, Liverpool.)

The hour found the Mission in a condition that cannot be described as flourishing. A forward movement was at once resolved on, and the resolution was prayerfully pursued, and in due course largely realised. When Mr. Bain entered office the active strength of the Mission staff was twenty-three men, by whom excellent work was being done. During the eight years of his direction nine missionaries were added, two of them ladies. The mission halls used increased from fourteen to twenty-six. Moreover, districts were rearranged, outside areas included, and other important measures adopted for the consolidation of the work, and bringing the population more generally and definitely under the sound and power of the Gospel of Christ.

The varied operations of the Mission went forward with much encouragement, and the means required for their support came in with increased regularity. Among Mr. Bain's many efforts for the good of Liverpool must be mentioned his investigations on moral and social questions, which did much to help on measures for the suppression of vice and dealing with evil men and traps of sin.

In the midst of his earnest endeavours, in 1894, Mr. Bain's health gave way, and a second trip up the Mediterranean was recommended. Again recovering strength, he resumed active work on the same Evangelical and aggressive lines, eager as ever to promote the temporal welfare as well as the spiritual enlightenment of the working classes of Liverpool. One of the many schemes of his later years aimed at the stopping of Sunday shopping, which is a notorious evil among the lower classes of the city. The gigantic character of the evil may be judged from the fact that a census taken in 1894 showed that 3741 shops were open for business on a Sunday between the hours of ten and one o'clock.

At the beginning of last year it was evident that Mr. Bain's health was altogether undermined, and rest and change were sought in the West of England, in Scotland, and elsewhere. At length, it was clear to him that his days on earth were numbered, and he waited the time of the Father of spirits. In a moment of pain he prayed, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly," and the answer came. That was on November 18th last. Thus, at the age of forty eight, "the labourer's task was o'er.; The devout men who carried him to his burial prayed that God would raise up many more of the same spirit and those who knew the much-loved and lamented worker—like Barnabas of old, "a son of consolation"—and realise the pressing needs of our great towns and cities, cannot but pray the same. Simple-minded, earnest, and loving witnesses for Christ, and workers for his cause, are a blessing wherever found. The Lord increase their number!

The Bishop of Sierra Leone, speaking at Norwich last week, gave an account of his experiences with the Ashantee and Benin expeditions, declaring that, toilsome as these were, he had encountered "many more discomforts in his ordinary missionary travels than he did when marching with the British troops to Kumassie." He gave a pitiful account of the waste of human life, and the way in which thousands of slaves were murdered. These things were going on every day in Africa. In spite of all this, the Gospel is making headway in the Dark Continent—only many more missionaries are needed.

Red Hill Farm School.—It must have been pleasing and encouraging to supporters of this philanthropic institution to see their 300 protégés enjoying on Thursday the harvest home. The lads sent there by magistrates, from all parts of the country, range from twelve to nineteen years of age. They are taught agricultural and domestic work, and after the period of service are drafted off, mostly to Canada. They are taught trades also, and not unfrequently enter upon useful occupations in their native land. The material is rough, but half a century's record of useful work has gained public confidence. The gymnasium was the great arena for display. There a picked lot of these once outcasts, now lithe and strong, did many feats. At the prize-giving for success in competition, physical and mental, Sir Trevor Lawrence, M.P., who presided, noted with gratification that the jubilee year had been a record, or almost a record, of merit in the school's history. Lady Henry Somerset, before handing over the awards, said she was delighted to think the boys had had a happy day, and she hoped they had many more happy days before them.

The Struggle after Humility.—If we watch against pride; if we struggle and watch against it; if we are pained at its inward workings—then that which we feel to be only a struggle after humility, God accounts humility true and deep. He accepts us in his dear Son; He accepts our offerings also; and the sighs of the contrite He calls incense.—Robert C. Chapman.

A Hospital at Cesarea.

THERE have been numbers of sermons preached on the example set by the Good Samaritan, and on the results of his deeds for the unfortunate one who needed his aid; there have been many homilies, too, on the conduct of the Priest and Levite, and hints as to the need of missionary work to be done for them; but how often has anything been said about the necessity of seeking to save those robbers who did so much damage? Would not an agency that sought to bring good to the robbers as well as to their victims be carrying out the supreme idea of Christianity?

Medical missionary work in Turkey has exactly this aim in view. "Policing the road from Jerusalem to Jericho," under the care of six European Priests and Levites, has not yet proved a success. Will it not be a more radical and permanent, though a slower, method of dealing with the question to bring the hearts of enemies together, and remove their enmity by the manifestation of the love of Christ to both?

After the massacre of two years ago, in one corner of the dispensary at Cesarea lay a Circassian, a Mohammedan Hodja, a leader of the mob in the attack of that dreadful day. He had been and required an operation under anæsthesia. His next neighbour in the dispensary was a young Armenian, a victim of the massacre, who had escaped death almost by a miracle, for he had six fractures of the skull from sword slash and bayonet thrust. It was an opportunity to answer and silence the muttered curses of Armenian friends, who said, "Would that the Circassian might never wake from the chloroform"; and as well to prove to the fanatical Moslem that his suspicion of my poisoning him by means of my medicine was utterly ungrounded, and that it was so because I was a Christian.

It is at Cesarea, in the heart of Asia Minor, that this medical missionary work has been established, and an effort is there being made to render one small section of the "Jericho Road" safer by this method. It is with the purpose of increasing the effectiveness of this agency that the means are sought for developing the dispensary into a hospital. The lack of hospital facilities for surgical work is one of the serious obstacles to be contended with in treating a large number of patients. Amputating the leg of an old woman in a mud hovel, the patient lying on a mud floor, with no light but what comes through the door, and not a single trained assistant, male or female, to assist in the anæsthesia or in the operation, is surgery that has proved successful, but cannot be depended on to prove successful every time.

During the past year we treated 7800 patients. Those who came in need of beg the privilege of spreading their beds in unoccupied corners of the dispensary, so that operations may be done and they may remain with me until healed. During the four years since the dispensary was built, shelter had been given to over four hundred such patients.

For the establishment of a hospital in this needy region funds amounting to £800 have already been supplied by friends in America, towards the outfit and furnishing, and the running expenses for two years. In addition to this, over £200 have been given toward a building fund; £1200 more is needed for building. This will provide also for an enlargement of the dispensary, which is too small for the numbers who come to be treated. Temporary relief work for Armenians has largely ceased. Our interest should be turned now to the permanen means of ameliorating their condition, of bringing about better relations between all classes of the population, of uplifting, physically and morally, Turks, Greeks, and Armenians. The missionary hospital stands unrivalled as an agency for reaching all kinds of people. Who will help to establish this agency in Cesarea of Cappadocia?

WILLIAM S. DODD, M.D.

Cesarea, Asia Minor, Turkey,
viâ Constantinople.

The medical work at Cesarea is a part of the work carried on by the American Board, and the proposal to establish a hospital there has the hearty approval and endorsement of that Society. One of the secretaries of the Board, Rev. Dr. Creegan, writes: "Dr. Dodd has been for the last twelve years a faithful and successful medical missionary under our Board, stationed at Cesarea, Turkey. He is making an effort to establish a much-needed hospital, and it is the desire of the Board that he may be successful in raising funds for this purpose. Friends of the Armenians, and others to whom Dr. Dodd is giving the benefit of his medical skill in Central Turkey, cannot contribute to a more worthy object, or one more needed at the present time." Dr. Judson Smith, of Boston, writes: "Had Dr. Dodd a suitable equipment in hospital and dispensary, he might easily double the service rendered, and proportionally enhance the value of the missionary work in that line."

Dundee Christian Conference.

THE annual gatherings of this Convention took place last week. In spite of somewhat unfavourable weather they were largely attended and much enjoyed. The general subject of conference was the classic passage in Titus ii. 11-14, "The grace of God bringing salvation," etc.

Lord KINNAIRD presided on Tuesday. In the course of an introductory address he dwelt on the importance of the subject, and urged his hearers not to attend the meetings in a spirit of conventionality and custom. As they had met to confer on the greatest need of the world, let them seek to realise its value for themselves and for others.

The first Convention address was given by Rev. GEORGE WILSON, Edinburgh, who took as his theme, "Salvation by the Grace of God." Grace is a word which had been baptized by Christianity as equivalent to the mind of God towards fallen humanity. Nothing is more easy than to caricature the grace of God. He is a righteous Father. There is a hemisphere of difference between the love of compassion and the love of complacency. The one is for the world, but the other is for his own. The age that ignores sin will soon become flabby in its moral fibre. God is righteous, and if we detract from his righteousness we destroy his love. This grace has appeared in Jesus Christ, and the result is salvation. We can dictate to our hands, our feet, and even to our minds, but we cannot dictate to our hearts. Salvation changes the heart, and makes it hate sin as the most loathsome thing in the universe.

Rev. D. F. MCKENZIE spoke on "Grace as Made Known to all Men." This does not mean that it is made known in nature. Some imagine that amid the lovely sights and sounds of the outer world they can "rise from nature to nature's God." Not so. The romanticism of modern religiosity is not fellowship with heaven. The words "God is love" are not to be spelled in nature's hieroglyphics. Nor can Providence tell us fully of grace. In the history of God's dealings with the world, the record is of Nemesis following sin, rather than of grace. In the life and death of Jesus, grace is seen cutting out for itself a channel flowing to the world. This is adapted to the needs of all, and with the eye-salve of the Holy Ghost the soul is able to appropriate the blessings thus provided. The hour when there flashes into the soul the illuminating power of the Holy Ghost is also the hour when grace is best seen and felt.

In the afternoon a conversational meeting took place on "The Training of the Young" in the family, the Sunday-school, and the Christian Endeavour Society. Prof. PEARSON, of Minneapolis, gave an interesting account of recent methods of training the young in America. Rev. D. F. MCKENZIE addressed the audience on the "Christian Endeavour Movement." Since the inception of the movement sixteen years ago there has been a steady increase, till it now encircles the globe, and has three million adherents.

On Wednesday, Rev. THOMAS CREBAR, Leith, spoke on "Living soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world." These are three aspects or relations of life. "Soberly" touches life as it affects the Christian himself; "righteously" refers to the Christian in his dealing with his neighbours; and "godly" bears on our relations to God.

In the afternoon a conversation took place on "How to keep the young from excessive amusements and win them for Christ." Rev. W. Y. FULLERTON, of Leicester, contended that it is the duty of Christians, but not as a church, to see that lawful amusements are provided.

The Conference was concluded on Thursday. In the forenoon Rev. D. M. MCINTYRE (Glasgow) spoke on Christ's purpose in giving Himself for us to redeem us from all iniquity. Jesus never referred to his own sufferings except under the influence of strong emotion. The holy mystery of his atoning sacrifice pressed even on his own heart. He gave Himself that He might redeem and that He might purify his church. The word "redeem" has its roots in the Old Testament Scriptures, and we can trace it back along three broad lines of teaching. But in each of them there is the suggestion of a price paid down. The ransom is the precious blood. "Purify" is an altar term. It also suggests blood. It is the ceremonial act whereby the appointed priest brings the polluted sinner back to fellowship with God. There ought to be something commensurate with the death of Christ in the life which his death has won for us. The shadow of the cross rests on all our life.

Rev. A. J. DONALD, Merton, spoke on the attitude of the redeemed as looking for the glorious appearing of the Lord Jesus.

In the afternoon missionary addresses were delivered by Rev. A. G. MACALPINE, South Africa, and Rev. J. A. MACLEAN, India. These dealt chiefly with the work carried on in their respective fields. Each evening of the Conference evangelistic addresses were delivered to large and deeply interested audiences.

Workers for India.—The Zenana Bible and Medical Mission send us particulars of their annual valedictory meeting, when the returning and new missionaries of the society receive a public farewell. This meeting is to be held at Exeter Lower Hall at 3 p.m. on Tuesday, October 5, Lord Kinnaird in the chair. Rev. J. G. Train gives the valedictory address, and some of the ten outgoing ladies will address the meeting. It will be remembered that this Society started a famine fund last year, and has received upwards of £8,000 for famine relief, support of widows and orphans, etc.; but unfortunately the general funds are in a crippled condition, and the committee are specially appealing for contributions to meet the deficit so that none of the stations may have to be closed.

Eyes that Cannot See.

By Rev. JOSEPH WOODHOUSE.

"Eyes have they, but they see not."—Psa. cxv. 5.

I WISH the boys and girls who read this could pay a visit to the Museum of the London Missionary Society in the City. There you would see numbers of idols from almost every heathen country exactly like those spoken of in this psalm. They are shut up in glass cases. They have never moved an inch by themselves from where they were first placed, never heard a sound, nor spoken a word, nor lifted a finger, though they have feet, ears, lips, hands. Eyes have they, too, but they see not. They have never seen the happy groups of young people who have looked at them with wondering eyes over and over again—never.

Have you ever heard of girls and boys having eyes and seeing not? I have. Girls and boys just like you. "Oh, yes," you say, "I know children born blind." No, I don't mean that at all.

Some boys—and girls as well—of my acquaintance have their eyes wide open to fairy tales, to books of adventure and travel, wide open to cricket or tennis, wide open to the pet rabbit or kitten, to the new cricket bat or racquet. But they have never seen GOD yet.

Let me tell you. There are some very magnificent caves in Kentucky in America—mammoth caves. Great lakes are in the caves. Most curious creatures live in their waters. It is all dark there, yet these creatures seem to have eyes, very beautiful eyes, but they can't see. How is that? Because there is nothing behind the eyes to tell the creatures what they are looking at.

When you go to the seaside you look through the telescope at the huge steamers far out at sea. The telescope cannot see anything. You see through the telescope.

Well! It's the same with those creatures in the caves. Their eyes are like the telescope, but what is called the nerve—the thing that looks through the eye and tells the mind what the eye sees, is gone from everyone of them. How did it happen? Simply by not using it. They had good eyes once; but when they went into those dark caverns the little nerve had nothing to do, and so it withered and withered away; and the creatures became stone blind.

It is something like that with boys and girls. In every child's soul there is the nerve of faith—the nerve by which we see God, and if it has nothing to do it will wither away. You can see God by making use of that faith-nerve. It looks through your eyes. God is everywhere. Faith sees Him, hears Him, talks to Him, obeys Him. He paints the rose. His fingers pack the grain in the corn-ears. He perfumes the violet; gives the apple its round, red cheek, and the grape its dusky bloom.

Take care to use the nerve of faith. Open your eyes wide; let faith look through them and you will see God. And whenever you want to see Him very clearly open your New Testament and read this, "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father," and your faith will at once see God.

Oh, I should be so very sorry if your nerve of faith were to wither, and wither, and wither, till at last you could not see God anywhere. So, it must never be said of my young friends who read this, "Eyes have they but they see not." Never.

Personal.

Many thanks for the flowers.

A Little Girl's Victory.

Two little girls were playing together. The older one had a beautiful new doll in her arms, which she was tenderly caressing.

The younger crept up softly behind her and gave her a sharp slap upon her cheek.

A visitor, unseen and unheard, was sitting in the adjoining room and saw it all. She expected to see and hear another slap, a harder one, in retaliation. But no. The victim's face flushed and her eyes had a momentary flash of indignation. She rubbed her hurt cheek with one hand, while she held the doll closer with the other. Then, in a tone of gentle reproof, she said:

"Oh, Sallie, I didn't think you'd do that!"

Sallie looked ashamed, as well she might, but made no reply.

"Here, Sallie," continued the elder girl, "sit down here in sister's chair. I'll let you hold dolly awhile if you'll be very careful."

Sallie's face looked just then as if there were some "coals of fire" somewhere around, but she sat down with the doll on her lap, giving her sister a glance of real appreciation, although it was mingled with shame.

The hidden looker-on was deeply touched by the scene. It was unusual, she thought, to see a mere child show such calm dignity and forgiveness under persecution. Presently she called the child and questioned her.

"How can you be so patient with Sallie, my dear?"

"Oh," was the laughing answer, "I guess it's 'cause I love Sallie so much. You see Sallie's a dear girl," excusingly, "but she's got a quick temper, and —Sallie forgets herself sometimes. Mamma said if Sallie would do angry things to me and I should do angry things to her, we'd have a dreadful time, and I think we would. Mamma said I should learn to give the 'soft answer,' and I'm trying to."

The lady took her in her arms and kissed her.

"My little dear," she said, fondly and earnestly, "I think you have already learned the lesson."

A Big Blot.

ONE day, when Aunt Clara was out of the room, Charlie and Frank tipped over a bottle of ink which stood on her desk.

"Don't tell her!" whispered Charlie. "We'll shut the door and run away, and she'll never know who did it."

"Oh! we ought to tell her," urged Frank, "and say that we are sorry."

"No, don't tell; it's ever so much easier not to," whispered Charlie, and ran away.

"I'm going to tell her this very minute, before it gets any harder," said brave little Frank.

When he had found auntie and told her, she hastened to her room and wiped up the ink, and put some salts of lemon on the ugly spot that it had made on the carpet.

"I'm so glad that you told me at once," she said; "for if the ink had dried in, it would have ruined my carpet and desk. Now I don't think that it will show at all."

"It is just like God's forgiving us, isn't it, auntie?" said Frank, thoughtfully. "If we tell Him about our sins straight away, and say that we are sorry, and ask Him to forgive us, He does; and then our hearts are clean again."

Uncle Tom.

First Things First.—If God were to write the epitaph for the successful rich man of our day who has rejected Christ, it would be, "Thou fool." Man says, "I must attend to business first." God says, "Seek first the kingdom of God." I don't care what your business may be; it may be honourable, legitimate, and all that, and you think you must attend to it first. Bear in mind ttha God tells every man to seek his kingdom first.—D. L. Moody.

Solemnities of Judgment.—Soon these ears and eyes will be closed for ever against earthly sounds and sights; but they will open again for other entrants. The trumpet shall sound, and every ear shall hear it. "All that are in their graves shall hear the voice of the Son of Man, and shall come forth." Nor shall the world's destiny be pronounced by an invisible judge. He shall come as the lightning comes, and every eye shall see Him; they also who pierced Him. The voice of judgment will penetrate the ear that was deaf to the message of mercy. The outcast will have an ear to hear, but no word of hope will ever reach it; an eye to see, but no light will ever dawn to meet its straining.—Dr. William Arnot.

The Evangelical Alliance.

ANNUAL CONFERENCE AT CAMBRIDGE

THE fifty-first annual Conference of the Evangelical Alliance is being held at Cambridge this week. The proceedings were opened on Monday with a prayer meeting conducted by Dr. W. F. Moulton, who, referring to the past fifty years' history of the Alliance, said that in spite of the enmity, wars, disagreements, and estrangements which they saw around them, Christians were being drawn more closely together.

In the evening there was a conversazione, followed by a public meeting at the Guildhall, when Dr. Handley C. G. Moule presided, and gave an address of welcome on behalf of the Cambridge Committee. There were, he said, some things in connection with the Alliance which were eminently important to be held up before the whole of the Christian Church. It was impossible to be a convinced member of the Evangelical Alliance without taking a view of the great truth of the Church of Christ, and what it meant, which absolutely refused to be narrowed to any one kind of organisation or denomination. It was one of the deepest of all controversies in the past and in the present. What was the Church Catholic? Attempts had been made to narrow that definition to certain forms of organisation, which, when they attempted to square them with the indications of the Holy Scriptures, must inevitably, if they were honest, give way to definitions so impossible that even Rome itself had been forced to speak with a happy inconsistency of the possibility of union with the soul of the Church, though not with its body. At the same time the Alliance embodied the affirmation that it was not possible to do effectually the work of God in the world without definite belief. The Alliance had its basis, its temperate confession of Evangelical belief, which had been accepted ever since the Reformation by men of all Christian bodies.

Mr. John Paton acknowledged the welcome on behalf of the council. Mrs. Isabella Bird Bishop, who also responded to the welcome, recalled the days when her father, as rector of St. Thomas's Church, Birmingham, Mr. John Angell James, and Mr. Orlando Forrester, afterwards Lord Forrester, met together and discussed the formation of the Alliance. She had travelled for seven years and a-half in Asia, and visited 170 mission stations, and wherever she had met with missionaries she had found them imbued with the Evangelical Alliance spirit. Fräulein von Weling, of Thüringia, Germany, also spoke a few words in response, and thanked the Alliance in England for their interest in the land of Luther. Baron Nicolaij, speaking on behalf of Finland and Russia, testified to the good work of the Alliance there.

PERSECUTION OF CHRISTIANS IN TURKEY.

The secretary, Mr. A. J. Arnold, addressed the meeting on "Christian union applied to the defence of persecuted Christians in Turkey, Russia, etc." He pointed out that throughout its history the Alliance had been seeking to defend the persecuted and the oppressed, yet some said that the Alliance had not done enough. It had taken up the cause of the oppressed and those who were persecuted on grounds of religion in Turkey and Russia, and during the past forty years there had not been a year when there was not a cry from Asia Minor Christians for succour. Again and again the Alliance had used its influence. Its appeal had been heard even by the Sultan of Turkey. In regard to the terrible massacres that had taken place the Alliance had been helping in every possible way unobserved by the world, in seeking to ameliorate the condition of the Armenians and other Christians in Turkey. The first body to help the Armenians had been the Evangelical Alliance. They had informed the British Government, even before the Consuls, of what was going on, and the Government had been able to act upon their information. One point which the massacres had brought out was the heroism of some of the Armenian Christians, a number of whom had suffered death rather than deny Jesus Christ. With regard to Russia they had done their best to ameliorate the condition of the Stundists. They had made appeals to exalted personages, who had listened with interest to them, and it was hoped there were better times in store for the persecuted Christians in Russia.

"Friends" and the "Higher Criticism."

DEAR SIR,—I should be glad if you would kindly give me space to say that I and, I believe, many other "Friends" in Ireland cordially unite with the views expressed by Mr. Fielden Thorp in his letter recently published in your columns concerning the critical things put forward at the Scarborough Summer School. Our friends the Higher Critics give us to understand that it is "love of historic truth" which leads them to eviscerate and emasculate so many books of the Bible, and yet to ordinary minds it seems somewhat strange that they should give us so little historic evidence or external evidence (sometimes none at all) in support of their views, and should rely so largely upon the internal evidence contained in the books themselves. Some of us have not yet forgotten how some years ago learned literary critics, pursuing somewhat similar methods, came to the conclusion that the works of Shakespeare were produced by Lord Bacon, and not by William Shakespeare—a conclusion which has since been followed into oblivion by the theories of many Higher Critics of the Bible too numerous to mention.

I think it possible that many "Friends" might read with profit the article on page 16 of The Christian for September 2, entitled "Fallacious Critical Principles," in which the writer refers to three principles of the Higher Criticism which are equally untrustworthy: — 1. The psychological construction of history. 2. The literary arrangement of the Bible. 3. The evolution of religion. Also it might alter the sense of historic proportion and historic perspective in some of our minds were we to include love of recent historic truth with love of ancient historic truth. By doing this we should be able, for example, to satisfy ourselves that since about the year 1850 nearly 750 different critical theories have been put forward as to the date, composition, and authorship of the different books of the Bible, that more than 600 of these are practically dead and buried, and many of the others in the last stage of decrepitude and decay.

That veteran and admirable exponent of scientific principles, Prof. Virchow, of Berlin, many years since entered a vigorous protest against accepting hypotheses, however plausible, as proved principles or facts; and, considering the fate of the critical theories of Strauss, Bauer, Renan, and more recently of Kuenen and many others, those of average intelligence and knowledge may well pause before they accept as proved the plausible hypothesis or the dictum of the critical savant, however learned and positive he may be. Also they may well be inclined to doubt whether He who, on the authority of his well-beloved Son, the Incarnate Word, has "hid these things from the wise and prudent, and has revealed them unto babes," ever intended that the truths of his written revelation could only be decided and declared by the literary critic.

In conclusion, the words of the devout and Spirit-taught Thomas a' Kempis may contain a lesson for us all. "Be not captivated, my son, by the subtilty and elegance of human compositions, for 'the Kingdom of God is not in word but in power.' Read the Word not for the reputation of critical skill and controversial wisdom, but to learn how to mortify thy evil passions, a knowledge of infinitely more importance than the solution of all the abstruse questions that have perplexed men's minds and divided their opinions."—Yours sincerely,

C. G. Clark, M.D.

Holding up Christ.—While on a visit to an admirer of C. H. Spurgeon, a Christian gentleman admitted that he had never heard the great preacher, but promised to go on the following Sunday, in order to be able to judge for himself whether the praise which was so generally bestowed upon the preacher was deserved. Returning in due course from service at the Tabernacle, the gentleman was met by his host, with the eager question, "Well what do you think of him?" "Nothing." was the reply. Then, seeing a look of astonishment and sorrow on his friend's face, he said again, "No, nothing," and his eyes filling with tears of joy he added, "All I can think of is the dear preacher's Saviour." No greater eulogy could be passed upon any man's preaching.

Rev. J. McNeill in Huntly.

In a special sketch of Mr. McNeill's mission in Huntly, concluded last Sunday, which appears in the local Express of Saturday last, the writer says:—

Rev. John McNeill has been in the capital of Strathbogie for a fortnight, and he is not away yet. He has got a "grup" of the people; he is holding them tightly, and we are not sure but the folks, too, have got a good hold of him. One almost marvels at Mr. McNeill's capacity for work. Take last Sabbath as an example. In the morning he preached to a crowded congregation in the Free Church, and gave a searching and eloquent discourse on "Thomas, the Doubter." At 3 o'clock a remarkable gathering met to hear the preacher in Stewart's Hall. It was composed wholly of men—old and young, from town and from country—and although the meeting was called on very short notice, the building—and as readers know, it is not a small one—was nearly full to the door. It was almost half-past four ere this meeting—one that will not be readily forgotten—terminated, and Mr. McNeill was announced to preach in the Established Church at six o'clock. Whenever it became known that Mr. McNeill was to be in the "muckle kirk" it was believed that the gathering would be a "record" one. And so it was. Anticipating early comers, the doors were thrown open much sooner than is customary, but not too soon for the waiting crowds. Before the bells had begun to ring the people in there was a large congregation alike upstairs and down. Ere they had ceased pealing every pew was filled to crushing point, and seats were taken from the vestry and placed along the aisles. These were speedily taken possession of, and not a few had to be content with standing room. At five minutes to 6 o'clock streams of people were still trying to get into the church, and some who were in were trying to get out, seeing that it was impossible to get room of any kind. Thus, big as the church is, it was not large enough for all who wanted to hear the Gospel messenger last Sabbath evening, and many had to turn away disappointed.

Readers will remember—especially older readers—notable and memorable gatherings which have been held in the same building. There were the momentous days which followed on the Castle Park meetings—days in which there were "showers of blessing" and of which our fathers and mothers never wearied of talking. Later came the visits of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, and on more than one occasion they had vast audiences in the same church, but no preacher ever brought such a congregation together in the building as did Mr. McNeill last Sabbath evening. The work of the week previous had told. The "sough" of the Gospel had swept over the community. And in face of such a company of listeners, one could only take up the old cry and say, "We never saw it on this fashion."

If the crowd was great and unusual, the preacher had a powerful message with which to stir them. Those who heard the address—its subject was the night before the Passover in Egypt—may forget much, but they will not forgot it. The narrative as related in Exodus was worked out for present day needs with matchless incisiveness—not a single point was left untouched, no shaft was left unused in the messenger's quiver.

On Thursday evening the Free Church was well filled in every part, and while we would not be guilty of making or inviting comparison between one address and another, let it be said that it was as powerful, as unsparing, as far-reaching, and withal as tender an appeal to all classes of men and women as one need ever hope to have the privilege of listening to. To hear such an appeal carried with it a great, a sacred, responsibility. Perhaps those who most need to bear this in mind are just those who might be the first to think that they had got past the appeal stage, and that it was meant for some other person. "We never saw it on this fashion!" That was said long ago, and very likely people hereabout are saying the same thing to-day, and perhaps saying it not so politely either. Some critics would exact the utmost politeness from the preacher, but they forget to exercise some of it when they begin to find fault with the preacher. And perhaps just because it is true "we never saw it on this fashion" the messages which Mr. McNeill brings will do us all the more good. An evangelist entrusted with such a commission, and gifted with so much power and grace to execute it as this preacher has, is as much needed by the "unco guid" as by the "unco bad." And some day, may be, the former will be put to shame by many of the latter class. Mr. McNeill with all love exhorts and warns, entreats and invites the wanderer to return, but he has no less solemn a message for all who think they have turned. With God's measuring line he can in a couple of minutes compel the stoutest and most self-righteous heart to stand still and think. This is needed quite as much as is the bringing in of the lost ones to the fold. This is Mr. McNeill's work, and in the strength of the Almighty he is doing it fearlessly. May he be long spared for such service, and may he have many souls for his hire!

Friends' Foreign Missions.

At the beginning of the present reign organised efforts of the Society of Friends, beyond the British Isles and the North American continent, were confined to journeys in foreign parts undertaken in the service of truth, and to practical sympathy with such efforts as the Anti-Slavery movement. London Yearly Meeting in 1833 issued a minute earnestly recommending the benighted condition of the heathen to the Christian sympathy and frequent remembrance of all members; but this was qualified by the statement that "no way appears to open for the Society to adopt any specific measures in order to communicate to them the knowledge of the truths of the Gospel."

Another generation, however, saw the way opened through effort and prayer; and the Friends' Foreign Mission Association was organised in 1868, eight of the original members still surviving upon the present committee. The fortieth report, issued by the secretary, Mr. Watson Grace, from 15, Devonshire-street, Bishopsgate-street Without, E.C., presents a varied picture. Individual reports from some of the missionaries give evidence of much faithful service, perseveringly and hopefully maintained in the face of persecution and trial.

The outlook in Madagascar has been exceedingly dark at times. Last year anti-European disturbances, marked also by hostility to Christianity, were renewed. Chapels were burned and schools scattered. In many cases native pastors and teachers bore the brunt of this fierce outburst of heathenism. The quelling of the rebellion was succeeded by the abolition of slavery. Under the new regulation that the French language must be taught in all schools, missionaries are careful that the primary purpose of imparting religious truth is fulfilled. Governmental proclamations guaranteeing complete religious liberty of worship have been widely circulated; but the Jesuits have unscrupulously endeavoured to secure the adhesion of the people by active persecution and by representations that Romanism is a sure road to preferment and honour. It is cause of thankfulness that so many natives have faithfully withstood such methods. Mary E. Hinchliffe writes: "Not one of our eighteen churches (the Near District) have been left without some faithful witnesses to Christ. Not one whom I really knew to be a true child of God has apostatized. Among the secessionists were men of doubtful, if not immoral character, whose actions will tend rather to purify than to injure the Church." The present aspect of public affairs in Madagascar is regarded as affording a more hopeful prospect of missionary work.

In India all the Friends' missionaries are, like other Christian workers, engaged in efforts to mitigate the ravages of famine. They find that the supplementing of Governmental provision for bare necessities affords ample scope for the largest expression of Christian charity. When the report was issued, not less than 2000 persons were being sustained by the Friends' agency, of whom about 400 were native Christians and inquirers; and over 200 destitute children were being succoured in the temporary refuges at Sohagpur and Seoni Malwa. These missionaries have further co-operated with the municipality of Hoshangabad in providing work for some 900 persons, in improving the roadway between the Mission premises and the town. They have made grants to the district superintendent of police and the medical officer, for clothing for the inmates of the poor-houses and for specially deserving cases of destitution. Distress is making itself felt upon all departments of mission work. Care and right training of the increasing number of children, and of the offspring of native Christians who are taught with the others in the orphanages at Hoshangabad, is a work of growing responsibility; and there is urgent need for a young woman Friend to assist Katherine Dixon in the girls' orphanage. Industrial works appear to be now firmly established. Statistics afford conclusive evidence of development and increase in missionary operations at all the stations; but the workers do not deem it wise to encourage the profession of faith in Christ among those who are receiving famine relief.

Patient and continued sowing of spiritual seed has been prayerfully made in China; and an ever-widening circle of influence is being secured for the Gospel through the mission at Chung-King. Boys' and girls' schools, attendance at medical dispensaries, the Sunday-school, the number of visits paid to the people in their own homes, preaching to passers-by in the street chapel—all show that increasing work is going forward, and that the true foundation is being laid in these efforts for future success in the name of Jesus Christ. Work outside the city named has received a fresh stimulus in the establishment of a new station at She Hung Hsien, an important market town of several thousand inhabitants. The youngest of Friends missions is in Ceylon, where Joseph Malcolmson and family entered upon their labours last autumn, and are finding the openings for service around Matale many and varied.

The Company Who Try.

Yes, I love the little winner,
With the medal and the mark;
He has gained the prize he sought for,
He is joyous as a lark.
Everyone will haste to praise him,
He is on the honour list;
I've a tender thought, my darlings,
For the one who tried and missed.

One? Ah me! They count by thousands,
Those who have not gained the race,
Though they did their best and fairest,
Striving for the winner's pace.
Only few can reach the laurel,
Many see their chance flit by;
I've a tender thought, my darlings,
For the earnest band who try.

'Tis the trying that is noble,
If you're made of sterner stuff
Than the laggards who are daunted
When the bit of road is rough.
All will praise the happy winners,
But when they have hurried by,
I've a song to cheer, my darlings,
The great company who try.

A New Hebrew Bible.

FOR many years Dr. C. D. Ginsburg has been in the front rank of Hebrew scholarship; and for about forty years he has been employed in researches affecting the original text of the Old Testament. After prodigious labour, undertaken single-handed and pursued in many lands of the East and West, he has recently issued The Massoretico-Critical Hebrew Bible, also an Introduction, in which are described, in minute detail, all the phenomena met with in a study of MSS. or the printed text. The entire work has been brought out by the Trinitarian Bible Society, 25, New Oxford-street, E.C. (Bible, in one volume or two, 21s. Introduction, 18s.)

There have, of course, been many editions of the Hebrew Bible, but two have been the foundation of all the rest, viz., that of Soncino in 1488, and that of Venice in 1524-5; the former is the editio princeps of the entire Bible, the latter is that edition of Daniel Bomberg's Rabbinic Bible which was prepared by Jacob ben Chayim, and has been deservedly esteemed for its accuracy and beauty, not to mention its vast accumulation of textual material gathered from manuscripts and sources generally described as "traditional." Now, at length, another great edition is given to the world, embodying the results of long-continued toil, pursued with enthusiastic devotion and untiring energy. In the course of his work Dr. Ginsburg has had to collate numberless manuscripts, also several printed editions of the original, as well as ancient versions in various tongues; and this has involved the making of concordances and word-lists numerous beyond conception. His monumental work on the Massorah, volumes of which have been in course of publication during the past twenty years, preserves for posterity a vast amount of textual information. This Bible presents the most valuable of this information in concrete form, and shows it as applied to the settlement of the many questions relating to the text of the Old Testament Scriptures.

AS TO TEXT AND MARGINALIA.

Ordinary Hebrew Bibles follow, with more or less correctness, the Venice edition already mentioned. Dr. Ginsburg practically reproduces that text, in strict conformity with the Massorah, or marginal directory as to how letters, words, forms, and phrases are to be written. In the margin of his Bible he gives variations, whether they affect accent, point, letter, or word. The student who has confined himself to the common editions of the original will have little idea of the interesting character of some of the variants gathered in this edition. They include what are known as the Keri and Kethiv, readings from standard codices (long since perished) preserved in the Massorah, readings of the Eastern and Western Talmudic schools, the readings known as Sevirin, and those found in the great printed editions or indicated by the ancient versions. The modern divisions of chapter and verse are noted for the sake of convenience, but the text is arranged according to the old-time divisions of the Massorah and model manuscripts.

This Hebrew Bible will, therefore, be indispensable in college libraries, and should be consulted by all exact and thorough students of the Hebrew Scriptures. The Introduction, also, is a valuable work of reference as well as a volume to be carefully read for the information it gives regarding the formation of the Massoretic text and its history during the past thousand years. Not the least important part of the work is that which describes the rise and development of the Massorah. Here many will learn with interest the real part played by the Massorites in perpetuating the text.

SCRIBES, MASSORITES, ANNOTATORS.

Dr. Ginsburg writes: "The registration of anomalous forms began during the period of the Second Temple. The words of the text, especially of the Pentateuch, were now finally settled, and passed over from the Sopherim, or the redactors, to the safe keeping of the Massorites. Their province was to safeguard the text delivered to them, by 'building a hedge around it,' to protect it against alterations, or the adoption of any readings which still survived in MSS., or were exhibited in the ancient versions. For this reason they marked in the margin of every page in the codices every unique form, every peculiarity in the orthography, every variation in ordinary phraseologies, every deviation in dittographs, etc.

"A most important part of this stupendous corpus is the graphic system of accents and vowel signs, which the Massorites invented, and with which they have furnished every expression in the Hebrew Scriptures. With the vowel signs they most minutely fixed the pronunciation and meaning of each separate word in accordance with the tradition handed down to them from time immemorial, whilst with the accents they indicated the logical and syntactical relation of the words to one another and to the whole clause and verse....That the graphic signs are not coeval with the consonants is now generally admitted, though the precise date of their introduction cannot be ascertained. It is certain that they did not exist in the fifth century. This is attested by St. Jerome, both in his commentaries on the Hebrew Scriptures and in his numerous other writings...

"With the introduction of the graphic signs and their incorporation with the Massoretic apparatus, the work of the Massorites ceased—circa A.D. 700. From this guild of anonymous, patient, laborious, self-denying, and godly toilers at 'the hedge,' which was designed henceforth to 'enclose' and preserve the sacred consonantal text delivered into their keeping by their predecessors the Sopherim, the now pointed and accented text, with the stupendous corpus, passed over into the hands of another guild called the Nakdanim—the punctuators, or more properly the Massoretic annotators....The functions of the Nakdanim were not to create, but strictly to conserve the Massoretic labours." In a word, they procured authorised consonantal texts, and furnished them with the vowel points and accents and the various Massoretic annotations. They also wrote treatises and compiled manuals on the Massorah, the MSS. they left being venerated as standards of authority, and used and copied from generation to generation. Already the reader unacquainted with Hebrew studies has gathered that the Massorah is a body of tradition regarding the text of the Old Testament, and the Massoretic text is one constructed in conformity with the Massorah.

IMPORTANT FACTS AND INFERENCES.

In the chapter on the rise and development of the Massorah, Dr. Ginsburg exhibits the principles that actuated the several guilds through whose hands the Old Testament Scriptures passed. He shows, and this should not be surprising, that the Massorah is sometimes in error as to fact, sometimes conflicting through the influence of different schools and methods of procedure. The text as we have received it has generally been regarded as representing what is known as the Western or Ben Asher recension; but Dr. Ginsburg shows most clearly that the greater number of our MSS. and the early editions follow the Eastern or Ben Naphtali recension. In safeguarding the Divine Name of Jehovah, and dealing with impious expressions, the scribes relieved their own consciences, but at the same time adopted measures which promoted inevitable confusion and have been fruitful of misconceptions to this very day. For particulars on this head we refer our readers to the Introduction.

The passages of the Old Testament upon which light is thrown are innumerable, although in many cases the help affects the language rather than the sense. Opening at the Psalms, we note a few readings, some fully authenticated, others rather suggested than established: Ps. li. 8, "Satisfy me with (not 'make me to hear') joy and gladness"; lxviii. 17, "The Lord came from Sinai into the Holy Place"; lxxi. 3, "Be thou unto me a rock of habitation (or, a strong rock), a place of munitions" (not 'whereunto I may continually resort'); lxxvi. 6, "The horsemen (not 'chariot and horse') were cast into a dead sleep"; lxxxv. 8, "He shall speak peace unto his people, and to his saints, and to those that turn their heart toward Him" (not "Let them not turn again to folly" as in A.V.).

The material used in these great works is a decreasing quantity, for the hand of decay is upon Bible manuscripts as well as upon other writings. Those who know how little of reliable and precise information on the subject of the Hebrew text has so far been available, will rightly put a high estimate upon this great Bible. The Introduction is furnished with full indices, prepared by Dr. Bullinger, secretary of the Trinitarian Bible Society. These will enhance its value as a work of reference.

Revival in Belfast.

Many readers will be interested to hear of the time of spiritual awakening and revival we are passing through in the City of Belfast. In June last Mr. David Rea pitched a large circular tent in the Show Grounds in the centre of the city. The tent itself is quite an attraction, as nothing like it has been seen in connection with Gospel work in this country. It is beautifully seated in amphitheatre form, accommodating with comfort over 2000 people.

Though many thought it was far too large and the undertaking too great, they are now fully convinced that there has been no effort made yet better calculated to reach the masses. Since the first meeting, more than twelve weeks ago, the interest has been deepening and spreading throughout the city and has extended far out into country districts. Christians on all hands are being stirred up to prayer and speaking to their friends and relations of eternal things, and full of hope and large expectations for still greater blessing. It was truly a solemn sight to see on a recent Sunday about 2500 people packed inside, while hundreds had to turn away unable to get admission.

A very blessed feature of the work is the midday meetings from 1.30 to 2.30, specially held for the young women of the various warehouses and establishments in the neighbourhood to which hundreds come and listen attentively. These have been seasons of rich blessing, and so far as can be judged numbers have turned to the Lord.

The numbers on week nights have reached from 1000 to 1800 people, and many professing to have passed from death unto life. As the season for the canvas tent is drawing to a close, and the interest continues so great, Mr. Rea is contemplating having a portable tent of the same dimensions of corrugated iron, etc., to continue through the winter months. This tent will be available for Gospel work in other centres. Let all the Lord's people pray for much blessing and guidance on this special undertaking. "The Lord is at hand."

A Word to Parents.

The girl who has no form, the "awkward" girl, should have her thoughts drawn away from physical defects, which are generally immaturities. She may be judiciously praised for success in her studies, for helpfulness at home, for any strong point that she may possess. She may be taught to feel that she is "mother's right hand," and have a healthful pride awakened in qualities that have nothing to do with her physique. Secure in the love and approbation and admiration of her home friends, the daughter feels only natural proper care for what others may think of her. The awkward girl, knowing that she is prized at home, becomes unconsciously graceful through happiness and self-respect.

The nest is for brooding, the home is for loving, teaching, training. Most unfortunate is the child whose heart is starved at home. Seeking food among strangers, he may receive poison instead. The girl in whose heart nestles the thought, "Mother thinks I am pretty," has no further care about the matter. The girl whose father is also "admirer" will not surrender her heart for a few tender phrases.

Do parents forget how callow are the young hearts about them; how they shiver in a chill atmosphere till they are fain to find warmth at any cost? Ah, if only the love sure to be in the mother heart, the father heart, were told! Sometimes the "children," grown to manhood and womanhood, hear at second-hand the story of love. Said one to a middle-aged woman, whose aged father had lately died, "Your father has told me many a time how proud and happy he was when you, as a baby girl, used to put your arms around his neck and kiss him." The daughter was astonished. She remembered those caresses, and her childish impression at the time was that her father was bored by such gushing affection.—Boston Congregationalist.

Theatrical Employes.—On Thursday evening, Sept. 23, a meeting was held in the Mission Hall of the Congregational Church, Leicester-square. The young girls from the various theatres of the district were invited to tea by Mr. William Forbes. The tables were well filled, and addresses were given by Mr. Meard and Rev. William Harrison, the pastor of the church.

Puntso and Sigju.

SOME critical, not to say unkind, remarks have lately been made to the effect that Miss Annie R. Taylor, of the Tibetan Pioneer Mission, had herself performed the ceremony of marriage between her attendant Puntso and his wife Sigju. We have asked Miss Taylor to relate the facts connected with the marriage, and the following is her reply:—

According to request I herewith give the particulars of the marriage of Puntso and Sigju. They were engaged for some months previous to their marriage, and the ceremony was first gone through according to Tibetan custom. The Tibetans living in Yatong and down the valley came to the mission-house, bringing with them scarves of blessing. First the guests presented me with one, and then they each placed scarves around the necks of Puntso and Sigju, proclaiming them husband and wife. The Tibetan chief of Yatong also brought scarves, having previously given his sanction to the marriage. Most of the people also brought wedding presents.

In the evening of the same day, after the guests had gone, we assembled in the little sitting-room of our mission house, and after reading a chapter from the Bible on marriage, I explained to them the solemnity of Christian marrying, showing them that they were taking each other for life, and that they could not separate (as it is the Tibetan custom to do when they get tired or have a quarrel with each other, for the marriage tie is not binding for life with them). And then, kneeling as in prayer, Puntso promised to love and care for his wife until death parted them, and she likewise promised to love and obey him. Then in prayer to God, we asked his blessing as they in God's sight now took each other as husband and wife, much in the same way as I believe a man took a woman to be his wife according to Bible records.

As Puntso and his wife are both Tibetans, and Yatong is in Tibet, registration, which legalises marriage in our country, was out of the question; but the consent of the chief, and the public proclamation that they were husband and wife according to Tibetan custom, answer the same purpose.

Our Duty to the Heathen.

ON resuming his ministry at Union Chapel, Manchester, on Sunday morning, Dr. McLaren preached to a large congregation from the words, "I am debtor both to the Greeks and to the barbarians; both to the wise and to the unwise" (Rom. i. 14). Sunday being the day on which the Baptist Missionary Society made its annual appeal, the sermon had reference to foreign missionary work, and Dr. McLaren took occasion to touch upon the indebtedness of England to heathen lands in reference both to the benefits received from and the injuries inflicted upon them. He was speaking, he said, to many who earned their living, and to some who amassed their wealth, by trade with lands that needed the Gospel. It was from the people of these lands that we had won the Empire of which we were so fond of crowing, and won it, alas, too often by deeds that would not bear investigation in the light of Christian principles. Manchester! Its commerce, its prosperity! Did God put us where we are as a nation only in order that we might carry the gifts of our literature, great as that was; of our science, great as that was; of our law, blessed as that was; and of our manufactures, to those dependent lands? The best thing we could give was the thing that all could help to give—the Gospel of Christ.

Those subject races seemed destined to fade away by contact with European races, and if we thought of the nameless cruelties and the myriad woes that England's possession of its great colonial empire had had accompanying it, we might well feel that the harm in many aspects outweighed the good, and that it had been better that these men should have been left suckled in creeds outgrown and ignorant of our so-called civilisation than to receive from us the gifts they had received. He did not want to exaggerate, but if the facts of the case were taken, as brought out by people who had no Christian prejudices to serve, he thought they would acknowledge that the English people did owe a debt of reparation to those subject nations. What about killing African tribes by the thousand with that vile stuff called rum, which was sent to them in exchange for their poor commodities. What about introducing new diseases, the offsprings of vice, into the South Sea Islands, decimating and all but destroying the population?

They could almost hear the rattle of the guns on the North-West frontier of India. There they had another specimen of the injuries inflicted by England. That was not the place to talk politics; but he felt it was the place to ask this question: "Are Christian principles to have nothing to do with determining national action?" Was it Christian to impose our yoke upon unwilling tribes, who were as fond of their independence as the proudest Englishman, and had as good a right to it? Were punitive expeditions and Maxim guns to be the first instalment of our debt to these men? What, he wondered, would Christ say about these things? Let us do our best to influence national actions in accordance with that brotherhood which had been revealed by the Elder Brother of us all.

Evangelistic Notes.

DURING the past months Mr. T. M. CARLETON has been having very successful meetings in West Cork. At Clonakilty meetings, held nightly for seven weeks, were much owned of God in the spiritual quickening of the Lord's people and awakening the careless to seek Christ. The children's services were most interesting. At Palace Anne the people came together for six weeks in large crowds, which packed the hall, notwithstanding the busy harvest season and that they had to come long distances. Some young people walked twelve miles to be present. Whole families have shared in the blessing, and a Divine quickening is being felt over the entire neighbourhood.

A SERIES of Bible-readings and addresses have been given in Frogmore-street Baptist Chapel, Abergavenny, by Rev. A. T. JONES, of Newport, Mon., when much blessing attended. Each night there were anxious souls, and the attendance excellent.

A SERIES of evangelistic services has been completed in the mission hall of Claremont United Presbyterian Church, Glasgow.

A GOSPEL mission was brought to a close last week in the Christian Institute, Biggar.

MR. R. D. EDWARDS has closed a mission at Aberdeen, and begun one at Peterhead.

MR. HENRY COLLINS, of the Evangelisation Society, London, has concluded a series of mission services at Cox Green Mills, near Bolton. Numbers have professed conversion, and believers have been strengthened. The attendances were so large that the big mission-room was not always sufficient to supply accommodation to those who pressed to hear the evangelist. His stirring addresses were practical, telling, and effective. Many have found reason to thank the Lord for the blessing Mr. Collins has been instrumental in conveying to them. J. N.

New Periodicals.

THERE have appeared simultaneously two new monthlies, respectively representing the Church of England and the Free Churches. The Anglican (1s. 37, Norfolk-street, Strand) describes itself as "an illustrated Church review." The opening article by Dean Farrar on "Augustine and the Conversion of England" is very appreciative and impartial in tone, and of much general interest. In an article on "Paul and Justification" Rev. S. Baring Gould is very free in his critical handling of the apostolic argument, which he thinks an adaptation of Rabbinic teaching. The fine illustrations are a notable feature of The Anglican, and the large type is grateful to the eye.

The Free Churchman (1d. Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, E.C.) is edited by Rev. F. B. Meyer, and is of more varied interest. It also calls in the aid of illustration. All the articles are short and readable, the most lengthy being a story by Miss Wilkins. The intention of the promoters is to foster the spiritual rather than the ecclesiastical element in the associated churches, and they have our heartiest good wishes.

Letters to the Editor.

"OFFICIAL OUTRAGES."

SIR,—There is a story of a man accused of discreditable conduct, who, being told that there were three credible witnesses who saw him do the deed, cheerfully replied that he could easily be contradicted by a hundred persons who did not see it. I am reminded of this by the letter of Rev. H. E. Perkins in your issue of Sept. 2. Because the horrors described in The Bombay Guardian, and quoted in THE CHRISTIAN of August 19, did not come under his own observation he asks us at once to discredit the editor, and his informant, who is stated to be "a Christian Englishman holding a responsible position under Government." Mr. Perkins himself admits that there are sources from which "the melancholy demand (for women for the military cantonments) is no doubt supplied, and some Government officers have far more to do with it than is right." Perhaps he forgets that we know something of the celebrated circular issued on June 17, 1886, by Major-General Chapman, Quartermaster-General, at the direction of Lord Roberts, then Commander-in-Chief in India. Perhaps he thinks we have forgotten also the military circular issued on May 8, 1876, pointing out that there were not enough of these unfortunate women, and that the conditions under which they "ply their trade" should be improved. Can he think we have also forgotten the military circular of July 12, 1884, as to "the desirability, when constructing free quarters for the registered women, of providing houses that will meet the wishes of the women"?

Further, what is the use of telling us that "young innocent girls over fourteen years of age scarcely exist in India"? It is a mere play upon the word "girls." Mr. Perkins knows of the existence of the large numbers of child-widows in India. Some have and some have not lived with their husbands. Some of them are a burden to their families. And what difficulty is there in believing that with such orders from the highest quarters as I have quoted, some officers who "have far more to do with it than is right" should go to great lengths to make up the "sufficient number" which Lord Roberts and Major-General Chapman declared to be "necessary"?

Is Mr. Perkins aware that Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell gave evidence before Mr. Russell's Departmental Committee in 1893 that they had been informed by the agent concerned that she frequently received money from the cantonment magistrate, Colonel Plowden, for the purpose of getting women or girls? They quoted the procuress as saying: "He gave her five, ten, or twenty rupees as the case needed to get girls. For a very young attractive girl she was furnished with fifty rupees. There is always plenty money to get them with." This statement, with others, was sent out for the answer of the Indian Government, but there is no evidence to show that Colonel Plowden has ever thought it worth while to deny it. Why should he, when he is told by his official superiors that there must be a "sufficient number" of these women?

Mr. Perkins assumes that the girls were stolen. There is nothing in the original statement to indicate that. For anything that appears, the procurers, like the procuress above referred to, were well supplied with money. Why should the statement of "a Christian Englishman holding a responsible position," who knows of a grievous scandal being perpetrated, be contradicted by Mr. Perkins merely because he has not heard of it himself?—Yours truly,

HENRY J. WILSON.

Osgathorpe Hills, Sheffield, September 21.

[Out of consideration for our young readers, we have omitted some of the extracts cited by our correspondent from the official circulars referred to. We must now await the contradiction or confirmation of the original statement by those fully qualified to enlighten us.—ED.]

The Northfield Schools.—At East Northfield Mass., on Sept. 8, Mr. Moody greeted the boys of Mount Hermon School at chapel exercises in the morning, and preached a sermon on "Hope" to the Seminary girls in the Auditorium in the evening. The school opens with three hundred and twenty-five boys, the full limit. When Mr. Moody stepped on the platform to address the boys a hearty outburst of applause greeted him. Professor Cutler, the principal, said a few pleasant words, after which Mr. Moody spoke in his usual forceful manner on Repentance.

International S.S. Lessons.

October 10.

"Paul a Prisoner at Jerusalem."—Acts xxii. 17-30. Golden Text: "If any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed."—1 Peter iv. 16.

Paul is now in Jerusalem. Two purposes had brought him there. (1) To convince the Jews that he was doing a real work among the Gentiles. This could be seen by the large collection he brought for Jewish needs, and the Gentile converts who accompanied him. (2) To convert the Jews to Christianity. (The teacher should tell the story recorded in Acts xxi. 17—40 and xxii. 1—16, so as to explain the speech which this lesson breaks in upon.) The rabid Jews are listening with all their faculties to Paul's address, for who can tell but that these visions may mean a new revelation from God? They knew him of old as a persecutor of the Christians, and although report said he had been speaking against the Law of Moses as a dead letter, he may after all have a message from the Most High.

The Address on the Stairs.—At the point where our lesson begins Paul is telling his mob audience how he came to be an Apostle to the Gentiles. He is speaking in the Hebrew tongue, and is using every precaution to retain the hearing which he has won. After his conversion, Paul had gone into Arabia, where by communion with God he had learned what Gospel was his. Note that God has always prepared his workers for their task by taking them aside from the rush of life. Compare Moses, David, Elijah, John the Baptist, and Christ Himself—"When I was come again" (17). After the three years he could not start on his missionary work without consecrating himself in the temple of his fathers. He was so wrapt in thought that the body was incapable of movement (a trance). Jesus whom he had seen on the way to Damascus came to him and warned him that the Jews would not receive his testimony. Surely Jesus of Nazareth had seen enough of the prejudice, blindness, and hardness of the rulers at Jerusalem (18). Note that Paul was never so stupid as to forget that past experience should be used in the work of the present—he thought that even his past wrongdoing might open a door for him in the hearts of former Pharisaic compatriots which would be closed to any other apostle. He urges this before the Lord as a reason why he should begin his work at Jerusalem (19-20). Without denying the force of his argument the Lord bids him rise and go far hence to the new ground which must be broken up "unto the Gentiles" (21).

Emphasize The Courage of Paul in asking permission to speak to the mob from whose violence the soldiers had only just snatched his life. He was always on the alert to grasp every opportunity of glorifying his master. The Fury of the Mob: They were all attention until that hated word "Gentile" was uttered. Paul had evaded it very skilfully, but when he said that his visions and prayers had only led him to become a prophet of God to the "uncircumcised dogs" their anger knew no bounds. They would have stoned this vile betrayer if they only dared to do so, but there was a thin belt of Roman swords between them and the fulfilment of such cowardly purpose (compare 2 Samuel xvi. 13). The chief captain, Claudius Lysias (see Acts xxiii. 26), thought there must be some ground for the intense hatred of the prisoner. He determined to make Paul confess what crimes he had done by scourging him.

How Paul escaped from the scourging.—Thrice before Paul had been beaten by the Roman lictors. Five times had he received the nine and thirty strokes of the Jewish thongs, but this was a new form of agony. The bare body was to receive stripes inflicted with leather thongs weighted with jagged edge of bone or leads. Paul is an old man, and there is nothing to be gained for his Master by undergoing this torture. He asks the simple question, "Is it lawful for you to scourge a Roman who has not been tried?" No Roman could be punished without being condemned, and even then he could not be scourged. Lysias himself had gone to great expense to purchase citizenship, and he asks Paul once more dubiously whether he is a Roman (27, 28). But Paul's father had been a citizen of the empire, therefore Paul was a Roman born, so there could be no scourging. We are not to run heedlessly into danger or punishment. To do so at the call of duty is quite another matter, and Paul had proved before this that he was no coward when his Master bade him suffer.

Obituary.

MISS F. PATCHING, KERAK.

News has been received by the Church Missionary Society of the death of Miss Frances Patching, a trained medical and surgical nurse, a missionary of the C.M.S., at Kerak, in the ancient land of Moab. For three months a virulent type of typhoid fever had been raging in Kerak, about 70 per cent. of the cases being fatal, and it was from this that Miss Patching died on August 23. At the same station Dr. Johnson was, on last advices, dangerously ill.

MR. H. R. WILLIAMS, HIGHGATE.

One of the old school of workers has passed away in Mr. Williams, for many years a member of the Council of the Ragged School Union. He was one of the founders of the King Edward Mission, which has now attained a large and important place in Spitalfields, and retained his close personal interest and activity in the work right to the end. He died on Monday, at his residence, at the Priory, Highgate, at the age of seventy-five. He was for many years closely associated with the late Earl of Shaftesbury, and made the chief object of his lifetime the furthering of the work of Ragged Schools. He was the first chairman of the Hornsey School Board, and was for many years chairman of the Hornsey Local Board.

REV. THOMAS MARTIN.

One of the oldest missionaries of the Baptist Missionary Society has passed away in Mr. Martin, who forty-three years ago was designated for mission work in the well-known Bloomsbury Chapel, and from that date laboured in East Bengal until 1865, when he undertook tutorial work at the Baptist College, Serampore. He was noted for faithfulness in discharging his duties and for kindliness of disposition, the younger band of missionaries endearingly calling him "Father Martin." Special deputation work was afterwards entrusted to him by the committee of the Society, and at their request he visited Trinidad and Jamaica on important missions. Since his retirement from active missionary service, he resided in Northampton. His son is the pastor of Adelaide-place Church, Glasgow.

REV. W. TURNER, LATE OF CRAIGDAM.

Rev. William Turner, whose death occurred in Edinburgh on Tuesday week, had long ceased to be connected with the Aberdeenshire district, but his name recalls to many people reminiscences of a notable man and a strenuous ministry in the classic church of Craigdam. Mr. Turner was a native of Dunbar, and when twenty-six years of age, in 1851, after a very successful academic course, he was ordained to the pastorate of the United Presbyterian Church of Craigdam—the mother of the U.P. Churches in those parts. He was its fourth minister, and in his way was about as remarkable a personality as some others who have ministered there and in one way or another become familiar to the world in a kindly fame. He was in Craigdam for fully twenty years. He was a man of splendid presence. Gifted with a great voice, scorning to use a "paper," and, moreover, addicted to vigorous and incessant action in the pulpit, he enjoyed quite a notable celebrity in the district as a power in the pulpit. In 1867 he received a call to Charlotte-street U.P. Church, Aberdeen, and declined it; but a few years later he accepted the post of superintendent of a large and important mission in Edinburgh—retaining his status as a minister of the United Presbyterian Church—and had since laboured in toilsome duty for the betterment of the neglected in the Scottish capital. Mr. Turner was a writer of ability as well as a preacher and pastor.

MR. EDWARD MEACHAM, MANCHESTER.

Many will hear with regret of the death, at his residence, in Red Bank, of Mr. Edward Meacham, M.R.C.S. After many years' service in the poorest and most squalid districts of Manchester as a domestic visitor and a missionary, Mr. Meacham resolved to study medicine, with a view to augmenting his means of usefulness towards the poor. He became medical officer, and afterwards medical superintendent, of the Manchester Medical Dispensary. He was an ardent philanthropist, and, though by no means robust, his devotion and energy overcame many difficulties. Angel Meadow long had the benefit of his labours. Superintending ragged schools, teaching and preaching, striving to secure some attention to cleanliness and the laws of health, inculcating the lessons of thrift and the duty of temperance, he laboured in a self-sacrificing spirit in a vocation which made exceptional demands on the resources alike of mind and body. With few personal requirements, a very moderate income sufficed him, and he sought no publicity for his reward. The encouragement of a rescued lad, or a reformed drunkard, or a family restored to harmony, and a house rendered fit for healthful and decent habitation, supported him under frequent disappointments and inspired fresh hopes. He was widely recognised as a personal friend, an earnest and devout preacher, and as one who was equally ready and competent to minister to the needs of body and of mind. He was a zealous advocate of total abstinence from intoxicating liquors, having been an abstainer for thirty-seven years.

REV. ALEXANDER FORBES, DRUMBLADE.

The minister of the Free Church of Drumblade, Rev. A. Forbes, died at the manse there on Monday week. He had been seriously ill for some time, and his medical adviser latterly held out no hope of recovery. The deceased, says the Aberdeen Free Press, was born in 1821. He was educated at the Grammar School, Aberdeen, and passed to Marischal College and University. In 1843 Mr. Forbes, along with other divinity students, threw in his lot with the Free Church, and for the next two years he studied divinity under Dr. Chalmers at the New College in Edinburgh. For three years he moved about as a probationer, but in March, 1848, he was ordained minister of the Free Church congregation of Drumblade, succeeding Mr. Mackay, who had been called to Fordyce, and who is still alive, and who, it may be noted, is an uncle of the late Mackay of Uganda fame. It is also worthy of note that Drumblade had had a series of rather famous ministers. Among them may be mentioned Dr. Robert Brown, who was Moderator of the Free Church Assembly in 1846; Dr. Davidson, of Lady Glenorchy's Church, Edinburgh; and Dr. William Garden Blaikie, Moderator of the Free Church Assembly in 1892.

Perhaps the most remarkable events in Mr. Forbes's life took place in connection with the two great "revivals" which occurred round Huntly, Drumblade, and the adjoining parishes, but which were only part of a great revival movement in the country. The first of these revivals occurred in the years 1860 to 1864, the Huntly meetings being under the auspices of the late Duchess of Gordon. The second took place in 1874, when Messrs. Moody and Sankey were in Edinburgh. It is no breach of confidence now to say that the description of the revival movement given in the report on "Religion and Morals," presented to the Free Church Assembly in 1874, was written by Mr. Forbes, and referred to Drumblade. Mr. Forbes was a most earnest Evangelical preacher, warmly devoted to the spiritual interests of his congregation and all with whom he came in contact, ever taking a leading part in all religious movements in the district. There is scarcely a parish in Aberdeenshire in which Mr. Forbes had not preached. He was very greatly in request at Communion seasons and when any special services were being held. Though often weakly, he was seldom laid aside till recently, and even during his last illness he continued to manifest his usual deep interest in the welfare of his people. Mr. Forbes was 76 years of age, and had he survived till March next he would have celebrated with his congregation his jubilee at Drumblade.

Adoration of Relics in a Parish Church.—A correspondent of The Times writes to say that he recently attended an extraordinary service at the parish church of Folkestone, which was announced in public print as follows: "The Reliquary of St. Eanswythe will be exposed after evensong." He gives the following account of what he saw: Evensong concluded, and a collection having been taken, the relics were on view. They were exposed within the 'altar' rails, placed in a case 2 ft. or 3 ft. long, with glass sides, having a white pall over it, and surrounded with five lighted candles. The vicar of the church took his stand on one side of the relics (which, he avers, are the bones of St. Eanswythe, the patron saint of the church), the congregation going by in single file, very many of them bowing low to the earth before these mortal remains, unrebuked by their pastor." The correspondent challenges the vicar of St. Mary's to give actual incontrovertible proof that these are the bones of St. Eanswythe, and asks, in conclusion, whether this adoration of relics is a novelty in the Established Church, or if there is any other church where it is practised.

Temperance Jottings.

THE Liverpool Brewster Sessions resulted in the extinguishing of seventeen licences.

The National Temperance League is forming a London Young Men's Auxiliary to carry on work in all parts of the Metropolis.

The memorial in the form of a Rees-Raper Lectureship is being warmly taken up, the contributions already amounting to about £1300.

The London County Council report that the London ratepayers are paying annually over £130,000 for the support of drink-produced insanity.

At many Brewster Sessions the justices cautioned publicans against serving children under thirteen years of age. The liquor retailers, as represented in their organs, are up in arms against this step, and the warning is declared to be illegal.

The inspector's report shows that there are twelve licensed retreats for inebriates, accommodation being provided for 200 patients. The work is shown to be carried on under great disadvantages, inasmuch as patients may leave when they please, whether cured or not.

At the West Hartlepool Brewster Sessions on Monday, remarkable offers were made to induce the bench to grant new licences. One applicant offered £500 in relief of local rates or the surrender of another licence, and another offered £1000. Alderman Furness thought that this was an attempt to bribe the bench, and neither of the applications was granted. At Heywood, however, the magistrates granted a licence to an applicant on his promise of paying £100 as a quid pro quo. Surely this is not legal?

The liquor traffic has long formed a serious obstacle in the way of those who desire to raise the South African native. But a new and more terrible curse is descending upon the raw Kaffir in the shape of opium. In Johannesburg many Chinamen do a thriving business by supplying Kaffirs with the deadly drug prepared for smoking. Chinamen, however, are not the only or even the chief sinners in this respect. The nefarious traffic is carried on more or less openly by large numbers of Europeans, who keep dens where Kaffirs and coloured women pay sixpence for each smoke.

It is commonly said that excessive drinking has ceased among the "upper classes," and that in course of time it will die out among the "lower orders" also. In the opinion of the authorities of the Grove Retreat at Fallowfield, near Manchester, "there is painful reason to believe this statement to be fallacious." Immoderate drinking, though frightfully common among the industrial classes, it is to be feared "is yet more prevalent in the classes usually contrasted with them." The Fallowfield authorities have no hesitation in saying that drunkenness is on the increase among women of all classes—an opinion that is fully borne out by the evidence recently given before the Licensing Commission.

Requests for Prayer.

FOR a two-weeks' mission at Eastmeon, Hants, September 26 to October 10, by Mr. Stephen Bryant.

For much blessing on a mission, from October 3 to 17, at Croxley Gospel Hall, Rickmansworth, by B. H. Angel.

For blessing on a Gospel Mission at the Free Methodist Chapel, Marazion, Cornwall, conducted by G. W. Clegg.

For blessing on a mission at Christ Church, Lunesfield, Birmingham, by Rev. Dr. Morris, from October 3 to 19.

For an eight-days' mission, to be held in St. Andrew's, Edinburgh, by Rev. J. Worthington Atkin, from Oct. 3 to 10.

For blessing on Gospel services by Rev. A. Wooley, Cromer, during the coming winter, at Wisbech, King's Lynn, and other Norfolk towns and villages.

Northcote Willy's Bible Carriage Mission.—The report of last year's work shows that a wide field was covered. For sixteen years Mr. Willy has been labouring in various parts of the United Kingdom, preaching the Gospel and scattering sound literature. During the coming winter Mr. Willy will be free to conduct missions in chapels and halls. He may be addressed: 123, Victoria Road, Headingley, Leeds.

The Y.M.C.A.

MR. C. L. CLARKE has resigned the assistant secretaryship at Tunbridge Wells.

Mr. W. C. East, general secretary of the Shoreditch Association, has been appointed to a similar office in connection with the Y.M.C.A. at Bournemouth Meetings for the advancement of the spiritual life will be held in the Lecture Hall, Y.M.C.A., 172, Queen's-road, Bayswater, each Friday evening in October, 1897, from 8.30 to 9.30. They will be open to all.

The Adelaide Association has held special services, largely attended, in the Theatre Royal and the Bijou Theatre. The series completed ten years' consecutive Sunday evening Gospel services in the first-named theatre.

A very large gathering was held on Sunday afternoon last at the Sheffield Y.M.C.A., when Mr. A. J. Kemp, an active worker in the Association, bade farewell to the members on his entrance into Dr. Guinness's college for training for foreign mission work.

Mr. W. H. Sallmon, M.A., late general secretary of the Yale Association and a successful Y.M.C.A. officer of considerable experience, has recently arrived in Sydney to take up the work of travelling secretary for Australasia of the Students' Christian Union. Mr. Sallmon has done most valuable work in America as a Bible teacher.

A letter just to hand from Mr. John T. Swift, American secretary for Japan, states that the past year has witnessed the most remarkable progress of Association work in that land. Mr. Mott's tour, says Mr. Swift, "was one mighty demonstration of spiritual power. The Y.M.C.A. college work has quite tripled, and the work in Tokyo has come on to a stronger and more effective evangelistic basis than ever."

The Leicester Association continues to do an excellent work. It was one of the first Associations to respond to the appeal of the National Council for the holding of mass meetings for men on the subjects of gambling, intemperance, infidelity, etc., and arranged a large gathering for the 21st inst., enlisting for this the services of Revs. F. B. Meyer and J. K. Nuttall and Mr. J. Stuart Holden. The Bishop of the diocese has promised to take part in the annual public meeting on November 15.

On Thursday evening, September 23, a large number of young men met in the Barnsbury Hall in response to an invitation by Sir George Williams. The reception was announced to be held at the Priory, but the response was so hearty that it was felt that the rooms there would be inadequate to receive those who came. The meeting which followed the President's reception was of the character of a family gathering, in which several took part. An interesting and profitable evening was spent.

Several of the smaller Associations in South India are now engaged in the laudable undertaking of raising funds with a view to securing permanent local habitations. At Cottayam, where the Malayalam secretary makes his headquarters, about Rs. 450 have already been subscribed and the canvas is being pressed on with the view of raising Rs. 1000, or if possible, Rs. 1500. A similar effort is being made at Attoor and Nagercoil, in South Travancore and Dindigal, in the Madura district.

On September 26, Mr. Isaac Selby (of Melbourne) brought to a close an eight-days' Mission, in the form of an Anti-Infidel crusade, in Barnsbury Hall, Islington, under the auspices of the Islington and Highbury Association. Many testimonies were given at the closing and other meetings of the blessing received in the way of removing doubts and clearing difficult passages of Scripture, as well as strengthening the faith of God's people; other testimonies have been received orally and by letter, thanking God for the Mission.

Lichfield Soldiers' Home.

THERE are now over 2000 troops stationed in Whittington Barracks on the borders of Whittington Racecourse, and sometimes that number is increased. Nine years ago Lieutenant-Colonel Seton-Churchill conceived the idea of transforming the Grand Stand into a Soldiers' Home He accomplished this in the most satisfactory manner; the races were abolished, and the work of the home has so far increased that we require larger premises, especially now that we have secured the services of the missioner, Mr. Milton Brown, and his daughter, under whose ministrations we trust that a rich harvest of souls will be gathered in for Christ. We ask any who have experienced blessing to remember those who are still in need of salvation, and to send us all the help of which we are so much in need.

MARGARET L. ALLEN, Lady Supt.

The Close, Lichfield.

The Y.W.C.A., Cape Town.

THE president of this Association, who is now in England, writes:—The following words, descriptive of the foundation of the Capetown Y.W.C.A., are quoted from the local Presbyterian Church Magazine:—

"The history of the Institution is not so well known as it ought to be. More than a decade ago some earnest Christian ladies, feeling the need of a special work in the interest of young women who had either no home or few Christian privileges in such homes as they had, began to pray to God for a room in which a work might be begun in a small way. Suffice to say they soon experienced to the full the truth of God's grand old promise to give exceeding abundantly above what his people can ask or think, and the present building was presented as a gift by Mr. J. A. Bam, in memory of his daughters, Minnie and Maria, who died within a fortnight of each other of typhoid fever, while at school in Germany, thus proving again, if proof were needed, that the death of God's children is always gain to his kingdom."

The work of the Association has steadily progressed, and the need for enlargement and greater accommodation has been increasingly pressed upon the executive, insomuch that it was resolved to obtain plans for a new building on the present site, and to come before the public for the means to carry them out. The plan which has been approved will, it is estimated, require the sum of eight thousand pounds. A preliminary canvass has been made which resulted in £1100 being raised. At the eleventh annual meeting, held on August 11, under the presidency of Rev. Andrew Murray, an excellent report of the year's work was read, and the project of the new building discussed. Mr. Bam, the munificent donor of the present building, thereupon promises to give £1000 towards it, provided the needful amount were subscribed and the work commenced within a year from that date, Situate as Capetown is at "the gateway to the Dark Continent," with bi-weekly steamers continually landing numbers of young women upon our shores, the urgent need for a place and home where they can obtain temporary shelter and advice is more and more emphasised, As England sends so many of her daughters to the colony, we come to the Christian public of the home country and ask that our hands may be strengthened to build. The local secular Press has most strongly advocated the claims of the Association, and we feel that with Mr. Bam's further generous gift in view no effort should be spared to secure the accomplishment of our object. Communications may be sent, care of The Editor of THE CHRISTIAN, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. C. F. CLEGHORN.

Irish Notes.

REV. R. H. FAWCETT has been delivering a series of sermons and addresses in the south of Ireland in the interests of the Church of Ireland Jews' Society.

A well-attended convention for the deepening of spiritual life has been held in Kingstown. Professor MacIntosh, of Trinity College, Dublin, presided, and several well-known ministers took part in the proceedings.

Rev. C. D. Snell, who is at present in Dublin in connection with the Church Missionary Mission about to be held next month in that city, has been holding meetings for children in various centres with encouraging success.

Sunday Concerts and Sunday Labour.—The "Land Committee" at Plymouth has given its sanction for the performance of Sunday concerts for money payments in the Guildhall. A friendly letter pointing out objections has been sent to the manager by Mr. Charles Hill, secretary of the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association, which states that "such a proceeding will be distinctly illegal; the Legislature, both in a Select Committee and by a decisive vote on an attempt to alter the Lord's Day Act, has confirmed the law which protects the amusement industry against Sunday labour."

Marin, Spain.—Mrs. Brooke de Wirtz writes to say her husband was most successful in obtaining from Señor Canovas, only a few days before his assassination, a Royal decree for permission to build a new Gospel hall on the identical site purchased by Mr. Thomas Blamire five years ago. The original piece of land has been added to considerably by recent purchases of Mr. J. Cecil Hoyle, so that its present dimensions allow of a commodious chapel being erected worthy of the goodly number of Spanish believers who from week to week worship in a low-roofed "bodega," whose stifling atmosphere on a Sunday night makes one feel ready to faint. The foundations of the new hall are about to be laid.

Christian Endeavour.

The Bath and District Union reports the addition of six new societies during the year.

The Christian Endeavour movement seems to be remarkably healthy and vigorous around Torquay.

The West Cliff Tabernacle Christian Endeavour Society, Bournemouth, held last week a missionary farewell, commending to God three members devoting themselves to missionary service in China.

Earnest consideration is being given by prominent Endeavourers to the question, "How are the multitudes who never enter a place of worship to be reached?" or, "How are Endeavourers to help in reaching them?" It is evident that many are fully bent on making the Christian Endeavour movement yet more and more intensely evangelistic.

The sixth annual convention of the Manchester District Christian Endeavour Union was held on Saturday. Both in the afternoon and at night there was a large attendance, and the proceedings were in other respects successful. Papers on questions relating to the movement were read by Messrs. E. Payne, C. F. L. Pierrepont, and H. Brimelow, and in each case a discussion followed. At the night meeting Mr. D. Morris presided, and delivered an address in which he combated the idea sometimes put forward that the movement made nothing but prigs, and that there was nothing but sentiment in it. The movement, he remarked, was certainly a spiritual one, but it did not make its members too good for this world; it impelled them to take an active Christian interest in all the affairs of life, including, for example, the doings of the Manchester Watch Committee and questions relating to the granting of licences. The secretary of the Union, (Mr. W. H. Woods), gave a brief account of the progress of the movement. Addresses were afterwards delivered by the Lady Mayoress (Miss Roberts), who spoke on foreign mission work, and by Rev. J. D. Lamont, who discussed "the mutual relation between the Church and the Christian Endeavour Society," and contended that the relationship, however much it might have been misunderstood, was one of affinity and kinship, the interests of the two being identical.

Personalia.

Mr. Hugh O. Pentecost, younger brother of Dr. George F. Pentecost, now of Yonkers, laid aside the Congregational pastorate five years ago, and went into business as a lawyer. He now returns to the pulpit (says an American contemporary), preaching in Carnegie Hall, trusting to voluntary offerings until a congregation shall be organised. He intimates that, "while he may never be an orthodox Christian clergyman again, he may ally himself with some liberal branch of the Church." Even this is an advance on the position he has held sometimes since his departure; and there are true friends, who knew his early experience and work and loved him for it, who will trustfully pray that he may again see the old truths as he then saw them, may know their sustaining joy, and may preach them again with the old fervour, to the saving of many souls.

Pastor Thomas Spurgeon.—A correspondent of the Chicago Standard, in describing a recent visit to the Metropolitan Tabernacle, says:—"It was Mr. Spurgeon's last sermon before his vacation, and his appeal to the unconverted was tender and eloquent. The audience had been very quiet, but they were even more so now, as if eager for every word. How many hearts surrendered to the Holy Spirit that evening God only knows, but I never saw a congregation more deeply moved. After the service I was talking with some of the deacons. They said that the church was becoming strongly united in its pastor. At first there was some division, but his sermons were so fine and he was so consecrated and earnest that he was winning the hearts of all the people. It is generally conceded among London Baptists that Thomas Spurgeon can better fill his father's place than any other clergyman."

The Ministry of Helpfulness.—It is better kindness to put a new hope into a discouraged man's heart than to put coin into his pocket. Money is good in its way, but compared with the divine gifts of hope, courage, sympathy, and affection, it is paltry and poor. Ofttimes money aid hinders more than it helps. It may make a man's life a little easier for a day, but it is almost sure to leave the recipient less courageous and independent. The best way to help people, as a rule, is not to lighten the burden for them, but to put new strength into their heart, that they may be able to carry their own load. That is the Divine way. We are told to cast our burden upon the Lord, but the promise is, not that the Lord will carry the burden for us, but that He will strengthen our hearts that we may bear it ourselves. —Dr. J. R. Miller.

THE BOOK WORLD.

OCTOBER MAGAZINES.

The Sunday-School Teacher, edited by Rev. Alex. Smellie, will prove of service to many earnest workers among the young. (2d. Sunday School Union.)

Our Boys' Magazine, edited by University men, is in its eleventh year. Members of the Scripture Union read it, and other lads of good training prize it greatly. (1d. Office: 13A, Warwick-lane, E.C.)

The Boy's Own Paper. The last number of a volume. If you are a boy, this is your very own. Fun with taste, and entertainment with instruction, are in useful combination. (6d. Religious Tract Society.)

Young England with its running stories and sketches appeals strongly to the boy mind. It is not all entertainment, however; some of the articles are of a decidedly instructive character. (3d. Sunday School Union.)

The Sunday at Home (6d. Religious Tract Society) concludes a volume. Colonel A. W. Thompson describes a trip to Madagascar, and Dr. Monro Gibson concludes his very suggestive series of articles on "Facts of Experience and Truths of Life."

The Quiver (6d. Cassell & Co.) closes the volume, and announces for next year various new features, including "Life-Stories from the Slums," "The Churches in the Colonies," "Child-Life amongst Heathen Races," and other contributions of family interest.

The Temple Magazine (6d. Horace Marshall & Son) is striking in variety of contents. Rev. J. Reid Howatt opens a series of articles on "Great Preachers and their Working Ways" with a deeply interesting appreciation of Dr. Joseph Parker, of whom two excellent portraits are given.

Charlie is my Darling. By Annie Beale. (Religious Tract Society. 3s. 6d.) Here we have a pleasing reprint of one of Miss Beale's best stories. It is charmingly written and full of living interest for the girls.

Picture Books for the Young. Messrs. Partridge have issued three bright books at 6d. each, entitled After School, Doggie's Doings and Pussy's Wooings, and Sweet Stories Retold, the last being devoted to Scripture story.

Lectures on the Gospel in the Pentateuch. By C. H. Waterhouse, B.A., M.D. (2s. Isbister & Co.) These lectures were delivered at the Queen Victoria Jubilee Home for British Governesses in Vienna. They are loyal to the Holy Scriptures as our fathers were taught to regard them, and show reverential study with very fruitful results.

The Bright Blue Sky Hymn Book. By Albert Midlane. (Wheeler.) An enlarged edition of a collection of hymns suitable for Sunday-schools and other young people's meetings, from the pen of our esteemed contributor, Mr. Midlane. Many of them are old favourites, others are new and full of Gospel fervour. The price varies from 1d. upwards, according to binding.

From the Sunday School Union we have the following books: Your Health and How to Keep It, for boys (and others), by Riccardo Stephens, M.B., C.M. (1s. 6d.) is a little book that should be placed in the hands of thoughtful boys. It deals very wisely with bodily exercise, and presents a wholesome caution on the habit of smoking. The Mystery of Hoyle's Mouth (1s. 6d.). The adventures of a foolish boy who gets into bad company, runs from home, falls among a dangerous band of smugglers, and after many perils and temptations to wrongdoing, finally escapes and returns home penitent. It is admirably written. Success to You. By E. C. Dawson, M.A. (1s. 6d.) Plain, pointed, straightforward, and sensible talks to boys, by one who understands them, and knows how to hold their attention. Making Allowances (9d.) by Edith M. Edwards, is a good story for little girls. Velvet and Rags, by G. E. M. Vaughan (9d.), is, as its title hints, a story of a rich and poor girl, who prove eventually to be sisters, and are happily reunited.

A small volume of addresses by the late Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, under the title of "Yet Speaking" is now in the press, and will be published very shortly by Messrs. J. Nisbet & Co., Ltd., at a popular price.

"Signs of the Times" is the title of a pamphlet by the Ven. J. Hughes Games, D.C.L., vicar of Holy Trinity, Hull. It contains a paper which the author read in July last at a meeting of the Yorkshire Evangelical Union. Signs political, ecclesiastical, Mohammedan, Jewish, moral and social, and chronological, are set forth with clearness and brevity. (3d. Marshall Bros.)

The Verdict of History on the Gregory-Augustine Mission (6d.) aims to set forth the historic continuity of the Church of God from the beginning in the Chosen Race and Nation of Israel, and it is dedicated to the members of the Pan-Anglican Synod, by a Clergyman. A British Ephraim Catechism (2d.) by Rev. Robert Douglas, M.A., deals more exclusively with the "identification" theory. (Nisbet & Co.)

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

Rev. James George Easton has been instituted to the rectory of Murston.

Canon Elwyn, Master of the Charterhouse, is, as we go to press, very seriously ill.

The jubilee of St. Paul's Church, Leigh, will be celebrated on Monday, Oct. 4.

Rev. W. T. McCormick, of St. Matthew's, Brighton, having again broken down in health, has been ordered a voyage to Australia.

The rectory of Laindon-with-Basildon, Essex, vacant by the death of Rev. B. S. Clarke, has been accepted by Rev. Herbert Carpenter, curate of the parish.

Rev. E. H. Rogers, one of the oldest beneficed clergymen in Surrey, has resigned the charge of Thames Ditton, which he has held for over thirty-seven years.

It is rumoured that the Bishopric of Stepney, vacant by the translation of Dr. Forrest Browne to Bristol, is likely to be conferred upon Rev. the Hon. A. T. Lyttelton, the vicar of Eccles.

The Westminster Gazette observes: "The Simeon Trustees, who have been favoured with a wonderful run of patronage during the last two years, are Archdeacon Richardson, Canon Girdlestone, Prebendary Tate, Prebendary Eardley-Wilmot, and the Rev. Handley Moule, Principal of Ridley Hall, Cambridge."

At the Diocesan conference of Preston, the Rural Dean (Canon Hamer Rawdon), president, delivered an address, touching upon various questions affecting the interests of the Church. Subsequently papers bearing upon the Church's duty to discharged prisoners and persons apprehended were read by the new prison chaplain, an interesting discussion following.

A new C.A. Labour Home for the Outcast has been opened in Fisher-street, Swansea. Nearly fifty young men and women have just entered the Training Home at headquarters to be trained as evangelists, mission nurses, and rescue workers. The candidates' secretary at headquarters would be very grateful if clergymen and church workers will recommend to him at any time suitable young men and women for free training. The secretary will undertake all responsibility in the matter.

The Church Congress Evangelical Committee has arranged an excellent programme for those who are going to Nottingham this week. Every morning devotional meetings will be held, at which addresses will be given by some of the leading evangelicals—viz., the Bishop of Sierra Leone, Dr. Handley Moule, Prebendary Webb-Peploe, and Prebendary Eardley-Wilmot. During the week the C.M.S. will also hold a special gathering, at which the principal speaker will be the Bishop of Newcastle. The Church Pastoral Aid Society is arranging for an exhibition of industrial workers, as well as a public meeting.

The winter session of Hackney College, West Hampstead, was opened on Tuesday week. Dr. Cave, the principal, occupied the chair, and the inaugural address was delivered by Dr. Mackennal, of Bowdon on "ministerial leadership."

At Little Waltham, the second anniversary of the pastor (Rev. J. J. Beck) was held last week. In the afternoon a special sermon was preached by Rev. J. Burgess, of Chelmsford, followed by a public tea, to which a large number assembled. In the evening a public meeting was held under the presidency of Mr. F. Wells, when addresses were given by the pastor and Revs. T. McD. Mundle and J. Burgess. An encouraging report was rendered for the past year.

A meeting of Congregationalists in London was held at the Memorial Hall on Wednesday week in connection with the proposed Church Extension Fund to be launched at the Assembly at Birmingham, on Thursday, October 14. Revs. Andrew Mearns and W. J. Woods reported preliminary promises to the extent of £12,462, of which £6436 had been promised in London. The promises include five gifts of £1000 each, and it is hoped that at least £100,000 will be raised.

At Kensington, Liverpool, the twenty-fifth anniversary of the settlement of Rev. E. E. Waller has been celebrated.

A new chapel is to be erected at Rushden, also at Tunbridge Wells for the congregation gathered by Rev. J. Mountain.

The pulpit at South Parade, Leeds, which has been some time vacant, has now been filled by Rev. R. C. Lemin, who has received a hearty welcome.

The Chatsworth-road Church, West Norwood, is rejoicing in the prospect of a bright future, the pastorate having been accepted by Rev. Archibald G. Brown.

A lady evangelist is conducting missions in connection with the Primitive Methodists in the villages of Shropshire and North Wales.

The Third London Synod (Wesleyan) has resolved to hold a quiet day, on Friday, October 15, for devotion, and particular preparation for the work of the coming winter. It is not intended that the gatherings shall be for discussion so much as for waiting upon God. The meetings will be held at Tamworth-road Chapel, Croydon.

The report of the London Mission gives the membership of the East London Mission at 1149; Central London, 1044; West London, 1403; South London, 1022; Grove Mission, 189. The fifty-five pages recounting the work done give a compendious account of the life of the London poor, victims, many of them, of the metropolis, that "stony-hearted step-mother."

With a view to utilising and developing the evangelistic resources of the Primitive Methodist Connexion, a movement has been set on foot in the Bradford and Halifax District to secure the appointment by the Conference each year of two or more ministers, who shall be relieved of all pastoral charge, and be set apart exclusively to undertake the work of Connexional missioners.

A gathering in connection with the London Central Mission was held at St. John's-square Chapel last week to welcome back the superintendent (Rev. John E. Wakerley), and also to welcome Mr. G. H. East, the new agent appointed to the Camden-street Church of the Mission. Mr. Crowle-Smith expressed the thankfulness of the church at retaining Mr. Wakerley as their superintendent for another year. He said it would have been a disaster had he been removed, and added that they quite hoped for some years to come to keep Mr. Wakerley as their pastor and leader. Mr. Barnett, the senior agent, and Mr. Robert Carter, representing the Holborn Town Hall work, also spoke, all referring most hopefully to the work. Mr. Wakerley replying, said that his heart was in the London Central Mission.

It is stated that Mr. William Carruthers will contribute an introduction and a bibliography to a volume which will contain, by a photographic process, a facsimile of the original copy of the Shorter Catechism.

Calls.—Mr. James Forbes, of Belfast, to Central Hall Church, Nottingham; Rev. Robert Mitchell, to Low Waters, Hamilton; Rev. James Crichton, of Elgin, to Kelvinside, Glasgow.

Salvation Army.

General Booth will visit the United States and Canada in January next.

Another Home for fishermen has been opened on the far north coast of Norway. Refreshment and reading rooms are included, and evangelistic meetings held nightly.

The Harvest Festival meetings which have been held at each of the 1200 corps in this country have proved more successful than ever; £100 was collected at a Sunday's meetings at the Congress Hall, Clapton.

An inmate of the Home for Discharged Prisoners found, while sorting the waste paper which had been collected by the men of the Home, a cheque value £15 6s., belonging to one of the large wholesale houses in Cannon-street. The firm in question sent a donation of 5s. to the funds of the Army and 5s. to the finder.

The Army (says The Chronicle St. Petersburg Correspondent) is making good headway in Finland. In that country it now numbers 20,000 soldiers and 1000 officers. There is little doubt that the followers of General Booth are doing a vast amount of good among the Finns, and that, wherever they are in evidence, drunkenness and other evils are diminishing.

Fallen Asleep.

At Garforth, Mr. Jabez Woolley, aged seventy-four, one of the leading Methodists in Leeds, and a princely giver.—At Corfe Castle, Mr. Stephen Paine, aged sixty-three, a local preacher and well-known temperance lecturer.—At Woodstock, Mr. Timothy Hunt, aged eighty-three, a devoted leader in Christian work.—In Ceylon, Mrs. Wilkinson, widow of a devoted Baptist missionary for India; it is sixty years since she sailed for mission work in that land.—At Old Goole, Mr. W. McWilliam, aged seventy-three, one of the earliest and most valuable leaders at Richmond Hill, Bournemouth.—At Rivington (Horwich), Mr. Richard Shaw, a liberal contributor to Christian, missionary, and philanthropic institutions.—At Ludlow, Mr. James Meredith, a preacher of the Gospel for over sixty years.—At Wykeham, Mr. J. Kerr, an earnest Christian worker, aged twenty-four years.

Returned Hop-Pickers.

Mr. John A. Groom, of the Flower Girls' Christian Mission (8, Sekforde-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.) is appealing for funds for relieving the exceptional distress among those who have returned disappointed from the hop-gardens. The abject condition of these poor people is described as being so unprecedented as to be quite appalling, that despair which is inspired by utter ruin apparently being the lot of one and all.

In connection with the Flower Girls' and Women's Christian Association, there are over 1200 members, most of whom are mothers, having families dependent upon them. During the season these migrate to the hop-gardens of Kent, taking their children with them, hoping to return in improved health and with a few pounds in the way of extra earnings wherewith to pay overdue rent and other debts.

The present year has been one of the most disastrous ever known; and while the growers suffer, their poor pickers have returned to their bare homes with all their hopes blighted and starvation staring them in the face. In a general way the winter is a dreadful time of privation to them, and they are not able to bear this additional calamity. Mr. Groom invites help for these distressed ones.

The Christian Missionary Alliance has held its first convention at its new grounds on Nyack Heights. There was a large attendance and great interest in the services; at the missionary meeting on Sunday 12,000 dols. was given, which will be used for the general purposes of the association. Among the speakers was Rev. John Robertson, of Glasgow. Next year there is to be a Bible school there from early in June till late in September, and Dr. Simpson anticipates that people will flock there, as they do now to Northfield.

Commercial Travellers' Christian Association.—A social meeting of the members of this Association was held on Saturday at the City Temple, Holborn Viaduct. The secretary (Mr. Courtney) gave a very encouraging account of the work of the nine months that have elapsed since the annual meeting. There had been enrolled more new members than during the whole of the previous year, and there were 1700 new subscribers to their magazine, New Lines. The benevolent fund had been of very great service in a number of special cases. Mr. Poulter, who presided, expressed his satisfaction at the progress the Association had made. At the same time there was room for further extension, and he hoped every member would use his influence to gain recruits. Short addresses, replete with interesting incidents of their commercial life, were afterwards given by members.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

WE remind our readers of the important Missionary Convention to be held in Exeter Hall, on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday of next week. On another page we give the leading foreign fields to be considered by experienced speakers. We anticipate an increased interest in this great cause as an outcome of the meetings.

The softening and uniting influence of common work and fellowship between Churchmen and Nonconformists was well illustrated at the Church Congress in the discussion on Church and Dissent. Canon Hammond, in his unsympathetic paper on the subject, went so far as to say that while many Dissenters had done great good in the world, "Dissent had done no direct good: not a scrap." Rev. W. Hay Aitken and Preb. Webb-Peploe, however, who have mingled so freely with members of all churches in their evangelistic and other work, showed a very different spirit. Contact with the life of the Free Churches, with their strenuous insistence on the simplicity and spirituality of the Christian life, had taught them the valued service wrought in behalf of essential Christianity by these agencies. Mr. Aitken pointed out that theories that hold a predominant place in the Church of England have, more than anything else, constituted the point of difference between the Church and Nonconformity.

The sad outbreak of typhoid at Maidstone illustrates the peril of waiting till a suspected source of social danger has caused an actual outbreak of disease. The danger had been notified long since, but no movement had been made to forestall it. The result is a great epidemic, in which hundreds have become involved in illness and a large proportion of the victims have died. Business has become paralysed, engagements are cancelled, harvest festivals postponed, and the town thrown into mourning. Everything is being done to isolate the disease and prevent its spread to other places, though this has only been partially successful. As usual, the trouble is calling forth generous deeds of helpfulness and self-sacrifice, and voluntary service of all kinds has been offered. It is hoped that the worst is past. The calamity presses home the great responsibility of public bodies in their social work, in which, as in all else, "prevention is better than cure."

How far the vacillation and internal dissensions of the Concert of Europe have tended to restore the prestige of the Sultan in the Mohammedan world generally, and his independence of spirit in matters of foreign policy, is now seen in his altered attitude on the Cretan question. He has almost peremptorily pressed on the Ambassadors the necessity of a speedy settlement, at the same time insisting on the Turkish troops remaining in the island. This means that the Greek war has done nothing to solve the problems that brought it to pass; and that we are once more face to face with a vexatious situation to which the Sultan holds the key.

The clearing away of the peace preliminaries at Constantinople once more opens up the sad condition of the Armenian problem. There is a bitter dissatisfaction among the Armenian community at the non-fulfilment of the reforms promised by the Sultan, and the refusal of the Ottoman Government to accede to the request of the Patriarch for authority to open a public subscription for relieving the necessitous population, providing for the thousands of orphans, and rebuilding the churches, schools, and asylums destroyed during the recent troubles. It is reported that the Sultan's own promised subscriptions to this purpose have not been paid. This, in the face of approaching winter, means threatened starvation for multitudes. Meanwhile, dismay has been created by the report that the Powers in future will maintain a neutral attitude with regard to the Armenians. The Patriarch has lately ordered an Encyclical to be read in the Armenian churches advocating loyalty, and warning them against the pernicious influences of revolutionary committees, so that no excuse may be given for a fresh outbreak of atrocities. The situation is pathetic and tragic in the extreme.

There is an extraordinary and salutary change in the attitude of Continental statesmen and journalists towards this country since the conclusion of the Russo-French alliance. The "splendid isolation" of Britain from European alliances is once more shown to be a wise policy. We are powerful in direct proportion to our determination to act on our own standard of right and wrong, and to defend the interests of the defenceless, without being hampered by restraining diplomatic conditions. Britain has a great international mission to fulfil, and she can fulfil it best in friendship with all the world.

In the "Private Papers of William Wilberforce," just published (T. Fisher Unwin), there is a suggestive letter from William Pitt to the "great emancipator," written soon after Wilberforce's conversion, when he was meditating retirement from the affairs of the world, in which the statesman wrote :—

> I cannot help expressing my fear that you are ... deluding yourself into principles which have but too much tendency to counteract your own object, and to render your virtues and your talents useless, both to yourself and mankind... For you confess that the character of religion is not a gloomy one, and that it is not that of an enthusiast. But why then this preparation of solitude, which can hardly avoid tincturing the mind either with melancholy or superstition? If a Christian may act in the several relations of life, must he seclude himself from them all to become so? Surely the principles, as well as the practice, of Christianity are simple, and lead not to meditation only but to action.

A few years later the recipient of this letter began that crusade against slavery which in the end cleared the empire from this foul evil. This was the first application on a large scale of the principles of Christian truth to the social and political problems of the world, which has led to so many great and worthy developments in other directions, and which has before it still so many pressing problems.

How inevitably any failure in public righteousness is set down to the reproach of the Church of Christ. It may not be fair, for the churches are not consulted on matters of public policy, neither is it desirable they should be. Nor do they in all cases influence the men who determine such policy, because many of the latter do not come near them. Yet Mr. John Morley could say, when he was pleading the cause of the black man, that if we do not administer with justice and with humanity the territories in which we rule over him, we ought to shut up our churches and silence our pulpit admonitions. A great compliment, though in the shape of a great rebuke.

A notable utterance against the policy of the Cape Government in relation to the Bechuanas is that of Dr. Moffat, son of the famous missionary, who, now that he is "no longer muzzled as an official," feels free to say that Englishmen who are under the millionaire spell are not guided by a high ideal, and that the Dutch are, "as of old, and on principle, down on the black man." The stolid papers at Cape Town have been moved, at least The Argus has, to something like energy > by the discovery that the body of Laka Jantjo—one of the rebel chiefs, who died as brave a death as any man could do—has actually been mutilated by our men, the head cut off and brought away. There is to be a military inquiry; but we have had experience of these military inquiries before, and know what they amount to.

Let us hope that these vigorous protests may lead to better and juster treatment being meted out to the black man, who, Dr. Moffat believes, > has grit in him, he is growing in education and intelligence, he is three times as numerous, and he is not fading away like the Maori or the Red Indian, and he will make himself felt yet. But meanwhile things are bad.

We are not unaccustomed in this country to the practice of designating wrong-doing by respectable names. The new title for slavery is indentures. The Baptist Union, meeting at Plymouth this week, proposes a resolution condemning the permission of slavery in the Sultanate of Zanzibar and other territories under the protection of the British Crown. But our officials raise pious hands of horror at the very name "slavery"; they only use a system of "indentures." But we must not be hoodwinked by a specious re-christening of a custom which is obnoxious to the very spirit of the British Empire.

The liquor traffic in West Africa is increasing at an alarming rate, and has again called forth a strenuous protest in The Times from Bishop Tugwell, who has so often made himself the champion of the natives in that region. More than half of the revenues which we draw from our English colonies in West Africa is obtained from a duty on spirits. This means the steady demoralisation of the races under our rule, and the total unfitting of their spiritual nature for receiving the blessings of the Gospel. Bishop Tugwell appeals to Englishmen to do their part in restricting this infamous traffic, which threatens to become still more devastating in its influence through the opening of the railway into the Hinterland. Strenuous appeals should be made without delay to the Government to abate this monstrous wrong.

King Oscar of Sweden expressed himself very wisely to his army when it congratulated him on his jubilee. The army is not to carry its banners into foreign lands. Sweden, united with Norway, has enjoyed the blessings of peace for more than eighty years, "a boon which was formerly regarded as hardly possible." The Emperors also express pacific sentiments; but, unfortunately, at the same time persist in maintaining armies that keep Europe in constant dread of war. The professions of peace would have far greater weight if the soldiers were diminished in number.

General Booth has made some pertinent observations in The Quiver on the relation between work at home and work on the Continent; they are not new, as the work of British Christians on the Continent for at least two generations proves, but they state a fact which only too few realise.

In these days of continual intercourse between continent and continent, no Christian nation can afford to regard the condition of another with indifference. The irreligion of Chicago and St. Louis must be fought in Hamburg and in Munich.

Of course the General knows that there are enormous difficulties in some parts of the continent in the way of this policy. Even Germans themselves in the land of Luther can hardly get a hearing for the Gospel unless they are members of the Lutheran Church, while in France the priest makes evangelical work as difficult as he can. Such opposition would almost point to the wisdom of going after the people who leave these lands of persecution, and dealing with them in the free countries to which so many of them go. Nevertheless we believe that it is also wise to maintain European missions. For one thing, it is a bond of love.

In a contemporary we find the following:—

When we read of a Saunders Peden or a Jonathan Edwards wrestling with their hearers by day and with God in agonies of prayer by night, we recognise a noble devotion lost in a fog. At the bottom of it all lay the thought of saving the people they loved from the fiery hatred overhead.

All our modern religious movements have been born in anxiety and tears; the new souls whom the Church has received have been given through wrestling prayer to God and tender pleading with men. The proof of the power and worth of "the travail of soul" is seen in the results. For example, in early Methodist days a humble preacher, bent on evangelistic work, approached a Yorkshire fishing village, notorious for the wickedness of its people. He dismounted some distance from the place, tied his pony to a gate, and behind the hedge pleaded long in prayer for the souls to whom he was going. His preaching was with power, and the people turned to God. From that day to this the place has been noted for the godliness of its inhabitants. Be where he may, no Filey fisherman sails his boat and plies his net on the Lord's day; and the little place is very free from the vice which too often abounds among fishermen and sailors. Cases of this kind might be multiplied; but we have yet to hear of any place being converted through men who have no sorrow in their heart for sinners, no grief because God is not honoured, no fear for the sinner's future.

The study of history made M. Taine express himself in words which ought to be a support to faith and a rebuke to those who are always telling us of the natural upward tendency of humanity. He says:—

We can now reckon the value of what Christianity has brought into modern society; how much modesty, sweetness, and kindliness; what it there maintains of honesty, good faith, and justice.

This is to give us the best social view of the effects of the Gospel. Further, M. Taine believes that there is nothing except Christianity which can hold us back on our native incline, to prevent the gradual slipping downward by which, incessantly and with all its weight, our race goes back into the depths; and to-day the ancient Gospel is still the best auxiliary that social instinct can call to its aid.

The Quarterly Review may well say that such words from a professed Positivist are "surely a homage to the truth." Science talks of induction, and in the tributes of Taine, Littré, and John Stuart Mill, to the glory of Christ, this induction is most manifest.

By extracts from Count Tolstoi's Diary, the daily papers are popularising an ancient error in talking about Christian Brotherhood. The Count evidently goes on the plea that we are all brothers because we were created by the same God. But it was a spiritual brotherhood that Jesus taught; those who are "born again," "born of the Spirit," and have the spirit of Jesus, are brothers of his and sons of God. Christ said to the hypocrite, "Ye are of your Father—the Devil." A brotherhood based upon spiritual similarity of origin and nature is a reality; any other is obviously a mere name.

Sydney Smith once complained of some men who could not be made to see that character has an effect on clover, by which he meant that honesty has an effect upon our material welfare. The fact is still too much overlooked in the world; in the Church it is almost too well remembered. We are getting into a way of demonstrating the worth of the Protestant form of the Christian faith by pointing to the substantial farms and enormous warehouses of the countries which hold it. The truth is, character has an effect on clover, and the Gospel, where it is rightly understood and honestly practised, has such an effect on character as to teach us to give as it has been given to us. Some Christian graces produce fortunes, others teach us to use them. The line of right living is in the balance between the two.

The last report of the Commissioners in Lunacy largely allays the prevalent impression of the increase of insanity, though it does not altogether remove it. To a considerable extent the growth in the figures is accounted for by the greater care taken in detecting cases of mental trouble, and in dealing with them. The most important feature of the report, as usual, is the evidence it furnishes of the prevalent causes leading to insanity. The most important of these are drink, and the great and growing strain of modern life. The first of these is entirely removable, if once the conscience of the community were thoroughly roused; the second is at least partly so. For the "strain of modern life" is largely the result of the feverish temper in which men live, and which is largely under the control of the will. If we were to put into practice the Apostolic injunction, "Study to be quiet," it would not only save many from mental collapse altogether, but prevent an immense amount of needless wear and tear in business life.

Apropos of this last question, an American paper has been dealing with the question, How worry affects the brain, and points out that it has a physical effect on the brain cells, of a peculiarly mischievous nature, injuring them at last beyond repair. It defines worry as the tyranny of a single, constant, never-lost idea of a painful kind, whose recurrence exhausts the cells with which it is associated, just as the perpetual dropping of water on the same spot wears a groove in a stone. If this be so with the physical constitution, it is still more so with the mental and emotional nature. Worry is one of the greatest enemies we have to peace of mind, and if allowed full sway utterly destroys the temper and poisons the judgment. It is, however, unquestionably under the control of a wise and firm will. The best remedy is a change of interest mentally, and a deep faith in God spiritually. When we realise the primary importance of things eternal, the constant annoyance of things temporal cannot touch the springs of life.

The Westminster Gazette points out that at least eight assurance offices will not assure the life of a publican at all. The great bulk of the offices grant policies upon the publican paying £1 per cent. additional upon the sum assured. Two of the companies make an addition for licensed grocers of ten shillings per cent. There are other offices whose charge to the publican for assurance is much more than £1, some as high as £2 per cent. These figures are the business man's estimate of the effect of drink—it is a life destroyer; and of the value of a drink-seller's life—it is not equal by far to an average one.

The increasing number of suburban theatres that are being licensed and opened suggests the need of increased vigilance on the part of those interested in social purity to prevent the spread of the immorality that hovers on the outskirts of these places of amusement. By carefully watching and taking action against the first symptoms of this evil, it is possible to defeat it at the beginning, whereas it is most difficult to do so when it has firmly rooted itself in any neighbourhood. Here is a useful field of activity for the Free Church Councils that are being organised in the suburbs of so many large towns and cities. The inhabitants of each district where a theatre is planted should be kept ever on the alert, and a healthy public opinion be stimulated in defence of morality and cleanness of life. In this way untold good may be done, and sad mischief prevented, in a quiet and unobtrusive way.

Day of Prayer for Israel.

Four meetings for prayer were held at the Central Hall, Philpot-street, E., on Thursday last under the auspices of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews. The topic of the first meeting, at which Colonel Morton presided, was "Confession and Thanksgiving." Brief addresses were given by the chairman and Rev. J. Wilkinson, and heartfelt prayers and thanksgiving offered. Mr. J. E. Mathieson presided at the second session, the subject of which was "Prayer that God may awaken in the Church of Christ an interest in the Jew warranted by the Word of God." Mr. Mathieson spoke on 2 Cor. i. 4-7, and Rev. Dr. Gritton also spoke.

Rev. J. Wilkinson presided in the afternoon, when prayer was offered for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the Jews throughout the world. This meeting was rendered peculiarly interesting by the baptism of a Jewish convert. Rev. Samuel Wilkinson was the chairman at the meeting in the evening, when the topic was "Prayer for all Missions to the Jews, that men and women engaged in this work may be filled with the Holy Spirit, and that modes of work may be such as are approved by the Word and Spirit of God." Mr. Frederick Blum and Rev. Henry Goodman, of the Mildmay Mission, who were on the eve of a tour of New Testament distribution in Austria and Hungary, both spoke, asking for prayer. The chairman alluded to his intended trip to Russia, to visit the mission stations, and to preach to the Jews. All Missions and the workers in connection with them were remembered at the throne of grace.

The Seven Miracles
In St. John's Gospel.

By Mr. Geo. F. TRENCH.

(Concluded.)

WITH these brief suggestions let us pass on to the second pair of miracles, those of chaps. iv. and xi.—the raising up of the nobleman's son and the resurrection of Lazarus.

(1) In both cases the need arises in the absence of the Lord, and in both the news of it reaches Him by a message from the sick bed through the nearest relatives.

(2) In neither case did the Lord immediately respond by a visit to the sufferer, as his custom was. In the first He never went at all; in the case of Lazarus not for several days.

(3) In each case the sufferer is probably a young man, the disease is acute and dangerous, and the issue is a matter of life or death—the quickening of the dying into higher life and the resurrection of the dead.

(4) Contrast the implicit child-like faith of the nobleman, when he heard the words "Thy son liveth," with the doubts of Martha when she heard, "Thy brother shall rise again," and her further protest against the opening of the grave (xi. 24, 39).

(5) The result in both cases is the conversion of many.

The moral, so to speak, of this comparison or connection is suggested by the Lord's words to Martha (xi. 25, 26). "He that liveth (or is alive at My coming) and believeth in Me shall never die," is exemplified in the recovery of the nobleman's son; "He that believeth in Me, though he should die, yet shall he live;" is shown forth in Lazarus' resurrection. The two men are representative. They are the quick and the dead. The living sufferer changed in a moment. The dead resurrected. In them the Lord reveals Himself as the giver of life: "Thy son liveth"; "Thy brother shall rise again." They have, therefore, a special character of suitability to the Gospel of John as the Gospel of life.

Another and even more significant connection is found in the two men as types of the state of the godless soul. In one sense the natural man is a dying man, his life is but living death; he has intelligence, conscience, will, but for God and eternity these are perverted or inoperative. Doom is before him. To him Christ brings life through the operation of faith.

In the other sense the natural man is dead, "dead in trespasses and sins." He can neither see nor hear nor know anything. To him Christ comes in his sovereign life-giving almightiness, and quickens him instantly. Sometimes, therefore, we have to throw upon man the responsibility of believing. At others we see the miracle of conversion wrought apart from all visible human means. Both are true aspects of the Divine operation. This connection teaches that to discern the one is not to exclude the other.

We come now to the third, the last, and in some respects the most remarkable, of the pairs or couples of miracles recorded in John's Gospel.

They are those of the fifth and ninth chapters—the impotent man and the blind. Let us trace the links which unite these.

(1) Both events took place on the Sabbath (v. 9, 10, and ix. 14, 16), and in both the Jews find fault on this ground, and are met by our Lord's declarations that the works of God must still be wrought, that since sin has destroyed his Sabbath, redemption work has taken the place of creative rest (see v. 17 and ix. 4).

(2) In both the Lord's action was spontaneous—that is, neither of the sufferers sought his help. Contrast this fact with the previous earnest entreaties.

(3) In both the ill was of long standing. Unlike the previous cases, it was not an acute but a chronic and permanent malady—life-long in the one case, of thirty-eight years' standing in the other.

(4) In neither case was the Lord fully known to the healed one at first, and in both cases He seeks, finds, and reveals himself afterwards (ch. v. 14, ix. 35-38).

(5) In both cases, unlike the previous miracles, the connection of sin with suffering is raised. "Neither hath this man sinned," etc. (chap. ix. 3), tells us that some afflictions are traceable rather to the common lot of the fallen race than to any immediate offence of the sufferers. "Go and sin no more, lest a worse thing come upon thee," tells us that sometimes our diseases are the direct effect of our own sins, and that even to believers they are sent in chastisement for sanctification.

(6) The principal lesson of this connection seems to be that the power of Christ alone can overcome the impotence in walk and the blindness in the soul which afflict the human race. It is especially applicable, therefore, to believers, who realise their defects, and justly connect their failures in conduct with the want of the vision of God in the habitual life of their souls.

(7) An interesting link remains. The one, the cripple, lay by the Pool of Bethesda. The other, the blind man, is sent to the Pool of Siloam. These Pools are never mentioned elsewhere in Scripture.

I shall not attempt to elaborate the lessons of the above points of contact, for to the student no doubt these will suggest themselves, but merely remind the reader that without making the investigation under the guidance of the true key, these lessons would probably be overlooked, or, if noticed, lightly passed. The artistic balance of circumstance and doctrine reveal the mind of the Divine Author.

The last of the miracles—that is, the central one, according to the plan, remains to be considered.

It is the feeding of 5000 men. The place of honour given to this miracle is accounted for by its magnitude. With majestic bounty the King spreads a table in the wilderness for 5000 men—for all comers, that is to say. For as to means or adequacy of previous provision, if they had numbered 50,000 or 500,000 the case would have been the same.

Both in the action and the doctrine which follows it, the Lord reveals Himself as the same who had fed the armies of Israel in the wilderness with angels' food.

It is the Saviour of the world who is here presented (see vv. 33, 51, and chap. iv. 42) by contrast with the blessing of individuals and the supply of food and wine to smaller groups in the miracles already considered.

The bread of God was Himself (v. 33). It was free to every comer, to every believer. And the life that He gave was life everlasting.

For dimensions of benefit given, and importance of the doctrine to which it led up, the miracle stands out the chief.

In this case alone of all the selected signs in John is a doctrinal use made, at so much length and fulness, of the miracle that had taken place.

The Saviour of the World (no Jewish limitation now) is presented thus in the centre of the exquisite framework of the surrounding revelations in which, as in a setting of perfect fitness, He is revealed.

The Saviour of the World is He who first discovered Himself as the bountiful giver of every joy on earth, in sympathy with human needs and relationships.

It is He who quickens the living and raises the dead.

It is He who strengthens the weak and enlightens the blind.

Thus, by the art of the design of this Gospel the revelation of the Son of God is brought out in all its perfections of harmony, symmetry, balance and beauty: features, as those who seek them will find, that are common to many, perhaps to all parts of the Scriptures of God.

A Bible Crusade.

A GREAT campaign designed to interest Chicago people in the study of the Bible and to create a revival of religious thought has been planned by Mr. D. L. Moody, and will be carried out this winter under the supervision of Mr. W. R. Newell, assistant superintendent of the Moody Bible Institute.

This movement is said to be the largest ever planned to interest the people of any city in Bible study, and is to be inaugurated by a series of mass-meetings in October, to be held in prominent churches in different parts of the city. At these mass-meetings it is expected to gather all persons interested in Bible study who live in that vicinity, and from these to draw recruits for the classes which are to be formed on all sides of Chicago, Dr. James M. Gray, of Boston, will deliver his lecture on "How to Master the English Bible," and explain his system of Bible study. Rev. R. A. Torrey, superintendent of the Bible Institute, will also speak on "The Importance of Bible Study." Prof. D. B. Towner will have charge of the music.

At the close of each mass-meeting the persons who wish to take a course of Bible study will be asked to join one of the four great classes, which will be formed on the south, north, and west sides of the city. Those who have studied the matter say that at a low estimate there are 500,000 professing Christians in Chicago, and that if only one in fifty of these becomes interested in Bible study it will make a school of 5000 students.

Each of the classes will meet once a week from October until May, and it is designed to have a course covering two years—the first season to be devoted to the study of the Old Testament, and the second to the New. Mr. Newell says that the plan of study will be so arranged that anyone desiring to join the classes can do so at any time during the winter. He will teach the classes, but expects to have the assistance of many able Bible students.

Mr. Moody himself will come to Chicago later in the season to encourage this work. This plan of Bible study has long been contemplated by Mr. Moody. The promoters of the plan expect that many of the young people's church societies will become interested in the study of the Bible, and will introduce the methods employed here in their meetings. The course of study is to interest the students in reading and rereading the various books of the Bible as preparation for the meeting of the class, and when they come together the teacher is to bring out the key thought of the book and to explain the great spiritual lessons to be derived from it.

Islam Awakening.

A CALL TO UNITED PRAYER.

MONTHS are passing into years; and yet the Sultan of Turkey reigns and continues his intolerable career. The "Concert of Europe" up to the present moment has failed to compel the acceptance of the common principles of humanity in the administration of his Government. Neither can one see any hope for the "reform" of the Turkish Government. Those of us, at least, whose work has compelled us to deal with Mohammedans, and to become acquainted with the principles of their religion, know that such hope is a vain dream. The Mohammedan Government which should allow to Christians the common rights of humanity, would by that very fact have become apostate from Islam. The one hope for Turkey, under God, as also for other lands under Mohammedan rule, is the total abolition of Mohammedan political power.

I write, therefore, to suggest that all Christians under whose eyes these words may fall, unite in daily concert of importunate prayer that God would be pleased in his great mercy to bring about swiftly the total and final downfall of Mohammedan political power in Turkey, as also in Persia, Morocco, and wherever else such power exists.

Ministers and ambassadors, even with the best intentions, may fail in relieving the present situation. But God is almighty. To the Lord Jesus Christ has been given "all authority in heaven and on earth." He has promised to do whatever even two or three in united prayer may ask of Him. He has often done this, even in such political matters, where the interest of his Church was at stake.

I remember to have heard a striking illustration of this in connection with Turkish affairs, from the lips of that veteran missionary, the Rev. Dr. Hamlin, long of Constantinople. It was many years ago, under an earlier Sultan, that an edict went forth from the Porte to close all Mission Schools in the Empire. Some one came and told one of our missionaries, then labouring in Turkey, this sad and alarming news. But instead of expressing concern and alarm, he simply answered: "The great Sultan of the Universe can change all that very quickly." Within a few weeks, the Sultan who issued this firman, designed to end Mission work in Turkey, was dead; and the edict was never carried into effect!

Things look dark enough not only within the Turkish Empire, but wherever Mohammedans are found. In North Africa, as here in North India and Afghanistan, and also in the Mohammedan populations of the Straits Settlements, Moslems are waking up, since the bloodthirsty triumph of the Sultan over the Armenians and the Greeks, like the tiger when it catches the scent of blood; and are pouring out fanatical threatenings against Christians in such a manner as the present generation has not seen. Our hope in this alarming situation is not in the Concert of Europe, but in the Living God. Let all Christians, therefore, not once or twice, but constantly day after day, even till the answer is given, pray the Lord that He would be pleased, right speedily, to destroy off the face of the earth the political power of Islam in Turkey and elsewhere. For some 1260 years now, it has maintained its terrible rule. But "the great Sultan of the Universe can change all this very quickly." God grant that not a twelvemonth may roll round before Mohammedan government, in Turkey at least, shall have ended, and that for ever. (Luke xviii. 7, 8.)

A Life to Live.

REJOICE, says Paul; and what hinders many from rejoicing? The concision; i.e., having religion without having Christ—a confidence in the flesh, and a legal righteousness!

Paul had that as his birthright and acquired privileges; it made something of him. But he had seen a glorified Christ—had seen his form, had heard his voice speaking, out of a glory brighter than the mid-day sun, in tenderest love to his heart. His legal gains were loss to him now. His eyes were blinded to the glory of the world by the vision of Christ in his glory; his love constrained him, i.e., bore him away with itself like a mighty torrent.

All that was in the flesh to Saul a gain, was now to Paul a loss; the glorious brightness of this personal love of Jesus to him won his affections and cast into the shade all else besides; believing in Him the world was overcome. Has it thus won your heart, reader? Satan is hoodwinking men, lest the light of the Gospel of the glory of Christ should shine into them and be to them what it was to Paul, engrossing, gladdening, satisfying. Paul had not, like Peter, been a witness of the sufferings (1 Pet. v. 1); he began with the glory, though he never overlooked the cross (1 Cor. ii. 2).

Now he rejects all that made something of himself in order to find his all in the adorable person of his Lord. He counted, and ever counted, all as loss, as refuse; he renounces and leaves behind not only his sins, but his own righteousness and his attainments, and presses forward to apprehend more of Christ; as the stars as well as the darkness of the night disappears before the shining of the sun.

He ceases to be himself the centre of his existence, another becomes that to him now. In the Divine, the perfect Man, who had glorified God on the earth by becoming the Saviour of lost man in his cross, the glory of God had shone out; and risen from the dead and glorified in heaven He becomes the believer's delight, his advocate, his righteousness.

Christ was thus not something, but everything to him, his all in all; in Him he was saved; in Him he was satisfied. Christ was to Paul a priceless treasure, the pearl of great price, his bank which could never break. All became loss when he knew Him, and he desired to go on to know Him by an all-prevailing power working in him—the power of his resurrection, a Divine regenerating and quickening operation, a Divine magnetic drawing. His purpose was evident; his eye was single; his body was full of light.

If you want to know real happiness be a whole-hearted Christian; nothing is so wretched as half-and-half believers, grubs of earth.

For great actions there must be great motives. He found it at the sight of Jesus, his Lord, at the hearing of his voice; the impulse was there; Christ had apprehended him, seized hold of him, carried away his heart, and made it captive by his love, and he reached forward to apprehend Him in response; it was truly the expulsive power of a new affection. His motto for life was, "This one thing I do;" he went ahead, not on a table-land, but scaled mountain heights on his way to glory, and the constant view of Christ there conformed him to it. The Holy Spirit can make this true in us all.

A Glasgow Conference.

THE eighteenth annual conference at St. George's Cross Tabernacle has been held in Glasgow with large attendances. Mr. D. J. Findlay expressed his thankfulness for the blessed spirit of unity prevailing among those who were gathered together, amid great diversity of views and methods of work.

Rev. John Urquhart, speaking on the story of Gideon, called attention to the widespread ungodliness, infidelity, and worldliness which are eating into the ranks of professing Christians. Pastor James Fanstone (Pernambuco) said the very degradation of our own and other lands seemed to bring with it a gleam of hope, on account of the strong appeal it makes to God's faithful people. Mr. John Archibald (National Bible Society of Scotland, Hankow) gave an inspiring account of the present position of missionary work in China.

After an address by Mr. Bewley Weaver on Phil. i. 9, 10, 11, Miss Bessie Leggatt (China Inland Mission) recounted some touching instances of the power of the Gospel among the women of Central China. Mr. James Macfarlane closed the first gathering with an expository address.

After an interval, Mr. Summers (North Africa Mission), speaking from his own experience in Alexandria, gave an emphatic contradiction to the common statement of the hopelessness of Christian work among Mohammedan peoples. There are between twenty and thirty thousand such converts now living in Egypt, India, and other Eastern lands. His own mission had met with much success in securing audiences at Gospel meetings, and much precious fruit had been gathered in.

Miss Annie Taylor told with graphic power the story of how she and her colleagues had been led of God in the establishment of their stations in Sikkim and Tibet; the audience was greatly touched by instance after instance of the overcoming of obstacles through simple faith in his promises. Mr. William Thomson, jun., spoke a closing word of exhortation for the Saturday evening.

On Sunday the Conference was continued all day, beginning with a gathering for prayer at 7 a.m. and closing with the observance of the Lord's Supper between 9 and 10 p.m. Much time was given to prayer at all the gatherings. An outstanding feature of the Conference was the time spent in thanksgiving and supplication for a greater outpouring of the Spirit. Testimonies were heard on all sides to blessing received during the gathering. The foreign missionary sympathy becomes more apparent year by year, as well as the great importance of being up and doing in these last days.

The Other Side.

I fain would throw a bridge of light
Across the dark dividing way,
Where those we love are lost to sight,
Beyond the portals of the night,
The silence of the grave.

Like ships they sink beneath the brim,
The waters close above the mast;
But, landsman-like, our faith is dim,
We know not life's horizon rim,
Which they have safely past.

We see the wreck upon the strand—
So like the ship that sailed away;
We scoop a hollow in the sand,
And there we lay with loving hand
The broken mast and stay.

But from another land we hear,
A ship, with ensign gaily flown,
Has just arrived in perfect gear,
And by her papers would appear
None other than our own.

And oft I sit beside that grave
To watch the ships that leave the bay;
They seem to sink beneath the wave,
But One whose hand is strong to save
Steers through the blinding spray.

The wind is hushed, the waves are still,
The peace of God has filled her soul;
She strives no longer to fulfil
Commands beyond the strength of will,
But rests in his control.

The Church Congress.

THE Church Congress held its meetings last week in Nottingham. It was well attended, and the discussions were characterised by an excellent tone. On the morning of the opening day the Mayor of the town welcomed the Congress to Nottingham, some complimentary words being acknowledged by the Bishop of Southwell and the Archbishop of Canterbury.

The presidential address by the Bishop of Southwell was a model of historical allusion and preliminary statement. Speaking on union in diversity, he said: "History shows me no instance of a country or church elevated by Rome, since her revolution, to form a centre of universal jurisdiction. Destruction of liberty became her policy, and destruction of liberty killed her services. Administrative unity of coercion was Rome's instrument; its failure is beyond revival, however men may dream. For an Anglican communion in the twentieth century mediæval church rule is an impossible anachronism. For our race, at any rate, England and America are our sufficient witness, for Church as well as State, to the colonial premiers' principle that bonds of affection are not strengthened by tightening, but tightened by strengthening."

At a sectional meeting Bishop Barry opened the subject of "The Organisation of the Anglican Communion," holding that it should be not an empire, after the Roman idea, but a free federation of churches—mother, daughter, sister churches, with a primacy which was in no sense a supremacy. Hard though it might be to realise this organisation, he could not doubt that the destiny of the future lay with some such ideal. The Bishop of Salisbury dealt with the question of the constitution of a consultative body, such as was desiderated at the recent Lambeth Conference. At another meeting, were discussed. Sir G. G. Stokes spoke on the inductive method, and Archdeacon Wilson followed in advocacy of the same. The historical method was treated by Rev. A. C. Headlam and Rev. Dr. Sanday. In some explanatory words the latter described the method as seeking to place the facts which it discovered in relation to their surroundings. It took the prophet as primarily the preacher, teacher, and guide of his own day and generation. But did it therefore refuse to him the gift of prediction? Did it confine the range of his message to the particular society to which it was given? It could not do so, if it was true to itself. Concluding his address, Dr. Sanday declared his belief that at this moment the conditions of Biblical study were more favourable than ever they had been, and that just because it was being conducted more and more upon the lines of the historical method. The historical method itself was being better understood, and perverse applications of it were being discarded.

METHODS AS APPLIED TO THEOLOGY

At a working-men's meeting the Archbishop of Canterbury gave some interesting

AUTOBIOGRAPHICAL PARTICULARS.

He said that from early childhood he had felt most sympathy with men who worked with their bodies, rather than with their brains. His father was a working man—a soldier, who at his death was Governor of a colony; but at his father's death he was thirteen, and he had had to make his living since he was seventeen. He had known what it was to do without a fire because he could not afford it, and to wear patched clothes and boots. He had learnt to plough as straight a furrow as any man in the parish, and he could thresh as well as any other. His life had since been of a different character, but he had never been able, for all those sixty years, to be idle. Certainly, as Archbishop he had enough to do, and he had fifty-seven applications to go to places to speak or preach in the month of October, and sixty-three for November. Could he not say that he was a working man? His very soul, therefore, was with them, and as a minister of the Gospel it was his privilege and joy to deliver to them the message which God and the Church had to give to the working people of this country.

Lord Hugh Cecil, M.P., addressing himself to the widespread prejudice that exists against the clergy, said there was a dislike of the idea of the clergyman "bossing" the church, and perhaps the "superior virtue of the clergy roused lay jealousy." There was a dread and suspicion of sacerdotalism and priestly assumption, and possibly some clergy took too much of the management of the church on themselves. He deplored the lack of interest in missions, and called upon his hearers to have a part in combating the spiritual destitution and wickedness of our time.

On Wednesday the Congress considered a great variety of subjects of internal and external interest. The Dean of Lincoln treated of the Prayer-book as the rule of the Church of England. After an historical statement, he outlined the revision work that had been done by sister churches, singling out for special mention the Episcopal Churches of America and Ireland. Dr. Hale, an American bishop, told the story of the Prayer-book used in the United States, which has undergone frequent revision. Among others who spoke were Lord Halifax, who advocated "the alternative use of the Communion Office of the first Prayer-book of Edward VI."; Chancellor Espin, who protested against any interference with the Quicunque Vult, in which he declared "there are no damnatory clauses, but there are warning clauses"; and Prebendary Webb-Peploe, who observed that, while the hand that advanced the proposals for change was covered with the sheep's wool of the Church of England, the voice that spoke was the voice of one who would take away his brother's heritage. Mr. Webb-Peploe added that the Reformers made it clear that the Church of England knew of no sacrifice to God other than the one of Jesus Christ.

The Bishop of Ripon delivered an address on the progress of life and thought in the Church during the Victorian era. Among other indications he mentioned the missionary spirit, as seen in special efforts to reach the masses, and in the greater earnestness of the clergy and the changed character of their sermons. The political sermon and the bitter controversial sermon had, thank God, almost disappeared. Though thankful for what was good, we must be cautious respecting evil. He was afraid there was a lessened sense of truthfulness. The enormous increase of unreal trading companies, the adroit falsehoods of prospectuses, the facile falsification of accounts, the readiness to lend an honoured name on the directorate of a company, without realising the responsibility to the public, were illustrations supplied by business life. Was there no tendency to looseness of morals? Was the literature which received the praise of the Press always free from corruption? Did not our bustling activity kill thought, make meditation and study difficult, and produce a Christian character

MORE SHOWY THAN SUBSTANTIAL?

Did not religion live too much on excitement and on self-advertisement? For the rest, we must not be so interested in the individual as to forget the Church, nor so absorbed by the Church as to ignore the individual; nor so interested in philanthropy as to forget the soul, nor so interested in the people as to forget their profit, nor so interested in their profit as to forget their nature, nor so interested in the outward as to forget the inward; for the Lord whom we serve is Lord of all, and we must not narrow his domain, but so labour that the whole heart and soul and bodies of men be preserved blameless until his coming.

Rev. Dr. Moule read a paper on the contribution of the Evangelical movement to the life and thought of the Church. He defined the Evangelical movement as a series of events and influences beginning about 1740; widely felt from the middle of last century and onwards; carried on in much of its first form, say to the death of Simeon, in 1836; a strong influence since that time, in some respects never stronger than now, but under conditions much modified by other, and in some respects opponent, tendencies. The note of the movement lay in its peculiar name, Evangelical. The word was no invention of its first leaders, as if they would label a party. Methodist was the older sobriquet, not limited as now to the Wesleyans; it was long before foe or friend talked much of Evangelicals. But no doubt the master passion of the men was Evangelisation, the preaching of what they held to be the Evangelium.

After a sketch of the history of the movement, Principal Moule said it was a noble phenomenon, this sporadic appearance of men various in character, remote in locality, out of communication, but all mysteriously awaking to conviction of sin, salvation of the like type, a type then almost forgotten, yet shining large in the New Testament all the while. The Evangelical movement had contributed all along, he believed,

ONE GREAT DOCTRINAL BENEFIT.

It had been a witness for the Church's duty to give the first place to the first truths. He was not so blind as to say that nothing was true which was not distinctive of Evangelicalism. But he humbly confessed before God and his brethren that he believed what was distinctive of Evangelicalism to be distinctive of the Gospel. He believed that the Evangelicals had done the Church service in another way. They, though not they only, had kept alive the tradition of the friendship of their Church with what Bishop Hall called "her sisters of the Reformation." The maintenance of that and kindred tradition, far from being a disloyalty to the Anglican Church, was a precious contribution to progress. Lastly, the Evangelicals had been permitted to set an example, imperfect yet faithful, in the work of the evangelisation of the world.

At a meeting on Foreign Missions, Bishop Kestell-Cornish enlarged upon the growing interest of this subject, and the Bishop of Newcastle on the Comity of Missions, which he illustrated under two heads: First when in the presence of heathenism, two missionaries belonging to different Christian bodies agreed in heartily and thankfully saying, "We love Him because He first loved us." There was an agreement of faith which no outward differences, however important, could frustrate. Secondly, baptism in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, by whomsoever administered, implied incorporation into the one Church of our Lord Jesus Christ; so that no question whether any particular body of Christians did or did not constitute a valid branch of the Church, could so unchurch the baptized Christian as to represent him as outside the Church of Christ. The holding the one faith in the Father, Son, and the Holy Ghost seemed to him the doctrinal basis of missionary "comity."

Miss Clifford described Woman's Work for Women in India, and Dr. H. Lankester advocated Medical Missions. With regard to China, the latter mentioned that, whereas the people put all sickness down to evil spirits, their dreaded "gods," they commonly assigned the healing power of medical missionaries to our Lord and Master; and frequently the mission hospital was called "Jesus Healing Institution."

Several addresses on Church and Dissent were delivered in the afternoon. Canon Hammond was unable to trace any good to Dissent. Rev. J. Andrewes Reeve, in a paper on the recognition of common truth and common work, saw room for much fruitful co-operation between

THE CHURCH AND NONCONFORMITY.

Earl Nelson instanced State patronage and control and other obstacles in the way of home reunion. Rev. W. Hay Aitken, discussing the points of difference between Church and Dissent, said he feared that it must be admitted that the differences of religious conviction that existed between parties in the Church were distinctly graver and of far greater spiritual moment than those which obtained between Dissenters and those representatives of their own Church with whom they had most sympathy. It simply was not true to say that their views on the sacraments constituted a necessary point of difference. It was not about baptism, but about infant baptism, that difficulties arose between Churchmen and some Dissenters, and, if he excluded the Baptists from view, he might add that it was not about infant baptism, but about certain views of infant baptism—views which so good a Churchman as Professor Mozley could not admit to be a true interpretation of the teaching of their own formularies, and which were repudiated entirely by one great party in the Church of England. Their own church had already been disestablished in certain parts of the British dominions, and this had not tended to bring about reunion, but it had brought about a conviction on the part of hundreds of church people that little, if anything, had been lost, while a good deal had been gained by the process of disestablishment. Those who had been led by experience to this conclusion could not reasonably quarrel with Dissenters for having arrived at it on theoretical grounds. Only the other day a brother clergyman exclaimed with much vehemence in his hearing, "I pray for disestablishment every day of my life." On the subject of episcopacy, the speaker remarked that Dissenters as a rule did not so much object to episcopacy as to a certain which they could not accept without admitting that, with all their piety, they and their fathers before them had been up till now indebted only to God's uncovenanted mercies for any action of Divine grace that might have reached their hearts or blessed their lives. Was it surprising that they should resent any such theory with unconcealed indignation? These views to which they exhibited so strong a repugnance were equally distasteful to a large majority of Church people. It could not be said, then, that their repudiation of these theories constituted a necessary point of difference between Dissenters and themselves. He believed that to the idea of an order of overseers or bishops a large number of Nonconformists had no objection at all. To him it seemed little short of a scandal to their common Christianity that mutual charity should be unequal to the task of dealing with this obstacle.

On Thursday Rev. Dr. Fry read a paper on "Freedom of Legislation for the Church," urging that the Queen should be advised to grant letters of business to the Houses of Convocation, for the purpose of (1) establishing Houses of Laymen on a representative basis, and (2) for formulating a scheme whereby Convocation might be empowered, in consultation with the said Houses of Laymen, to draft bills on Church matters and lay them on the table of the Houses of Parliament, such bills, failing an address to the Crown within a given time, to receive by Royal sanction the force of law. Other addresses were also strongly in favour of administrative responsibility being laid upon Churchmen in general. The Archdeacon of London dealt with methods of preferment and patronage, making suggestions for important reforms, especially the prohibition of sales of next presentations, and restriction of the sale of advowsons. Other speakers having urged this latter reform, the Bishop of Ballarat described the procedure in his colonial diocese, in which it had been decided to leave all patronage in the hands of the Bishop, subject to the appointment being accepted by an absolute majority of the parochial council. The Bishop declared the sale of advowsons and next presentations to be "abominable."

The Bishop of Hereford opened the subject of national education. Coming to the question of religious instruction, he said that in our great public and other secondary schools his experience had led him to the conclusion that it would be unwise to make any attempt to give to different schools a specially character, and his belief was that any such attempt would be deeply resented by the teaching profession, whose sentiments and convictions were too frequently ignored in the discussion of educational questions. For his own part he held, having seen it exemplified again and again in the course of many years' experience, that it was best for the nation and best for the Church that the boys and girls of all denominations should, as far as possible, be educated together, and not in separate schools. Consequently he deprecated any retrogade movement towards a differentiation of schools in a sectarian spirit.

Industrial problems were discussed in the afternoon, and in the evening public meetings were held. On Friday, at a devotional meeting, addresses were delivered by the Bishop of Lincoln, on "Prayer," and Rev. J. H Skrine and the Dean of Norwich on "The Incarnation." At another gathering "Practical Religion" was treated as it affects citizenship, commerce, and other relations, the speakers including the Bishop of Hereford, Rev. E. A. Stuart, and the Dean of Ely, by whom high ground was consistently maintained. In the afternoon the training of candidates for the ministry was discussed. An "extra" meeting was concerned with the health of the Army in India, and after addresses by the Bishop of Hereford, the Archdeacon of Manchester, Dr. Bell Taylor, and Mr. James Stuart, M.P., a resolution was carried, on the motion of Dr. Paton, seconded by Mr. H. J. Wilson, M.P., disapproving of Lord George Hamilton's recent action in the matter. Next year the Congress will meet at Bradford.

Dublin Convention.

[From a Correspondent.]

JUDGED by the numbers attending and the earnest attention with which the various addresses were received, it is evident that this Annual Convention is not declining in interest. The commanding figure and genial speech of the late Archbishop of Dublin, Lord Plunket, were for the first time missing from the platform.

Dr. John Smith, of Edinburgh, was a new speaker, but one whom a Dublin audience will be glad to hear again. Some striking remarks of this speaker on "Faith as the Spring of a New Life," may prove interesting and suggestive:—"The primary consideration with you and me is not life, but righteousness. Faith is the whole man going out to God, claiming his promises, yielding himself up to God. It is by faith that man gains that greatest blessing of all, deliverance from himself. It is only by going out of ourselves that we live." The speaker said he believed that about the best thing at a convention would be to have an oral examination on the sixth chapter of Romans. Paul says three things about faith in this chapter:—(1) That in all faith there is renunciation of sin; (2) that through our identification with Christ faith allows us to enter into a new life with Christ, viewing Christ solely as a great teacher and social reformer still leaves a great gulf between Him and man the sinner; (3) that if united together we are planted together (literally we become one plant) with Christ. It is as though our Lord said to the believer, 'My resurrection power is yours, my resurrection glory is yours.' This will enable us to keep the flesh in the place of death."

Rev. R. Crawford Johnson, of Belfast, emphasised the duty of "Chistian joy," a quotation from the late Dr. Dale providing an effective introduction to a bright, breezy, and exhilarating address on what was evidently a congenial subject.

Dr. Smith gave another thoughtful address on "How to make the most of life." He deplored the fact that so many young men of the present day wished to get rid of their obligations to God. Yet the obligation of obedience was not the obligation of contract but the obligation of creation. The first idea was one of concentration upon a person, "for to me to live is Christ!" The great forces which move men have never arisen with devotion to a theory, but devotion to a person. In nature, the power of contraction is greater than that of expansion. The great Armstrong guns were not cast in one piece, but in many, which were brought together red hot, and so great is the power of contraction that the various pieces become firmly welded together. The Cross is the great power. Get rid of it, and you get rid of the dynamics of Christianity. Let us give of our best to Christ, and so make the best of life. The gift of the East was meditation—the gift of the West practical energy. Let that energy go out after Christ.

Rev. F. B. Meyer delivered three of his helpful addresses, one to young men being specially impressive. Rev. R. Crawford Johnson spoke again on "Minor Pentecosts." Engaged in mission work in the city of Belfast, the speaker had witnessed some wonderful conquests of grace, and referred specially to a converted pugilist, of whom he said he believed it would not be exaggeration to state that he had been the means of bringing thousands to Christ. Dr. Smith spoke again with much earnestness, urging upon Christians the duty of realizing that they are "a purchased people."

Canon Bell, formerly of Cheltenham, read a perfect gem of a paper breathing the spirit of unity, concord, and Christian charity, entitled, "Our Lord's prayer for the Unity of His People." The speaker did not believe that the visible unity of the church would be manifested until Christ comes again to be glorified in his saints. For the following reasons he did not believe that our Lord was praying for a visible unity:—(1) It would represent our Lord asking for each generation of the Church what had never been granted to any. (2) The oneness which it contemplates is not the visible oneness of believers in a certain time and place, but for all the world and for all time. (3) It represents our Lord as praying for the world, while he says distinctly, "I pray not for the world." (4) It asserts that the unity of the Church would secure the conversion of the world, whilst it would only embitter and exasperate the world. He cherished a strong desire for a true vital union. This address made a profound impression. The canon also spoke on "The Fulness of the Spirit"; Canon Gayer, of Newcastle, on "The Indwelling of Christ"; Rev. A. N. Johnston, on "Enthusiasm not Excitement"; and Rev. J. A. Cullen, of North India, on "Following Christ," the two last-named also delivering missionary addresses.

Rev. Henry Montgomery, of Belfast, gave three thrilling addresses, the large hall and the minor hall being filled almost to overcrowding by an attentive and earnest audience at the evangelistic services in the evening. With faithfulness and tenderness combined this earnest evangelist pressed home the claims of the Redeemer upon all the souls of men. Very many at his request signified their determination to forsake sin and begin a new life.

The Convention concluded with a noon-day prayer-meeting for Ireland, in which various persons representing the different societies at work in the land took part. The attendance at this meeting was unprecedented, which augurs well for the future of unhappy Ireland. Altogether, the Convention was considered one of the most spiritual and blessed ever held in Dublin.

Counting the Cost.—The monthly paper of the Ceylon and Indian Mission tells of a man at Hindupur who never did a bit of work in his life. He was a lord in his caste, and got grain given him by the people of many villages as a token of their allegiance to him. He knew he would lose all this if he became a Christian, but he counted the cost, and chose Christ. Now no one will give him anything, but he is very happy in the Lord, and is daily doing coolie work at house-building.

Limehouse Ragged School.—The workers here are making an effort on behalf of biggish lads who, leaving school, usually complete their education on the streets. The effort has succeeded beyond expectation, and for three winters they have had an average of fifteen to the Bible class on Thursdays, and nearly fifty to the Tuesday athletics. The prime object is their conversion to God, but after an hour with hymns and Bible they can have relaxation, and for this the workers would be glad of illustrated papers (after having been used), such as the Graphic and Illustrated London News, Navy and Army, or any illustrated magazines. A lady who knows her Bible is also needed to visit Limehouse for an hour one evening a week to give the bigger girls a lesson. There is a splendid field here for workers.—Superintendent, D. R. OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, October 10.

"Come not near any man upon whom is the mark; and begin at my sanctuary."—Ez. ix. 6.

JUDGMENT begins with the house of God; with those of us who are called to teach and preach, and who bear office in the Church. The six men who had the slaughter-weapons began at the elders, described in the previous chapter, who were before the house. If any such are living in sin, God's judgment must fall first and more heavily on them, because they know better and profess more than others. But let it be remembered always that repentance and the putting away of sin will always avert the sword. "If thou wilt put away thine abominations, then thou shalt not remove."

Amid scenes of judgment, whether in the church or the world, there is always a remnant, upon whom is the mark; on Lot in Sodom, on Israel amid the plagues of Egypt, on Rahab in the fall of Jericho, on the 144,000 at the Great Tribulation. They are safe amid the fiery indignation which devours the adversaries. Have we been touched by the Blood, sealed by the Spirit, and branded with the mark of the brand of Jesus? Doubtless we have, if we know what it is to sigh and cry for the abominations that are wrought around us, and that our own nature is capable of, except for the grace of God. These signs indicate the humbling, sanctifying work of the Holy Spirit in our hearts. To know the great sinfulness of sin is a sign that we know God, and to know either is to have been born again.

MONDAY, October 11.

"The glory of the Lord went forth from over the threshold, and stood over the cherubim."—Ez. x. 18.

The gradual withdrawal of God from his house is described in vivid and awful minuteness. In ix. 3, it had gone to the threshold; x. 4, it had mounted up; 15, the cherubim mounted up; xi. 23, it passes from the city. It is well worth our while to ponder this deep and searching lesson. The light of other days fades but slowly: the year sinks by almost insensible gradations to the fall of the leaf; grey hairs besprinkle our heads without our knowing it; before ever we are aware of it the train has borne us miles off the main line to the wrong station. So gradually our hearts may backslide. Satan is too knowing to lead us at a single leap into the precipice, but conducts us by a gradual incline. A little less Bible reading, a slight slackening in watchfulness and prayer, an imperceptible drift towards the world, less horror at sin, more self-indulgence. Beware! It is thus we leave our first love, and prepare for heart-rending falls.

But turn to xliii. 2-4. The glory of the Lord returned to the renovated temple. Like the dawn of a new day, like the sound of many waters, it came, it came. "This," God said, "is the place of My throne...and the house of Israel shall no more defile." Ah, backslider, God will come back to thee again. Thy repentance may be most inadequate, but if it be genuine, if thou dost truly turn to Him from thy sin, thy heart shall again become irradiate with his most blessed of holy light.

TUESDAY, October 12.

"Whereas I have removed them far off among the nations, and whereas I have scattered them among the countries, yet will I be to them a little sanctuary in the countries where they are come."—Ez. xi. 16.

Away from the outward ordinances and the material edifice, the exiles would find more than the equivalent in God Himself. He would give them the reality, of which there had been the outward and visible emblems. Amid all their justly-deserved sufferings they would find a deep fountain of spiritual blessing and comfort in the presence and sheltering care of Jehovah. The thought is capable of endless applications.

To those who are deprived of the means of grace. Sufferers in sick rooms, travellers in lonely and distant places, missionaries amongst the heathen. How often to such comes the vision of the country church, when the summer air stole into the open window, bringing the breath of flowers, or of the great City church, with the well-known voice of its minister. They long for these again. But God will be all and more.

To those who cannot derive benefit from the services they attend. The clergyman is Ritualistic, or the Nonconformist minister is broad in his views, and unsympathetic with the deeper moods of the spirit. Still, it may be your duty to attend for example's sake; but whilst waiting before the Lord, He will draw near and become your sanctuary.

To those who are exposed to danger and persecution.—In the olden time the sanctuary was the place of refuge. All who fled thither were in safeguard. There is still the sanctuary at Westminster and elsewhere. So, let the driven soul haste to the folds of the Tabernacle of God's Presence. None can pursue it into that secret place. No weapon shall smite, and even envying voices shall die into subdued murmurs.

WEDNESDAY, October 13.

"I am the Lord; I will speak, and the word that I shall speak shall be performed: it shall be no more deferred."—Ez. xii. 25.

In various ways the people of Israel were endeavouring to minimise the effects of Ezekiel's denunciations of judgment. They did not deny that he spoke the word of God, but comforted themselves with the reflection that it was not likely to be fulfilled for some time yet. "The vision that he seeth is for many days to come." God, on the other hand, said, "It shall be no more deferred."

We are all disposed to remove the wonder-working of God to the remote past or the distant future: either that He did miracles or will do them. Heaven touches the earth at this horizon or that, but it is remote from the place where we stand. This is the tendency of our mind, and for this reason we miss the manifestations of God's grace and power, which wait to enrich our lives. Now is the accepted time, now the day of salvation. As Christ is, so are we. There is as much of Divine power and love-throbbing around, and within our easy reach, as ever filled the upper room at Pentecost, or shall break on the world in the millennial days. Let us not postpone our appropriation of it. Let us not indulge the thought that God is not prepared to fulfil his promises here and now. Let us not predict to our children greater days than those which are now passing over us. Whatever God has spoken He will perform. Whether it be of wrath to the sinner, or salvation to the saint, it shall no more be deferred.

THURSDAY, October 14.

"Prophesy against the prophets of Israel... that prophesy out of their own heart.—Ez. xiii. 2.

It is a great temptation to those of us, who are often called to speak for God, to prophesy out of our own heart, to follow our own spirit, and to profess to see what we have not seen. We are apt to say, the Lord saith, and the Lord hath not sent us. These words of ours always tend towards soothing and pacifying guilty consciences with assurances of peace, peace. You may always tell when a man is speaking from the vanity of his own heart. He glozes over sin; speaks with bated breath of its consequences; and reduces sinners into supposing that there will be Peace, Peace, when in reality there is none.

This is what the Word of God describes as daubing a slight wall with untempered mortar, and sewing pillows on elbows for handfuls of barley and pieces of bread. The daubing makes the wall look as strong as possible, but it cannot save it from collapsing before the overflowing shower of God's judgment and the great hailstones of his wrath. The pillows may save the flesh from chafing, but cannot avert the blows of a broken law. Oh, take care, lest ye give men licence to sin, by the slight views ye circulate of its nature or penalty. Are not these lying divinations? Do they not grieve the heart of the righteous, and strengthen the hands of the wicked? Take care lest the fate of the daubing be the fate also of the false prophets: "The wall is no more, neither they that daubed it."

FRIDAY, October 15.

"Ye shall be comforted concerning the evil that I have brought upon Jerusalem."—Ez. xiv. 22.

The sin of Jerusalem was so heinous that God was constrained to send on her his four sore judgments all at once and together. Each alone was so terrible that Noah, Daniel, and Job, had they been living, would only have succeeded in saving their own souls; but how much more when they befell the land unitedly? But, Jehovah says, ye shall come to know, when you review my work from the vantage-ground of the years, that I have not done without cause (or in vain, marg.) all that I have done (23). Ye shall be comforted, when a remnant of sons and daughters escapes, who see and acknowledge their sinful ways and deeds.

Yes, some day we shall be comforted! Comforted as to God's meaning in our sorrows and trials! Comforted as to his dealings with our dear ones! Comforted about his government of the whole universe, of which the world is part! We shall see that there was a cause or reason for all God's stern discipline. We shall admit that it was wisely adapted to its end, and achieved it. We shall be able to join in the song of Heaven, "Great and marvellous are thy works, righteous and true are thy ways, O Lord God the Almighty." We are too prone to judge God hastily and superficially, instead of waiting to see "the end of the Lord," when all his reasons and purposes will be explained from the great white throne.

SATURDAY, October 16.

"What is the vine tree more than any tree?—Ez. xv. 2.

What is the vine good for? Will it bear comparison with the trees of the forest? Do men make chairs, tables, house-roofs out of it? No, they will not make even a pin for hanging vessels on, out of the vine-wood. There is only one use for the vine—to bear fruit. If it fails to do that, it may as well be cast at once to the flames. Then it is still more useless, and as we gather the charred pieces together, we realise that they are hardly worth our care.

So with believers. Like Israel, they are God's vine, created in Christ Jesus unto fruit-bearing. The one purpose and end of their redemption and salvation is that they should bring forth fruit unto God; and if they fail in this, after having been pruned and enriched in every way, they are cast forth as worthless and unprofitable, and men gather them and cast them into the fire, and they are burned. Savourless salt is good for nothing: fruitless vines are utterly useless: professors who bear no fruit are worse than useless, they cumber the ground. Let us abide in Christ that He may bear fruit through us. Let us be willing for all the pruning and discipline which God is pleased to send us, that we may bring forth more fruit; but let it ever be borne in mind that fruitfulness does not always mean activity, but the bearing of the sweet fruits of the Spirit, which consist largely in temper and disposition.

The Evangelical Alliance:

CONFERENCE AT CAMBRIDGE.

WE continue the report begun in our last issue. The meetings extended over Tuesday and Wednesday, each day's proceedings beginning with a devotional gathering in the Henry Martyn Hall, immediately followed by a morning session of the Conference.

On Tuesday Mr. M. H. Hodder took the chair at the larger gathering. He remarked that there seems to be among thoroughly earnest Christians a greater spirit of union than there has ever been before, and the Evangelical Alliance is doing all it can to foster that spirit.

THE ANNUAL ADDRESS.

"The True Unity of the Church in Christ: Church Union and Church Reunion," formed the subject of what is known as the "Annual Address," delivered on this occasion by Rev. Dr. J. H. Rigg, who said the Alliance needed only to repeat the principles adopted in 1846 and maintained ever since. When Christians speak of unity their conceptions are often very different. With some the thought is entirely spiritual, while others have no idea of unity except that which is necessarily connected with organic union. Any attempt to force external union often produces discord. If Christians are to avoid dissension they must, within a certain range, agree to differ, and must rely upon the inner and essential truth as to Christian unity which is taught in the New Testament. Much of what is said about reunion is extremely mystical. To talk of reunion to men whose ancestors have from generation to generation held their own distinctive church character is out of place. Christian unity is a much finer thing, and a better preparation for some final mutual recognition, not on the lines talked about to-day, but perhaps some federation of Christian Churches and forces. The idea of spiritual unity which this Alliance cherishes is a much grander thing than can possibly be realised in connection with any material, artificial combination that can be imagined.

Rev. John Callis, of Norwich, enforced the "practical resolutions" of the Alliance. These were adopted at its formation, are brought forward at each of its annual conferences, and have relation to the personal conduct of members in regard to prayer, the correction of mutual faults, and the avoidance of rash and groundless insinuations affecting differences of opinion.*

The sitting closed with an address by Mrs. Lewis on "Palestinian Syriac Lectionaries of the Bible."

"MISSIONARY ENTERPRISE"

occupied the attention of friends assembled at Tuesday afternoon's meeting in the Guildhall. Mr. C. Finch Foster presided, and spoke briefly. A stirring address followed from Rev. D. J. Stather Hunt, who treated the topic in an eloquent and animated manner, declaring that the work of missions deserved increased attention for the sake of the welfare of our Christian churches, for the sake of the heathen, and for Christ's sake. He would rather be a man with a poor intellect but a great gospel, than a present-day savant with a dwarfed and emasculated gospel. Dr. F. W. Baedeker, described the simple evangelising methods which obtain among the persecuted Stundists. They do not talk about sacrifices, but make them, giving out to others what they have received of Divine truth. In England evangelists almost tread upon one another, but in many places abroad the Gospel has never been heard. He mentioned the encouraging fact that the Bible distribution among peasants and prisoners had met with no hindrance from the civil authorities. Finally, he pleaded for an increase of Christian effort on behalf of Sweden, Denmark, Hungary, and other lands wherein he has travelled, which are not only open to the Gospel, but are in great need of it.

Mr. W. B. Sloan showed that the work of the China Inland Mission, among other organisations, is carried out on Evangelical Alliance principles, inasmuch as its workers are of all nationalities as well as of all denominations. Baron Nicolaij spoke of the impetus given to religious liberty in Finland by the labours of Lord Radstock and the late Mr. Reginald Radcliffe. There is now an Alliance House at Helsingfors, and he trusted that the facilities for travel might induce increased practical interest on the part of British Christians in the spiritual needs of Finland.

There was a large attendance at the meeting in the Guildhall on Tuesday evening, when Lord Kinnaird was in the chair, supported on the platform by numerous delegates and representatives of branches at home and abroad. If we are to go forward, said the Chairman, and win the position we desire for the Church of God, it will not be by fighting as a disunited force. We must seek points upon which, as Evangelical Christians, we can unite.

CHRIST'S HEADSHIP.

Archdeacon Richardson spoke upon "The Headship of Christ." There is a modern form of doubt which, if it does not despise, yet practically would dethrone Christ. There is the sacerdotal assumption which, if it does not deny, yet practically ignores the glorious High Priest, who alone can lay his hand on the Creator and the creature and bring about harmony between them. The truth of Christ's headship is an antidote to another danger in the revival of old superstitions, which would place the Virgin Mary between the sinner and the Saviour, and favour the fearful error of sacramentalism. A Christless Church can have no spiritual influence over individuals or communities. The great fact of Christ's Headship must be specially remembered at a time when the Moslem movement indicates a systematic endeavour to fight against truth, which is undermining the influence of the false prophet.

Rev. Dr. Oswald Dykes followed, on the same subject, as a vast, all-embracing conception which lifts men above petty and local divisions and the transient fluctuations of the age. Eph. v. 15 is a fruitful verse which yields the main ideas of the action of Christ as head of his Church—(1) the articulation and compacting of the various members into a whole, just as the human body is held together for effective action by joints and ligatures; (2) the proportionate supply of nutriment to each member, according to its needs; (3) and, as a consequence of these, the increase of the organism. In this passage, and in the parallel one of Col. ii. 19, we have a most fruitful and cheering truth of which in these days of ecclesiastical division and a sundered Christendom, there is sore need. Have we faith sufficient to discover in this truth an unseen overseer, who has controlled the past history of his Church, and who puts into Christian hands the key of catholic charity towards all the denominations of the Church, as well as the key of a hopeful outlook as regards its future?

With untiring fervour, Mrs. Isabella Bird Bishop pleaded for a large increase of missionaries among the peoples whom she has visited during ten years of travel in heathen and Moslem lands, mostly in Asia. Thankfulness for what God has done through his workers, should be mingled with self-abasement for the work left undone. The unutterable horrors practised during sickness proves the great need of medical missions; and it was pitiable to find motherly influence so largely used for the maintenance of demon worship in heathen families. Where is the spirit of Christlike self denial, when there is in our land so much extravagance in dress, rare editions of books, holidays, and other things?

WEDNESDAY.

Sir William Willis presiding over the forenoon meeting in the Henry Martyn Hall, Rev. W Roberts (late of Notting Hill) dealt with the subject of "The Holy Spirit: His witness to Jesus Christ." The apostles were qualified to bear witness to the superhuman works, the holy character, the death, resurrection, and ascension of Jesus Christ our Lord, so far as those works and deeds had come under their observation, but they needed the Divine Spirit to teach them the meaning of those facts. We may rejoice in the growing desire which is evident in our day for the teaching of the Gospel, and undoubtedly there are more abundant fruits of Christian effort than we have yet seen, which remain to be gathered in. Let us realise by faith that the same mighty power as of old is available to energise our work for God.

"The Holy Spirit: His power needed in the Church to-day," was the important opic allotted to Rev. T. M. Morris. It is only by the presence of the Holy Spirit in the Church and his power working in it and through it that the Church can ever become what God means it to be, and accomplish what God would have it do. We are living in a materialistic age, and social questions are continually coming to the front, in the face of which we are urged to keep the spiritual and supernatural claims of Christianity in the background. To do this would be to court failure. Let us ever bear in mind that the glory of the Church is the Divine Presence in her midst, and that the power of the Church is the power of God working in and through her. The presence and power of the Holy Ghost in the Church are indispensable to the maintenance of her life, to the success of her work, and to the manifestation of her essential unity. While truth must not be sacrificed on the altar of charity, Christians may all do something to promote a spiritual and brotherly union; for, after all, the things upon which we agree are far greater and more important than those upon which we differ.

* Owing to an ambiguity of expression, a critical reference to a contemporary was understood by many as relating to The Christian. We are authorised by Mr. Challis to refute this.

SIXTY YEARS OF PROGRESS.

Dr. J. Murray Mitchell reviewed "The Progress of Christianity." He showed that of the hundred million heathen once computed to be unreached by the Gospel, it is calculated that between four and five millions of converts have been added to the Christian Church during the present century. The greater number of these have been so added in the Queen's reign by means of Protestant missionary agencies. If we add the results of efforts made by the Roman and Greek Churches, we may calculate that the professing Christian Church has been increased during the period referred to by about six millions of souls. Christianity is undoubtedly making progress in India, China, Madagascar, Japan, Manchuria, Uganda, and Nyassaland; and this advance has also been very marked in the Eastern Churches, particularly the Coptic and the Armenian Churches. In the field of missionary enterprise, the only active competitor with Christianity is Mohammedanism, which is checking Christian effort in many places, especially since the triumph in warfare of Turkey over Greece. While at home there is much to deplore, including the prevalent tone of unbelief in a section of the Press, yet the signs of Christian progress are abundant and cheering, so that the godly have every encouragement to be steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord.

In the afternoon, the garden party in connection with this Conference, for which Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Moulton, of the Leys School, had kindly issued invitations, was interfered with to some extent by the unsettled state of the weather. A meeting was held in the hall within the grounds; and over this large gathering Dr. Moulton presided, extending a warm welcome to his guests. Fräulein von Welling gave an interesting account of the way in which her varied work at Blankenburg, in Thüringia, has been helped by the Evangelical Alliance. Mr. J. Prokhanoff described Stundist sufferings under the unrelenting persecution of the Greek Church in Russia; but he brightened the shadows of this picture with details of the godly but quiet zeal and simple ways in which these Russian Christians carry the Gospel wherever they go, even into imprisonment and exile. Baron Nicolaij narrated happy results from steady persevering Christian effort in Finland.

Mr. W. E. Malcolm presided at the evening meeting.

Rev. Dr. MacEwan expounded "the obligation of British Christians to maintain the principles of the Reformation." Within the last fifty years there has been a growing disposition among some people to favour the errors and corruptions against which the principles of the Reformation have been such a long-standing protest. Whatever may be the cause, there is a determination among misguided men to return to Romish priestism and superstition. It is time to ask where we are going. Unless we are to be dragged back to the darkness and superstition of mediæval times, we must arouse throughout the land a revived and abiding sense of the obligation of British Christians to maintain intact the glorious principles of the Reformation.

"The Reformation's mightiest weapon — the Word of God," was the principle ably advocated by Rev. G. D. Hooper. We have the statement of the Reformers themselves as to the means by which they were instrumental in delivering men from the superstition and tyranny of their own times. Though by men, the Reformation was of God, and their weapon was the Word of truth. Only with the same sword of the Spirit can we prevail against the numerous spiritual foes of our day. If the future of the Gospel rested upon human effort alone, we might well despair of any progress against the powers of heathenism and Islam. Seeing that we are already in the thick of a fight for Reformation principles, we must, while maintaining a Christlike spirit, not be content with a mere defensive policy, for Protestantism when it ceases to be aggressive in a godly sense seals its own doom.

The closing utterance was a comprehensive view, by Archdeacon Taylor, of Liverpool, of Scripture-teaching on "the one offering, once offered." He remarked that nearly all Christian churches hold the death of our blessed Lord as sacrificial and propitiatory in respect of sin; but the second part of the subject involves a parting of the ways. Reformed churches maintain that the great offering was made once for all; while the Roman and Eastern churches say it is not repeated but is renewed. Not only does the error find no warrant in the New Testament, but it is directly contrary to various passages in the Epistle to the Hebrews. Eleven times do we read that our Lord, so far from ministering before an altar, is at the right hand of God, reigning, ruling, interceding, and blessing. Let us, by the help of God, hold fast to the teaching of Scripture, that, "being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ," and there is, therefore, no more offering for sin.

Nonconformity in Russia.—The Odessa correspondent of the Daily News writes:—The labours of the Orthodox Missionary Congress, which, under the ægis of the Holy Synod, has for some weeks past been sitting at Kazan, have now terminated. The scheme for the suppression of Nonconformity, drawn up for adoption by the Imperial Government, has already been sketched. The schools of the Raskolniki are to be immediately and permanently closed. Membership of any of the extreme sects is to be treated as a criminal offence, and the authorities of the commune in which such sectarians are domiciled are to have the power of banishing them to Siberia. The ecclesiastical authorities are to be empowered to take away Raskolnik children from their parents and place them in Orthodox educational establishments. It is impossible to believe that the enlightened young monarch would ever consent to adopt this programme. It is a hopeful sign, at all events, to find so influential an organ as the Viestnik Europa strongly deprecating the Kazan scheme in toto.

Y.W.C.A. in India.

DEAR SIR,—We are anxious to bring before your readers the spiritual needs of two classes of English-speaking women, who form an increasing portion of the population of India. As yet their needs seem scarcely to have been realised by the Church of Christ in Great Britain, no doubt because information about them has been scant. We refer not to the native Christian women who through the labours of the missionaries have been brought into the kingdom of God, but to the English women whose circumstances oblige them to live in India, and to the Eurasian women whose home is there.

Besides the Englishwomen who find employment in the great cities, numbers are gathered together in the railway centres where their husbands or other relatives work. The Eurasian women are all professed Christians in religion, and use English as their language. Both bodies of women are quite outside the sphere of the missionaries' work. Except in certain circumstances they have no spiritual instruction, and few seek after their souls. The Roman Catholics, recognising the importance of the Eurasian element in India, are making much progress amongst them. Must we be less earnest and less awake to crises than they?

The Young Women's Christian Association of India, which forms part of what is now known as the World's Y.W.C.A., is placed in a position to render help to these English-speaking women of India. To enable them to render that help promptly and efficiently, the prayer, the understanding, and the support of the Church at home are needed. The Indian Y.W.C.A. has addressed a letter to British Christians, entitled "A Fresh Call from India." In the letter Miss Agnes Hill, national secretary, says: "The missionaries who go, and the famine funds which are being constantly sent to India, do not relieve the wants, spiritual and temporal, of many hundreds and thousands who have a strong claim on us English people. Many of those are called Christians even when they have neither head nor heart knowledge of a Saviour." Miss Hill concludes by saying: "The field is large, and calls for immediate help. Who will go? The need of support of workers already in India is great. Who will give? The call to prayer is importunate. Who will prevail?"

There are Y.W.C.A. institutes in Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, while Bible classes and personal work are carried on in about 100 centres through the country. Demands for more workers reach us constantly. At present in one railway centre the use of the Railway Institute has been promised for women's Bible classes if we can send out some one to take up this work in the name of Christ. There is no one on the spot free to do so.

We commend with deep earnestness this "Fresh Call from India" to all who desire the spread of Christ's kingdom in India, and pray that the spirit of God may press it home on many a conscience.—Yours very faithfully,

(Mrs.) L. J. Tritton,
President World's Y.W.C.A.

Shaftesbury Memorial Hall, Borough.—Services were held on Sunday and Monday last, on the occasion of the second anniversary of the advent of the missionary, Mr. Coles, to the locality. On the Sunday evening there was a splendid attendance, when Mr. Fegan, of the Boys' Home, Southwark, preached an evangelistic sermon, which the workers have great reason to believe has already begun a real revival in the neighbourhood. On the Monday evening the public meeting was presided over by the president of the hall, Mr. H. J. Milner, and short addresses were delivered by various workers.

Women's Protestant Union.—The annual "All day of prayer" was held on Thursday, Sept. 30, in the Drawing-room of Exeter Hall. The opening address at 11 a.m. was given by Madame Leite Rozas on Isa. xl. 31. Miss M. C. Rouse, hon. deputation secretary, opened the afternoon session by giving a few extracts from Mons. Bertrand's letters, containing encouraging details regarding the work amongst the priests of the Roman Catholic Church. At the concluding evening meeting the president read extracts from many letters dealing with the main object of the gatherings, viz., that we should be the Lord's remembrancers for women and girls enclosed within convent walls.

Mr. McNeill at Huntly, N.B.

With reference to this Mission, which was described in our last issue, an esteemed correspondent writes:—

Notable religious awakenings have happened in Huntly's history, and once more the people have been deeply stirred. Religion has taken the "crown of the causeway." The Gospel is the topic which dominates the popular mind and determines conversation. Although harvest operations were at their height, the rural districts were well represented at the meetings, many hearers coming long distances.

On two Sunday evenings Mr. McNeill preached in the parish church to crowded audiences numbering almost, if not quite, 2000. Very many were turned away from the door. Perhaps, however, the most remarkable gatherings were meetings for men held at an unusual hour and in an unusual place. At 3 p.m. the Public Hall was filled with men. Old and young were present, and it was observed that the farm-servant class was strongly represented.

Fruit soon began to appear. A meeting for thanksgiving and testimony is still to be held. But already there have been gratifying cases of open confession of faith in Christ. Besides, the good done in freshening the religious life of the community is incalculable. Throughout the mission Mr. McNeill preached the Gospel with extraordinary force. A woman remarked that she did not know anybody "could speak like yon man." His addresses, which usually exceeded an hour in length, fell on tireless ears. Mr. McNeill possesses a grand voice; now terrible as a lion's roar, and again winning with tenderness and genial humour. The sum total effect of his preaching is overpowering. The characteristic which leaves the deepest impression is an energy and earnestness truly tremendous.

The prayers of many in Huntly and neighbourhood will follow Mr. McNeill in his work this season.

Mr. George Clarke in Stranraer.

This evangelist has concluded a ten days' United Mission in Stranraer. He came at the invitation of five of the seven ministers in the town, who heartily united with him in carrying on the mission. The preparatory arrangements were carried out most energetically by a well-selected committee, composed of the ministers and members of the various congregations who were in sympathy with the work, and much united and private prayer for the success of the Mission had gone up to God for several weeks before Mr. Clarke's arrival. The largest hall in the town, capable of accommodating 1000 persons, had been secured, and was crowded night after night.

The Mission was commenced on Sabbath, September 19, with a characteristic address to about 700 or 800 children, gathered from the several Sabbath schools in the town, as to how to become Christians. It was illustrated by a bundle of rags, which Mr. Clarke held up one by one, showing the process of paper manufacture, transforming the black, dirty rags into pure white writing paper. This simple but effective illustration was evidently understood and appreciated by the little ones, and doubtless paved the way for the success of Mr. Clarke's subsequent meetings with the hundreds of elder people who flocked in increasing numbers to hear him day after day and night after night during the continuance of the Mission.

It is too early yet to speak of the extent of blessing received from this Mission by hundreds in the town and from the surrounding district who flocked in to the meetings. Many of these came from considerable distances. The tide of blessing, which began to rise on the first evening, continued to flow on night after night, until the last evening of the Mission when it literally swept the people, old and young, including grey-headed elders, into the inquiry-room, where they decided for the Saviour. Hundreds will thank God through all eternity for having sent his servant to Stranraer to speak to them about their souls' well being. M. Jeffray.

Cripple Children.—A meeting on behalf of the work of the Ragged School Union among cripples was held last week at the Foresters' Hall, Margate. The claims of the Cripples' Home in that town and of the work generally were warmly advocated by various friends.

Children's Special Services.

The autumnal meetings in connection with the summer seaside services were held on Thursday last, in St. Martin's Town-hall. Rev. E. A. Stuart, who presided in the afternoon, read the portion for the day and briefly commented thereupon.

The Secretary, Mr. T. B. Bishop (who, it transpired, is to be married at Bournemouth on Oct. 27), gave some outline of Mr. Herklots' labours in India, and proceeded to review rapidly the experiences of the season in many parts, showing that God is constantly blessing the work among the children at the seaside. Not only have many young people been won to the Saviour, but these beach services have been remarkably used of God in bringing the Gospel under the notice of people to whom it is really a new and strange story. After passing reference to the great importance of the work of the C.S.S.M. in providing Gospel literature for children, the secretary concluded with an earnest plea for additional workers, especially in connection with the Children's Scripture Union.

The Chairman congratulated the Mission on having been the means of stirring many others, not connected with the Society, to start services on the seashore. After a passing reference to what he himself had seen at Cromer, Mr. Stuart went on to give an address to workers, based on the references of the Apostle John in his first epistle to "Little Children."

Mr. R. Callender spoke of work at Scarborough, and showed how certain serious difficulties were removed in answer to prayer. The boys' meetings had proved most successful; as also the young ladies' meetings, and not a few had been definitely won to Christ.

Details were next given of eleven weeks' service at Portrush, Eastbourne, and in the Universities' camp for public schoolboys, by Mr. A. G. Doddridge, who looked on these services as a real training for workers and as a seed-sowing work. He believed that about a thousand University men had learned within the last few years the joy of service, and had gained valuable experience therein. His recital showed that God is wonderfully using these services and the efforts connected therewith in the salvation of young people.

Mr. H. Hutchinson followed with a racy account of work at Bridlington Quay.

A very crowded company in the evening listened to stirring accounts from a number of those who had helped in the seaside services during the past season. The places represented were Whitby, Rhyl, Penmaenmawr, Langland Bay, Felixstowe, Bournemouth, and Colwyn Bay. The reports given were of the deepest interest, telling of happy times on the sands, on the cricket-field, and at the various evening meetings for elder people. Much real fruit was seen in definite conversions, and it was proved once again that the C.S.S.M. is doing grand service for the rising generation.

The Bible Learners' Union provides a simple yet effectual plan for daily Bible study, which those who are anxious to obtain a fuller knowledge of the Word can scarcely fail to find really helpful. Members agree to commit to memory one verse each day, a different subject being taken up for united study every month, and the verses chosen from various parts of the book, in order to gather, as far as possible, the teaching of the whole. The Secretary, Miss Brine, Claremont, High Barnet, will gladly supply cards of membership (post free) on receiving fourpence in stamps as annual subscription.

Mr. Josiah Nix in London.

Almost delightful and fruitful eight days' mission, conducted by Mr. Josiah Nix, has been concluded at Victoria Chapel, St. John's Wood. The services grew in interest and increased in numbers. It was soon apparent that all "the people had a mind to work." The chapel is situated in the midst of a poor population, with three and four families in one house, while within ten or fifteen minutes' walk there is a rich population composed chiefly of Jews. The new railway coming through the neighbourhood and sweeping away sixty acres of houses has increased the difficulties of the work by the removal of fifty of the church-members and many of the congregation.

The second night the brass band paraded the streets a person followed the music, found the chapel, and in the chapel found salvation. The mission resulted in forty adults going into the inquiry-room. On the two Sunday afternoons, instead of the regular school, the children assembled in the chapel, and Mr. Nix was as much at home in winning the children for Christ as the adults. Some fifty children, mostly from the senior classes, went into the inquiry-room. On the Saturday night a great temperance meeting was held, and during the mission over 100 pledges were taken. H. J.

Last season Mr. Nix had many successful missions in different parts of the country. The new Home Missionary Secretary at the Wesleyan Mission House, Rev. Dr. Pope, has had to deal with over a hundred applications for Mr. Nix's services during this winter. Arrangements have been made that will occupy the evangelist's time till the end of May, 1898. At all the missions one evening is given to the temperance question. Last year more than 900 persons signed the pledge at the meetings. If some large building could be secured in the West of London, where Mr. Nix could have a continuous mission with the lantern, such as was given to thousands of people Sunday after Sunday at the Princess's Theatre, it would be an untold blessing to the metropolis. We hope Dr. Pope will not overlook this question of seeking to reach the working classes in London.

Walthamstow Babies' Home.

Since the publication of the report which we recently noticed, the excellent work carried on at Walthamstow, under the superintendence of Mrs. Ransome Wallis, has made considerable progress. The Home now includes seventy little ones, ranging in age from ten years or so down to infants of a few weeks. Of these, forty are for the present cared for in Vine House, Wood-street, Walthamstow, and thirty are boarded out. A friend of the work has promised land on which to build cottages, the nucleus of a Village Home; some cottages have also been promised. The site of the Village Home will probably be on the Surrey Hills, which will offer conditions very different from the squalor of the slums in which many of the little ones first saw the light.

The mothers of the children, deserted and penitent, are encouraged in their endeavours to earn an honourable livelihood; and as their offspring are being trained in the ways of God, so efforts are made to win them to lives of godliness and virtue. Mrs. Wallis writes:—

"The struggles that some of them have gone through before they heard of this Home fill one with respect for those who fight so bravely. It is not unusual to find a mother receiving £14 or £15 a year, pay £13 regularly, i.e., 5s. a week, as well as clothing, to have the child kept in some dark cellar, or perhaps with some drinking woman. This means that the poor mother's stock of clothes diminishes so much that she loses her situation, and must inevitably sink to ruin but for some such help as we can give her. Then the £13 which is paid at such cost is not really spent on the child, but often in drink by the wretched woman who has it in her care."

This good work requires more friends. Parcels of clothing are always welcome, and Mrs. Wallis (Copthill, Burgh Heath, Epsom) will be glad to send patterns of the articles most needed, and also to give further information.

Ravens and Doves.

A CONTRAST.

WHEN I was a child one of my favourite stories was called "The Raven and the Dove." It told of a little brother and sister, who having seen a beautiful dove in a cage longed to have it for their own, and begged their parents to buy it for them. Now, this brother and sister were guilty of very often quarrelling, and their kind father thought of a plan which might help to cure them of this sin. He said he would buy them the dove, but if they quarrelled the dove would be changed for a raven. For a long time they delighted in their dove and were good, but one unfortunate day they became angry over something and quarrelled. The next morning when they rushed into the nursery to uncover their pretty favourite and say good morning, lo, in its place was a great black ugly raven that croaked at them hoarsely and from which they fled away in fright. The story went on to tell of their sorrow and repentance, and how to their great joy, after a time, the dove was restored to them.

Now, dear children, I want you to take a little Bible lesson from ravens and doves.

A raven is a large black bird, bigger than a crow; it eats raw flesh and is very fierce; it has an ugly voice and keen eyes, and is very observant. The raven likes to live alone, and is somehow connected in men's minds with that which is evil. In the Jewish law God gave a list of birds that the people were to consider unclean, and never to use for food, and were to hold in dislike because of their evil ways, and among them was the raven.

I am sure you can tell me where we first read in the Bible of a raven and a dove. Yes, Noah sent them out of the ark to try if the waters had abated, and how did they both behave? (Gen. viii. 7-11.)

We read of one good thing which the ravens did. What was that? Fed Elijah. You see, God can make even evil things do his bidding. God once asked Job a question (Job. xxxviii. 41), and you will find the answer in Ps. cxlvii. 9. Our Lord Jesus, too, taught us a sweet lesson from the ravens find Luke xii.; 24. Our God is good to all. You all know how God desires all children to be obedient, and good and kind to their father and mother. Well, next time you are inclined to disobey, just read Prov. xxx. 17.

It is time to turn to the dove, such a different bird from the raven—so gentle, and timid, of pretty light colour, with feathers round its neck which show all the colours of the rainbow; and then its voice, we love to hear its soft sweet "coo-oo." The dove was the only bird allowed to be offered in sacrifice; the tame pigeon and turtle dove of the same species are often mentioned in the Scriptures. David was very fond of writing about doves in his Psalms.

Doves are very loving to one another, and if they ever quarrel they always make it up, and kiss and fondle one another. It is so pretty to watch them. In the Song of Solomon the dove is used as a term of affection. Doves are very fond of their home and friends, and mourn if they are separated. They will fly many miles back if carried away from home. Isaiah and other prophets talk about mourning like doves. Doves are very innocent and unsuspecting Hosea calls them silly because they are easily caught in a net, and he says that some people are just as silly (ch. vii. 11). They easily tremble and are frightened. Our dear Saviour tells us that we are to be like doves, harmless, gentle, loving. What is my characteristic? Stop and think. The Holy Spirit took the form of a dove when He descended on the Lord Jesus at his baptism, showing us by symbol that our Saviour was meek and lowly, and that He came to bring peace on earth. The dove with an olive branch in his mouth is the emblem of peace. The Lord Jesus Christ is called our peace, because He bore our punishment and reconciled us to God, and his Holy Spirit in our hearts will make us dove-like and Christ-like, and we shall love one another and be at peace. Now, dear children, which would you like to resemble, the raven or the dove? Which do you mean to be like?

"Well?"

"LOOK, mother, what Uncle George has sent me!" cried Charley in great excitement.

He was holding up a pair of steel skates, and his bright eyes and glowing cheeks showed how acceptable the gift was.

"How kind of him!" exclaimed mother. "Be sure and write at once to thank him."

"Of course. As if I should forget. But isn't he a brick?"

Mother smiled in sympathy with her boy's happiness.

"It's really awfully jolly of him. Just when the frost has come, too. I'm sure they must have cost half-a-sov."

"Perhaps you'd better sit down and write at once," suggested mother.

"Oh! mother, I can't. I must go and try them. Besides, here is Tom. I say, Tom, look what uncle has sent me. Isn't it jolly of him?"

"Awfully," said Tom with envious eyes.

The boys found the ice so smooth and the first day's skating so delightful that it was tea-time before they returned. The unaccustomed kind of exercise had tired Charley out, but he was full of praises of his new skates, of their sharpness, strength, and quality, and he spent the evening polishing and re-polishing them.

"Hadn't you better write and thank your uncle?" suggested mother after tea.

"Oh! I'm too tired. I'll write to-morrow," replied Charley, airily.

To-morrow proved a glorious day. Charley vanished directly breakfast was finished and spent the whole day on the ice. The following day was similarly employed, and though he occasionally remembered with a little uneasiness the kind giver of the skates, and always meant to write and thank him as soon as he returned home, he was either too engrossed in his skates, or too tired, or too lazy, to do more than put off the duty till the following day.

On the fourth day a postcard awaited Charley at breakfast.

"Hullo!" he cried, with a blush, "uncle's handwriting!"

Mother only watched him.

"Why, there's nothing on the other side. Look! mother. What does it mean?"

He held up the blank side with a puzzled face.

"Isn't there anything?" asked mother. "Look again."

"Oh! yes, there is. Right in the centre. And in the tiniest writing."

"What is it?" asked mother, looking in the teapot.

"It's almost too small to be seen. Oh! I know. What does it mean? 'Well?'"

"It's almost as if your uncle were in the room and we heard his voice," said mother, seriously. "You've never thanked him, or replied to his kind gift. So he writes 'Well?' 'Well, what have you to say in reply to my present.'"

"I see," said Charley, thoughtfully. "I'll write to-day."

And he did.

God has given us a grand and wonderful present—his own Son. What reply have you made? He has given you salvation. You have not replied. So He sends to you that little word "Well?" 'Well, what answer dost thou make for my great gift? And what letter of thankfulness dost thou send Me for all my gifts during thy whole life of health, food, clothes, money, friends, and a beautiful world? Well? Well?"

Mean Little Girls.

"Here comes mamma," said Janie. "O mamma, must I save some of my sweets for Grace?"

"I think a good little sister would."

"But Grace did not give me any of hers yesterday."

"Did she not? How did you like that?"

"I did not like it at all. And I want to make her not like it, too. Because I think she was mean."

"Dear, dear, and is mamma going to have two mean little girls, then?"

Janie looked at her mother, and then was quiet a minute. Then she ran and threw her arms around her neck, and said, "No, no, mamma dear! You shall not have any mean little girls at all. I expect Grace forgot; and I will go and give her some of my sweets now, so that she will not ever forget again."

Her mother smiled. "I think that is the way to make her remember," she said. "And I am so glad that I am to have two kind little girls."—Exchange.

The Salisbury Conference.

THE annual Conference, which may be said to have extended over the whole of last week, proved as bright as any which it has been the privilege of the writer to attend. Rev. E. N. THWAITES, the convener, was in excellent health, and, as usual, he and Mrs. Thwaites had left nothing uncared for which would promote the comfort of their guests, as visitors from afar are always regarded. There was an excellent attendance at Fisherton Church, where the Conference sermon was preached by Rev. H. Graham Thwaites.

On Tuesday morning Rev. E. N. THWAITES presided, as he did throughout the week at all the morning and evening meetings. Daily there were two gatherings for prayer, the first at 7 and the second at 10. At the latter Mr. Thwaites never failed to give a Bible reading or an address. On opening the Conference on Tuesday he said that they met with two objects in view—that they might know more of God, and learn how to glorify Him better.

Mr. R. C. MORGAN found suggestive lessons in the New Testament narrative of the family at Bethany. The rector of Pakefield, Rev. L. PRICE, had for his subject "Living Sacrifices." He remarked upon the wonderful contrast between Paul's blamelessness in his own eyes, and what he thought of this after his conversion, when he could only describe himself as "the chief of sinners." Rev. GRAVES WALKER took the Book of Job and the character of the man of Uz. The lesson which Job had to learn from the awful discipline to which he was subjected was the absolute right of God over him. Rev. J. A. BEVAN also spoke.

In the Luther Hall, after dinner, an opportunity was afforded to the friends of several societies to bring their claims before the Conference. Mrs. THWAITES pleaded for prayer and fellowship for the deep needs of West Africa, and asked for definite prayer for pioneer missionary work in Sinbrunia, in the Hinterland of Sierra Leone, where Mr. Alvarez and his fellow labourers from Fourah Bay College are the first heralds of the cross. Mr. R. C. MORGAN briefly but earnestly appealed on behalf of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland. He described the workfield of the Readers, and how eminently the men under Capt. Kearney White's command were fitted to do good service.

In the evening an earnest evangelistic meeting was held, which it is hoped will bear fruit in days to come.

On Wednesday, after the address of Mr. Thwaites from the chair, Rev. F. BALDEY, of Southsea, dwelt on the Apostle's prayer for the Thessalonian Church—"the very God of peace sanctify you wholly." The chief lesson impressed was that God Himself is the author of sanctification, and to know Him in this regard He must first be known as the God of peace. Rev. J. GREGORY MANTLE spoke most effectively upon the burden of the Apostle's prayer for the Ephesians, "that ye may stand perfect and complete in the will of God." Rev. H. GRAHAM THWAITES spoke of the importance of carrying to others any blessing which had been received during these days of conference.

At the evening meeting Rev. J. G. MANTLE and Rev. J. A. BEVAN were the speakers, the latter urging upon all readiness for the return of the Lord from Heaven.

On Thursday the speakers at the morning conference were Dr. BAEDEKER and Rev. A. C. N. STORRS from India.

At a missionary meeting in the afternoon all appeared to be profoundly touched by the addresses of Mr. Thwaites, Miss Radd, who has been some years in China, Rev. A. C. N. Storrs, of Tinnevelly, Sister Lucy, and Rev. A. W. Charlton.

At the close of the evening meeting there was an after meeting conducted by Rev. J. A. BEVAN.

The praise meeting on Friday morning was a most hearty one; testimony was borne again and again to the impressions produced. As usual there was a call to all who would be ready to enter the mission field to hold up their hands, and several expressed willingness should the way be made open.

Bangalore.—Miss Trail, who has removed here from Coimbatore, has a large unworked field of labour among the Tamil police and Sepoys. There are about 1,600 police in Bangalore, many of whom are Tamils. The Lord is giving her open doors, and a welcome from both these classes. She has a Biblewoman to assist her in the work.

The Masses and the Gospel.

THAT the masses are not so adverse as is sometimes supposed to attending a Gospel meeting was amply demonstrated on Sunday night at the West London Theatre. Given an assurance that the service will be of a bright and hearty character, and a crowded audience is not far to seek. This is the more encouraging in view of the extending endeavours of certain societies to substitute secular entertainments for religious gatherings on the Lord's Day.

For twenty-six years Mr. Charles Cook has laboured in the vicinity of Hyde Park—in the park during the summer months, in the Metropolitan Music Hall in winter, his own mission-hall, Hyde Park Hall, being the permanent spiritual home of the work.

This winter, during the rebuilding of the Metropolitan, the West London Theatre is being brought into requisition, the first meeting being held on Sunday evening last. At an early hour the capacious building was beset with an anxious but orderly throng, determined to find admission up to its utmost capacity, and when 2000 persons were seated there were still more who had to be disappointed.

The stage was occupied by the large and well-trained choir, whose singing has always been such a valuable feature of this mission, many of its members having themselves been converted through its agency. Solos were rendered very sympathetically by Miss Lottie Harvey.

The text, "If the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and sinner appear?" made the groundwork of an earnest and telling address, and the after meeting testified to the force with which the Holy Spirit had directed the message.

Mr. Cook, 6, Frithville-gardens, Shepherd's Bush, W., will welcome at the meetings any of the Lord's people who may be willing to assist. It goes without saying, too, that great expense is necessarily incurred, but none who know the neighbourhood would deny that the money is well spent in thus bringing the Gospel of Christ to bear upon the hundreds of young people who would otherwise be certainly in the streets, and probably in mischief. After its twenty-six years' testing, it is a work in which friends at a distance may fitly interest themselves and contribute to its maintenance.

The Armenians in Persia.

SIR,—The following is an extract from our last Persian letter; it shows the great necessity that exists for the further support of our work there. In these mountainous regions the winter sets in at the beginning of October, and then there must of necessity be much bitter suffering, which only outside help can radically alleviate.—Faithfully yours,

MARY HICKSON, Hon. Sec.

32, Fopstone-road, Earl's Court, S.W.

"Ooroomiah, August 13.—Last mail brought me your welcome letter with the enclosed bill of exchange for £200. This is very acceptable indeed, for we are just out of relief funds. The outlook is very dark, and we fear that we shall be very much pressed for help. Every day there are new arrivals, nearly all so far from the district of Cawer; but we hear now that many from the countries beyond will be over this fall, as they are driven to starvation by their unfortunate circumstances, by enmity with the Kurds, which enables them to go only in some directions to get their grain, and, on the other hand, by the absence of any grain in the district this side which is desolated and depopulated. At present the most urgent calls are from the old, the infirm, cripples, and the blind, of whom there are many among the refugees. There is a good deal of work now, and so all who are able can support themselves for the present; but the winter is coming, when they cannot find work, and very few will be able to lay up enough for the winter's food, as bread-stuffs are at famine prices almost, notwithstanding a good crop."

Young Christians' Missionary Union.—A meeting was held at Rye-lane Chapel on Saturday last, the Rev. F. B. Meyer presiding. Addresses were delivered by Rev. G. F. Easton (China Inland Mission), Rev. J. W. Ewing, M.A., Miss Weatherley, who is leaving this month for India, and Rev. T. Watt Leggatt, Malekula, New Hebrides. Miss Ada Rose sang. An earnest missionary spirit prevailed. Y.C.M.A. pledges and information can be obtained of the Hon. Sec., E. J. Wigney, College Buildings, Temple-street, Newington, S.E.

Oxford Letter.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

On Thursday the annual conference of the Oxford Branch of the Sunday School Union was held in the hall of New College. Mr. Snell, of the C.M.S. opened the conference, the subject chosen by the committee being being "How to interest Children in Foreign Missions." His address was fervid and incisive. He urged teachers and parents to get the subject of Foreign Missions on the hearts of the children. The Oxford Branch has done much to bring Sunday-school teachers together, and the meeting this week will be long remembered as one of the most helpful and stimulating.

Some disappointment has been felt at the results of the Licensing Sessions. Notwithstanding an earnest appeal made in person by the Rector of St. Clement's and other Christian workers in that district the justices have decided to increase the already large number of fully licensed houses. It is strange that the mere signatures of petitioners should have more weight than the disinterested appeals of those who go personally to the court. "Is the beauty of Oxford to be only sought for in her buildings, and are her poorer citizens to have no help in saving their children from the superabundant temptations put down at their doors by the magistrates in the ratio of one licensed house to every 128 people?"

The members of the Baptist Free Church have succeeded in building a new chapel in the north of the city, and this was opened on Thursday. Rev. J. H. Moore has been mainly instrumental in accomplishing the task, and he must be cheered by the hearty support given him. Rev. E. G. Gange, President of the Baptist Union, preached, and after tea a public meeting of special interest was held in the chapel. Capt. Easton, of the Church Army, has had a busy week. Special services have been held each evening in St. Ebbe's. There is much need for an aggressive work in the district, and Capt. Easton is full of enthusiasm. He is supported by a number of helpers.

Special services in connection with the Railway Mission were held at the G.W.R. waiting-room from the 19th to the 26th. Mr. H. Eliot-Walton was the speaker. It is hoped that a suitable building will soon be erected for such gatherings, and it is gratifying to know that they have been the means of bestowing great spiritual blessing upon the members, who are increasing weekly under the able and devoted new superintendent, Miss Marsden.

Barcelona Protestant Hospital.

ABOUT a year ago I appealed to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN for help to reopen this hospital, which had been closed for want of funds. Only a few sent help, but a large donation from a generous friend enabled the directors to reopen the hospital in December. This year, owing doubtless to the many appeals in England, the donations have fallen off so much that I am obliged to make another appeal for help.

It is sad enough that some of our aged poor, for whom we can make no provision, have been obliged to enter the Roman Catholic almshouses, where they were forced to forsake their faith. Help us, at least, to keep open this only refuge in time of sickness for the poor Protestants at Barcelona, Spanish and foreign alike. The cruel tyranny of Rome in a country like Spain is scarcely realised in England, where the interest in Christian work carried on in Roman Catholic countries is fast disappearing.

Church Parochial Mission Society.—The coming autumn and winter bid fair to be as fully occupied with Missions as any of their predecessors. Important general missions are to be held at Norwich, Walsall, Gloucester, Stalybridge, Rochester, and Chatham. It is earnestly hoped that great blessing may rest upon these and all other efforts planned for the extension of Christ's kingdom, and that readers will remember them in their prayers. This winter will again see English Missioners working in India. Rev. E. B. Russell sails at the end of September to work in the South, and Rev. S. A. Selwyn, of Boscombe, on October 5, to conduct Missions in Sindh, the Punjab, and Bengal. The address of the society is now Church House, Dean's Yard, Westminster, S.W.

Great Assembly Hall.

During the months of August and September Rev. John T. Vine has been holding a most successful mission. Mr. Vine has for the last twenty years been evangelising in the United States with marked success, and for some years he has crossed the Atlantic once a year on purpose to give a month's mission in Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road. The results of these visits have been so great that last year and this he was invited for two months. The mission that has now closed is one long to be remembered. There has not been a night in which men and women have not been broken down under a sense of sin; and the inquiry-room has never been without someone desiring to be spoken to about their souls. Mr. Vine does not believe in keeping back the thunders of the law, at the same time he declares the whole counsel of God. His loving, winning way of appealing to sinners to decide for Christ is most effective. It is no uncommon thing to see his audience bathed in tears.

Sunday, September 19, was our Harvest Festival Sunday, and the sight the great hall presented will not soon be forgotten. Every available spot was covered. It required a force of police outside to keep the thousands back that were clamouring for admission. A large crowd waited on in hope of getting in. Mr. Vine gave a most powerful address on "He shall separate the sheep from the goats," and at the close the inquiry room was filled with anxious ones. On his last night, amid the raging rain storm, the incessant brilliant lightning, and the rolling of the heavy thunder, those who had been blessed under his preaching wended their way to the hall to listen and get another blessing from the evangelist's lips. The body of the hall was full, and many lingered behind to shake Mr. Vine by the hand, and bid him God-speed in his future work for the Master. K.

Among Hop-pickers.

Dear Sir,—Mr. Luff and I have made another visit to the hop-pickers of Herefordshire and Worcestershire. We visited 170 lots on different farms, embracing over 13,000 grown-up pickers, and quite that number of younger folk. To reach them all we had to walk over 300 miles in the twenty-three days, carry a heavy load, give tracts, books, and papers, to read on evenings and Sundays, sing hymns, and preach the Gospel.

After the addresses there were many gratifying responses and expressions of thanks.

The weather was the best for our work of our fifteen years' experience, yet the sickness and deaths exceeded anything before witnessed by us.

Our last meeting, on Sunday night, September 26, at Eardiston, was the largest ever seen there. The picture while Mr. Luff gave his address was striking. The intense interest paid, the grateful-looking faces, and the kindly tones of the "God bless you" cannot be put on paper.

Mr. Stanniford, of Hawridge, Berkhamsted, came and walked with us one week, when we were doing the hardest of our work, and he was a great help to us. Christian gentlemen from Hereford go out many miles on the Sundays, and hold meetings amongst the pickers; and have done some real good work.

We had much kindness shown us both by the poor people and the hop-growers; and we are impressed that this is the best year we have ever had. John Jones.

Christian Evidences.—Mr. John Adley has been lecturing in various parts on The Catacombs, Bible Inspiration, and similar subjects intended to strengthen the faith of Christians. The magic-lantern is used to illustrate these lectures, which have been much appreciated in Y.M.C.A.'s and mission rooms. Mr. Adley may be addressed 90, Queen-street, Cheapside, E.C.

Bethnal Green.—A very encouraging meeting to inaugurate the winter's work of the Parmiter-street Mission was held last Friday evening. An interesting feature of the proceedings was the formal opening of a new class-room, built almost entirely by voluntary labour. By means of a large Sunday-school and other agencies this mission is doing much useful work on Protestant and evangelistic lines, but more helpers are needed. Communications may be addressed to the Hon. Sec., Mr. G. W. L. Barraclough, at the mission.

South African General Mission.

Writing on his recent journey up country from Durban, Mr. W. Spencer Walton says:—We left on July 24 viâ Delagoa Bay, joined our wagon about thirty miles out, and crossed over the beautiful Lobombo mountains, through bush country full of game and with many kraals, arriving at our station ten days after we left Durban. We had a remarkable escape from the awful rinderpest. A wagon left with us brought the pest into the east of Swazieland, and lost fourteen oxen. Another left three or four days after ours, and lost all, being over three weeks on the road. None of our oxen died. The road now is rotten with the pest; transport wagons stand by the roadside with their eighteen oxen dead. We also passed hundreds of dead and dying sheep, the result of the drought, which has just broken up. Altogether, the scene in Swazieland is too awful to picture.

Of course, our plans were all upset, but, praise God, not our peace and rest. Like the switching on of the electric light, the pest broke out over Swazieland, and our only way of getting out was by the expensive post-cart, which we had to do. When we left the pest was all round us, but God had preserved the mission cattle. It was a time of much exercise and prayer. I visited all of our stations, and my wife visited two, and we were much encouraged. I had the joy of baptizing five Swazie women, and more Swazies are coming on. There seems to be such a solid work going on.

We are arranging to build and open another station in a beautiful valley with native kraals all round. With it all, I fear dark days for Swazieland and Zululand. Rinderpest is raging, and the locusts are coming in their billions. The king and queen with their fighting men all say that the white men have brought these plagues, and they seem very cross. Inoculation does answer in many cases, and our missionaries learnt to inoculate so as to help the natives when needed. We have heard of a very needy spot in Swazieland and the prospect of a grant of land. It is to be pioneered as soon as possible with a view to opening there in time.

One of our dear natives named Waka, one of our Zulu evangelists, writes, begging us to build him a mud-and-wattle church, which would cost about £15. He has fifty-eight waiting to attend and more to follow. Our funds are very low, but we feel this is very urgent, and he is doing a grand work.

Midnight Meeting Movement.

The other night, during the storm of rain, thunder, and lightning, a goodly number of the Lord's people were gathering in the fallen of Portsmouth to a midnight meeting. The whole district was lit up with a pale blue light, which gave a touch, at once solemn and pathetic, to the errand of the individual worker.

A large number of the class accepted the invitation, and were welcomed at the place of meeting by Christians of many branches of Christ's Church. One young girl promised to return to her parents in Hull the next day, it being arranged that a lady should see her right home to her mother's door. The Salvation Army sisters rendered great help. Mr. Denning delivered a memorable address to the company. Mr. and Mrs. G. H. Fison sang duets, and made all the arrangements for the week's mission. Mr. McCree, the secretary of the London society, 8A, Red Lion-square, attended as a deputation.

Chinese Slave-Girls.—The North American Review gives an account of a sad state of things among the Chinese of San Francisco, against which the Presbyterian and Methodist Mission are waging a brave but difficult fight. It alleges that no less than 3000 criminals—Chinese—live upon the profits of female slave Chinese girls, who are stolen from China and conveyed into America under false pretences. As many as 1500 Chinese girls are kidnapped and sold to Chinese houses of shame.

A Special Prayer Day for Sunday-schools and young people has been arranged for October 17 by the Sunday-school Union, which asks superintendents, officers, and teachers of Sunday-schools to make on that day special efforts for the children in view of the fact that thousands of teachers are striving every week to lead their unconverted scholars to the Saviour's feet. All preachers are asked to make their sermons special, aiming to bring about immediate decision for God on the part of our scholars and the young people in our congregations.

Movement Among French Priests.

Gospel work among French priests is developing in a promising manner; and not the least interesting sign is the growing sympathy with reform inside the Church of Rome. The Abbé Bourrier, of Marseilles, who some time ago broke with the Papal system, has started a paper, Le Chrétien Français, which for the present will appear every other month, and chronicle the progress of Evangelical reform in the bosom of Catholicism. The first issue contains remarkable letters to Church dignitaries by the editor and Abbé Phillipot, late vicar of Plomion.

In an introduction, Mr. Bourrier says: "We are all priests—seculars, monks, or religious. Some of us have already come out of the Roman Church, others are still in the pale and beneath the hierarchy. All of us are wishful for religious reform, a Catholicism made young again, a Christianity such as was established by the Apostles, the sole authentic interpreters of the preaching of Jesus. For us the Papacy is but a human institution; venerable if willing to renounce a past characterised by errors and dogmatic inventions; condemnable if obstinate in the haughtiness of its anti-Christian pretensions."

Proceeding, Abbé Bourrier says:—"We appeal to Catholics and to Protestants, to all who aspire to a religious rapprochement on an Apostolic basis, to all who are willing to work for the salvation of France by the Gospel. We do not say, 'Be Catholics, become Protestants.' We say, 'Let us be Christians!' Forms are of little value and prove nothing; conversion is everything. It is the heart that God demands. We reckon on adherents in nearly all the dioceses of the Church of France, in all the ranks of the clergy, in several monasteries and communities. We have even received a sympathetic testimony from a personage occupying a high position in the hierarchy."

Gathered Gold.

SPEAKING TO GOD.

Our thoughts and speeches in most things run to waste; yea, as water spilt on the ground is both lost, cannot be gathered up again, and is polluted, mingled with dust. But no word spoken to God is lost: He receives it, and returns it unto our bosom with advantage. A soul that delights to speak to Him will find that he also delights to speak to it.—Archbishop Leighton.

GOD IN GOVERNMENT.

God is his own Nemesis. He guards the ways of his own will. Men may refuse to walk in them, but God curses the man who counts him out. He blasts the democracy that is a democracy plus the devil, and overthrows a regime that repudiates human brotherhood. Democracy plus God equals theocracy. Democracy plus dollar equals plutocracy. Democracy plus devil equals anarchy.—Anon.

THE GREATNESS OF GOD.

It is because God is so very great that He can and does attend to each one's smallest care and sorrow. Each one soul is to Him as much as a world, and He can bend down with the same love and loftiness of sympathy on that one as if that one were all. The very greatness of the ocean enables it to fill to the full every creek and bay. It is thus that my littleness helps to set forth God's exceeding greatness; and his sympathy in my sorrow, and his marking every tear, all sets forth the immensity of his grace and compassion.—Dr. Andrew Bonar.

Day in the Country.—We have more than exhausted our fund for this object, and there are still some applicants for help. We shall be glad if any friends who desire to send a contribution will do so as early as possible.

Aldenham Institute.—The inaugural meeting of the nineteenth winter session of the Aldenham Institute was held on Saturday evening, at the Institute, Goldington-crescent, Pancras-road, Mr. James Robertson, the president, in the chair. The proceedings commenced with tea, after which the meeting was held and the prizes and certificates distributed. Mr. Robertson, in addressing the meeting, spoke of the necessity for all young men to make the best use of their evenings and to try to improve themselves and their positions. They should read good books, and avoid those novels which inflamed the imagination. He was glad that the most Christian-like fellows in the Institute were those who excelled at athletics. In addition to the Chairman's speech, the meeting was also addressed by Mr. F. Purchese and Rev. Alexander Connell, of Regent-square Presbyterian Church, and the proceedings were varied by several part songs by the Choral Society.

International S.S. Lessons.

October 17.

Paul before Felix.—Acts xxiv. 10-25.

Golden Text.—"Fear thou not, for I am with thee."—Isaiah xli. 10.

WHEN Paul was being judged by the Sanhedrim he saw that there were both Pharisees and Sadducees present, and he very skilfully divides his accusers by raising the question of the Resurrection. The Pharisees believed in it, the Sadducees did not. In the tumult which ensued Paul would have been torn to pieces but for the timely interference of the Roman guard, who carried him back to the castle. Foiled in this trial, some forty Jews vowed that they would neither eat nor drink until they had killed Paul. Paul's nephew, hearing of this conspiracy, bore the news to Lysias, who, in the dead of night, despatched Paul off to Cæsarea to be tried before the governor, Felix. When the accusers came down from Jerusalem they brought with them Tertullus, a skilled orator, acquainted with Latin and the forms of Roman law. In his address to Felix the lawyer charged Paul with being (1) a pestilent fellow; (2) a mover to sedition, an agitator all over the world; (3) A Nazarene; (4) a profaner of the Temple. As soon as these charges had been made, the Governor nodded to Paul that he should answer them (10).

I. Paul's Defence.—Emphasise the difference between Paul's introduction and that of Tertullus. No fulsome flattery here, but he puts himself on a good footing with his judge by referring to the many years' rule of Felix in Palestine, and inferring therefrom that the judge would know the kind of people he had to deal with (10). Note that Christians should always practise truthful courtesy. A cause is damaged by rude coarseness. Honesty need not be clothed in rough expressions. Christ was a gentleman. The men who raised the tumult were Asiatic Jews, who had probably heard Paul in some part of Asia Minor, and recognised him in the Temple. They were not present now to bear witness against him (18, 19). Paul is so conscious of his own innocence that he asks them to tell forth any evil thing he had done when before the Sanhedrim in Jerusalem (20). What a grand thing it is so to live that we have no fear of anything that can be said against us.

II. Paul's Confession.—Paul admitted charge 3 to the full. He worshipped the God of his fathers in "the way" which they called heresy (14). This expression—the way—had become common as a description of the Gospel of Christ. According to Paul, the Way was but a fulfilment of all that Moses and the Prophets wrote, and if the Jews had read their Old Testament with an unprejudiced mind they would have seen it to be so too. As Christ said, "They are they which testify of Me." We only read the Scriptures aright when we seek for Christ in them. If we use the Bible as a text-book of science or a handbook of history we may be disappointed with it, but those who read it to find Jesus, who is "the Way, the Truth, and the Life," never turn away without discovering the object of their search.

Paul also hoped for a Resurrection, but as the Pharisees had the same hope they could not charge that upon him as a crime (15). Paul points out that the hope had an important bearing on his every-day life. And "herein" (for this purpose) do I strive "to have a conscience void of offence."

Note that if we believe in the future life both for just and unjust we ought to live as though we expected to be judged for our conduct. "And every-one that hath this hope in him purifieth himself even as He is pure."

> Keep the great judgment-seat always in view.
> Look at your work as you'll look at it then,
> Scanned by Jehovah, and angels, and men.

III. Its Effect on Felix.—Felix knew something about "The Way," perhaps from Cornelius, and he determined to delay the verdict until he had more information. We learn from the latter part of this chapter, too, that he hoped for a bribe. Paul had brought alms to Jerusalem, his friends might also bring in a ransom (23). He sent for Paul several times to hint the subject, and on one such occasion, when Drusilla, the wrongful wife of Felix, was present, Paul spoke very strongly about purity (temperance), so much so that Felix was pricked in his conscience, and trembled (25). A "more convenient" time for listening to an unpleasant message, or doing an unpleasant duty, never comes to any of us. It never came to Felix.

Obituary.

MR. SAMUEL DICKIE, KELSO, N.B.

This highly respected Christian brother died at his residence on Friday week, after a brief illness. He was a man of sterling character, and eminently distinguished for his devoutness. He was always ready to help the poor and needy, the mourner, the sick, and the dying, and was ever willing to assist in every good cause. He gave liberally of his substance towards the advancement of Christ's kingdom. His remains were laid to rest in the presence of a large gathering of mourning friends.

REV. HENRY CHRISTIAN REICHARDT.

On September 29 this veteran missionary among God's ancient people passed to his rest. He had been connected with the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews since 1848. After first labouring in London, he served Jerusalem, Cairo, Corfu, Ancona, Alexandria, Damascus, and Tunis. In 1888 he retired from work in the mission field, and became curate of Winterbourne St. Martin, in Dorset. He preached his last sermon on behalf of the society and the work he loved so well in May last, and after a gradual decline of health died in his seventy-third year. As becomes a pupil of Dr. McCaul, matters rabbinic and rabbinic methods of controversy were at all times a favourite study. He never tired of contrasting the semi-Christian forms and ideals of ancient Judaism with its modern rationalistic equivalents and developments. In the interests of his perpetual controversy with the Jews, he accumulated ancient editions of Jewish books, in which much is found that has been expunged in later editions. Many will mourn his loss, not only as a brave champion of Christ, but as a bright and genial example of Christian piety.

GENERAL NEAL DOW.

The death is announced from Portland (Maine), at the age of ninety-three, of Mr. Neal Dow, the author of the Maine Liquor Law. Deceased was a descendant of an old Quaker family, settled at Portland. At Portland he was born, in Portland he passed his long life, and in Portland he has died. It was in 1851, while acting as mayor of that town, that he obtained the passage of his Bill, now known throughout the world as the Maine Liquor Law, which prohibits the manufacture, sale, and use of intoxicating drinks, with certain exceptions, within the State of Maine. In 1872, after twenty years' practice of prohibition, the law was officially reported to have greatly decreased drunkenness and rendered the trade disreputable, and in 1884 prohibition was, by a large majority, inserted as an article in the Constitution of the State. As ardent an abolitionist as he was a prohibitionist, he threw his whole energy, talents, and fortune into the cause of the North during the disastrous Civil War. He was twice wounded and once taken prisoner, remaining in confinement eight months before an exchange of prisoners obtained for him liberty. Neal Dow was twice Mayor of Portland, and twice a member of the Legislature of his State. Some few years since he was personally well known in this country from his appearance on the platforms of the United Kingdom Alliance, by whose invitation he made three visits to England in advocacy of the cause of "local option," spending nearly four years here and on the Continent, speaking eloquently and earnestly in the cause of temperance.

Requests for Prayer.

For blessing on a mission at Longwell's Green, near Bristol, by Mr. F. A. Glover, Oct. 17 to 31.

For a blessing on a mission at Heybridge now proceeding, being held by Mr. George Pell, of the Evangelisation Society.

For blessing on the People's Mission, Townsend-street, Old Kent-road, and for special meetings on Wednesday evening, Oct. 13.

For blessing on special services in the Mission Rooms, Hazelbury, Pencknett, October 10 to 17, by Mr. Roberts, Evangelisation Society.

Work on the River.—The missionaries of the Thames Church Mission visit every vessel that floats on the river, from the grand ten thousand ton liner to the smallest barges, sure of a welcome from all. If funds admit, the committee are most anxious to establish a mission room at Erith, and before long at Thames Haven. Two hundred pounds will pay for two mission rooms, and £150 a year for two missionaries to take charge. The secretary is Mr. F. Penfold, 31, New Bridge-street, E.C.

Evangelistic Notes.

A tent mission has recently been held in Peebles by Mr. M. Ferguson, assisted by two women workers of the Lanarkshire Christian Union. Much interest was awakened, and the labours of the evangelists were not without result.

For several weeks Mr. F. A. Glover, of Weston-super-Mare, has been holding services at Stoke St. Gregory, in a tent, in the open-air, and in the Baptist Chapel. Very gratifying numbers have been brought under the sound of the Gospel. A considerable number of children and adults have professed faith in Christ and believers have been greatly blessed. Mr. Glover has been assisted by various friends.

Mr. Wm. Forbes has completed an eight days' mission in the U.P. Church, Springburn, Glasgow. His Bible readings in the afternoon were much appreciated, and his evening meetings kept increasing to the close.

Mr. Thos. Payne has concluded a week's special mission at Highgate Assembly Hall for the promotion of the spiritual life, in which Rev. J. Gregory Mantle, Mr. H. W. Fry, Mr. Martin, and others took part. Much blessing has been received.

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh has concluded a ten days' mission in the West Hendon Baptist Church. All the meetings were well attended. Believers were refreshed and strengthened, and sinners converted. A special feature of the work were the meetings for men on the Sunday afternoons and those for women on the Wednesday afternoons.

Mr. J. W. Moodie opened the winter campaign at Trinity Free Church, Edinburgh, on Sabbath, September 12. His labours were much used of God. Night after night there were anxious seekers after God, and many professed to have found Him. Mr. Moodie was followed on September 19 by the Brothers Weaver, who laboured with us a fortnight. Their visit was doubly interesting this season, because of the widespread interest in the results of their former visit, and also because of the recent publication of the Life of their father the late Richard Weaver. The addresses of Mr. B. F. Weaver were Scriptural and searching, and were delivered with burning earnestness. The solos of Mr. Frank Weaver, rendered with exquisite taste, left on the meeting the impression of blended power and pathos. The good work continued and deepened every night; many waited till the after-meeting to seek salvation.

N. M.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has been conducting an eight days' mission at Linden-grove Church, Peckham Rye (Rev. J. C. Postans, pastor), which was concluded last Sunday.

The Evangelical Free Church Council for Marylebone district have completed arrangements for a week of special evangelistic effort. The whole district is being visited. Five centres are chosen where a missioner will preach every evening. At Marlborough-place Presbyterian Church Rev. Darlow Sarjeant preaches, and Rev. Mr. Tindall gives the afternoon Bible readings. The churches allied with the centre are Abbey-road (Baptist), Greville-place (Congregational), St. John's Wood-terrace (Congregational). At Hinde-street (Wesleyan) Dr. Monro Gibson preaches every evening, and Rev. H. E. Stone gives the afternoon Bible readings. Trinity Chapel, John-street, Edgware-road; Victoria (Wesleyan), High-street, St. John's Wood; Church-street, Lisson-grove, are the other centres. The Mission begins October 10 by united communion services, at 3.30, in Hinde-street Chapel and Marlborough-place. Preliminary united prayer meetings will be held, and much prayer is being offered for the display of God's saving power.

A Jewish Gambler.—In the "London City Mission Magazine" for October an account is given of the Society's work among Jews in London. In illustration a very interesting case is given of the conversion of a Polish Jew, a barber and an inveterate gambler. The first seed seems to have been sown by a Christian employer who spoke to him of Christ. Then Mr. Bergmann, of the London City Mission, got hold of him and after much effort was the means of leading him and his wife to a full acceptance of Christ.

The Children and Invalids' Dinner Table, 60, Paddington-street, High-street, Marylebone, W., reports that from November last to end of April 2912 dinners, 568 pints of beef-tea, 1625 pints of rice milk, and 6929 gallons of soup were served, of which 1922 tickets for free admission to the benefits of the dinner and soup kitchen were sent to the dispensaries and schools in the neighbourhood, to be distributed amongst the sickly and destitute. The kitchen will shortly open for the season. The secretary is Lady Thompson, 35, Wimpole-street, W.

Letters to the Editor.

THE B.W.T.A. AND LADY HENRY SOMERSET.

Sir,—In reply to the criticism in your issue of September 16 of the action of the B.W.T.A. with regard to the revival of the C.D. Acts in India, will you allow me space for an explanation of the present position—as I understand it—of that Association.

At our annual council in June last the following resolution was passed by an overwhelming majority:—

"That this Council declares its continued opposition to the re-establishment of the C.D. Acts in India, and strongly urges the bringing forward prominently of proposals for dealing by moral methods with the causes of immorality and disease. It further protests against the sanction of the Government being given to any regulations dealing with the examination and registration of women, previous to such regulations being laid before Parliament for discussion by the House of Commons."

And subsequently the resolution adopted by the British Committee for the Abolition of State Regulation was passed by many of our branches, and sent to Lord Geo. Hamilton, Lord Salisbury, and others; a petition to Parliament being also numerously signed.

When our departmental system of work was adopted in 1893 it was with the distinct understanding that "no department should be binding upon any branch, each being at liberty to choose their own work, while all remained true to the total abstinence pledge, which is the foundation-stone of the Association." When, therefore, Lady Henry Somerset tendered her resignation in July, a special meeting of the National Executive was held in London, and, after hearing the President's statement, the following resolution was passed, very few votes being against it:—

"That the National Executive adheres to the principles re-affirmed by the Council at its last meeting, namely, that of uncompromising hostility to the whole system of State regulation of vice, by whomsoever suggested; but inasmuch as temperance reform is the primary question affecting the constitution and membership of the Association, this executive expresses its continued confidence in Lady Henry Somerset as President of the National British Women's Temperance Association, and earnestly hopes that she will continue to hold that office."

Lady Henry then withdrew her resignation, and therefore continues to be our leader for temperance reform.

Your article says: "It might have been thought that with such a body of able, intelligent, and zealous women ... no action could have been taken that would strengthen any of these evils, without a prompt and vehement protest being made against it by these new champions of purity of living." Many of our members are anything but new to this work, and what do the above resolutions mean, if they are not a "prompt and vehement protest"?

As to the statement that we have been brought into a false position by our President, your article acknowledges that Lady Henry's utterance was "on her sole responsibility." How then could it compromise the 100,000 women of the B.W.T.A.? That there should be any difference of opinion amongst us is, I am sure, an unspeakable sorrow to all; but if we are to wait until that multitude of women see eye to eye on about twenty-eight departments of work, we may as well sit down and idly wait for the Millennium.

Your article suggests that we can only "save the situation" by being "absolutely loyal to Christ." It is in that spirit alone that we endeavour to carry on our work. Our Association stands to-day where it always has stood—"in uncompromising hostility to the principles of State regulation"; but having agreed not to make any department binding on any branch, could we consistently make one binding on any individual, from the President downward? Acknowledging gratefully the magnificent services Lady Henry Somerset has rendered to the temperance cause, we give her our continued confidence, believing that her motives and desires for the right are beyond question, however impossible we find it to look at this matter from her standpoint. Your question as to "whether she has adequately realised that the well-being of mankind is best promoted by maintaining the spiritual forces in purity and vigour" would have been impossible had the writer known the woman to whom he was referring.

We are banded together to work in the spirit of the Gospel for total abstinence, and, that pledge being faithfully kept, the acceptance or otherwise of any department, however important, by any branch or individual cannot constitutionally be deemed a sufficient reason for withdrawal or resignation. The vast importance of this subject must be my excuse for the length of this letter. Thanking you in advance for its insertion, faithfully yours,

Sarah Milne, Hon. Sec.

"THE SECRET OF THE LORD."

Dear Sir,—Reading one day Anna Shipton's inspiring little book, "The Secret of the Lord,"* I looked up the various Scriptures which allude to or describe this precious and wonderful treasure.

The earliest passage, in point of date, is in Job xv. 8, "Hast thou heard the secret (R.V. secret counsel) of God?" asks Eliphaz of the patient sufferer. In ch. xxix. Job exclaims, "Oh, that I were in the months of old, as in the days when God watched over me, and by his light I walked through darkness...When the secret of God was upon my tent" (R.V.). Job's trying experience is often the lot of saints of this day, whose characters are "perfected through suffering."

With reverent awe, Moses, at the age of 120 years, ready to be gathered into the garner of Paradise, sums up two vast truths in a few words in Deut. xxix. v. 29, when he tells the Israelites, "The secret things belong unto the Lord our God; but the things that are revealed belong to us, and to our children for ever." The title-text of this paper is David's testimony of a lifetime, and is echoed by Amos, the herdsman of Tekoa, chap. iii. 7, "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secrets unto his servants the prophets;" and by the eight passages in the book of Daniel, which testify of secrets revealed unto that most faithful, courageous, and truthful servant of God in exile. The Prince of Tyre is warned of God through Ezekiel, "Because thine heart is lifted up, and thou hast said, "I am God, I sit in the seat of God...Yet thou art man, and not God...behold thou art wiser than Daniel; there is no secret they can hide from thee...Thou shalt die the deaths of the uncircumcised by the hand of strangers." Here is the punishment of presumption, and the forewarning to the Antichrist of the future.

Our precious Saviour revealed to his chosen circle of faithful ones (Matt xiii. 35) "things kept secret from the foundation of the world," and many, many spiritual secrets were revealed by the Paraclete from and after the day of Pentecost. The Holy Spirit still works and reveals to the believer who hides in the shadow of the Almighty, in the closet where Jesus alone enters, secret things.

It would be helpful if some of your readers who know experimentally the secrets of the Lord, would communicate their deliverances from peril, accident, serious illness, moral and spiritual danger, from privation, and so forth, for the encouragement of weaker fellow-believers.

SCRIPTURE CARTOONS FOR CHINA.

Dear Sir,—Many readers have evinced an interest in the Scripture Cartoon scheme for China, an account of which appeared in a recent issue. A very large number have written offering help in the hand-colouring of these 9000 preaching cartoons. These offers, coming from all parts of the kingdom, and even from the Continent, have already guaranteed the painting of between 3000 and 4000 cartoons. Most of these have been already distributed, and are now in the hands of the volunteer painters.

As I am leaving for China this week, all communications should in future be addressed to the China Inland Mission, Newington Green, London, N., who have kindly agreed to forward this enterprise, which, it will be remembered, is of equal value to all missionaries among the Chinese, irrespective of church or society. In all such communications the word "Cartoon" should be written in the corner of the envelope.

For the guidance of those interested in the scheme, two circulars have been printed. Circular one deals with the scheme generally; circular two consists of important hints and suggestions in the matter of colouring. Anyone desiring either or both of these circulars should write to the China Inland Mission, enclosing a stamped addressed envelope.

I take this opportunity of warmly thanking all those who have so readily responded to my appeal, and dedicated time and talents to the furtherance of this special effort for the evangelization of China.—Yours in the Master's service,

William Wilson, M.B., C.M.

Drawn to Jesus.

(From the German.)

How sweet the peace, how great the bliss,
How undisturbed the rest—
What perfect happiness is his
Who lies on Jesu's breast!

Thou lover of my soul, I feel
That Thou art all to me;
No words sufficiently reveal
What bliss is found in Thee!

My heart expands when it perceives
That Thou, my Lord, art near;
With rapturous joy my bosom heaves
If Thou to me appear.

Oh, come, my Jesus, nearer still,
For Thee I love alone;
My heart with thy blest presence fill,
And make our spirits one.

My whole desire is towards thy name;
My true felicity,
I find in love's ecstatic flame,
Which draws my heart to Thee.

Still higher let that flame arise,
Until life's course is run;
Then shall it shine above the skies
More brilliant than the sun.

Literature for Soldiers in India.—The daily requests from our British soldiers at the frontier for papers and books are so numerous, that the expense and the difficulty in obtaining suitable papers in India have induced me to ask, through The Christian, if friends will not kindly post some papers weekly. They need not essentially be all new, but magazines and picture papers, or others, of healthy Christian tone, which the soldiers so keenly appreciate, but can so seldom secure. As I am working among soldiers in India, I shall be most grateful to receive such, and am certain if the great need were known, many would kindly send.—(Miss) C. A. Lowdell, Robin's Nest, Murree, Punjab, India.

The Niger C.M.S. Mission.—The call for a medical man to take service on the Niger is yet unanswered. The door is wide open; the people are prepared to accept such help with gladness; there are those already on the field who would give willing assistance and the need is very great. If the associations of the Niger are those of considerable peril by reason of climatic conditions, so much the stronger is the appeal for the help of the men who are best fitted to guide under such conditions, and whose wisdom and experience might lead to a diminution of the risks attendant on mission service in that region. Above all, the opportunity for direct mission work among multitudes of the sick and suffering is a very large one, and should commend the appeal to brethren who are seeking a post of honourable service. Fuller information may be obtained from Miss Maxwell, Culgruff, Crossmichael, N.B.

People's Mission Hall, Old Kent Road.—I am visiting in my spare time the very poor and neglected people living in the blocks of dwellings in the crowded district at the bottom of Townsend-street, Old Kent-road, and invite them to the Gospel services. The prevailing ignorance and indifference is heart-rending, the great majority being bound by force of habit, family cares, and neglect of the Lord's day. Sunday is the hardest day of the week for the poor mothers, and their faces, most of them, full of care and anxiety, manifest the sad truth of their struggle for existence. When I invite them they often plead they would, but cannot. As to the men, absolute indifference is their prevailing sin, some pronounced infidels, others with wild ideas about Socialism. To them also it is our privilege to warn and speak the truth in love, and I believe the Lord blesses the Word to some of them. We need greatly the help of some Christian sister to come and visit (voluntarily) the poor women in the district, and also to undertake a mothers' meeting one afternoon in the week at the Mission.

The Y.M.C.A.

Mr. R. C. Mills has been appointed secretary o the Gloucester Association.

The Blackburn Association, which has now 125 members, has issued a full and attractive programme for the coming winter session.

The newly-acquired central Association premises at 43, Upper Sackville-street, Dublin, have been completely and handsomely furnished.

Efforts which were being made in Lesmahagow by a number of friends for the formation of a Y.M.C.A. have now been crowned with success.

Pastor D. N. Stearns, of Philadelphia, U.S.A., appears (according to "The Young Men of India") to have had remarkable meetings in Calcutta.

A meeting was held at Warrington on Wednesday afternoon, at the invitation of Mr. J. Charlton Parr, J.P., for the purpose of developing Y.M.C.A. work in Lancashire.

A new Association has been started at Llandrindod Wells. In the Welsh districts Associations are also in course of formation at Mountain Ash, Ystrad, and Ffynnongroew.

Rev. F. B. Meyer recommences his Saturday afternoon Bible classes for young men at the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A., at three o'clock, on the 9th inst. The average attendance at the class in past sessions has been from 250 to 300.

The Cardiff Y.M.C.A. on Wednesday evening signalised the opening of a new winter session by a very successful soirée and meeting, held at the Cory Memorial Hall. Since the appointment of Mr. Walter Price as general secretary a year ago the membership has increased by 255, so that the privileges of the Association are now enjoyed by 480 members.

The sittings of the National Council following the recess were resumed on Friday under the presidency of Sir George Williams. Representatives were present from London and the provinces, and meetings were held throughout the day in furtherance of various departments of the work. The reports of the travelling secretaries of efforts in different parts of the country contained much that afforded interest and encouragement in relation to the work of the forthcoming winter.

On Thursday afternoon the Colonial and Foreign Committee of the National Council held a meeting, at which it was provisionally arranged to send a worker to Egypt and Palestine in the early months of 1898, to promote work in behalf of young men in various important cities in those countries. Subsequently a conference was held between members of the Y.M.C.A. National Council and the Committee of the British College Christian Union, with the object of rendering possible the fuller co-operation of the two organisations.

The annual meeting of the Dundee Association was held on Friday. The report read by Mr. W. Stewart set forth that during the past year the work of the institution had been carried on with genuine heartiness, although it might not be possible to speak so confidently of definite results as the directors should like to do. The educational classes, which were quite a feature of the work for the young men of the city, showed a large increase of students—to such an extent, indeed, that it became necessary to stop enrolment in some of the classes.

The mission to men conducted throughout this week at Exeter Hall, and to be continued until October 8, by Pastor W. Y. Fullerton, of Leicester, has drawn large gatherings from night to night, while very many have assembled also for the meetings held between 1 and 2 o'clock each day. The addresses of the missioner, and the impressions that have apparently been created, have been such as to greatly encourage the workers, and to give cause for the deepest thankfulness. The mission inaugurates the winter's work, for which a full programme has been arranged.

Stores Prayer Union.—The fifth annual meeting was held on Tuesday week in the Lecture-hall of the Sunday-school Union, Old Bailey. The attendance was larger than usual. The report told of blessing received, of increased facilities for the weekly meetings, and of plans for increasing the influence of the Union.

Missionary Training.—The story of the Melbourne Missionary Training Home for Women is told in a little paper (with an introduction by Rev. H. B. Macartney). From this we learn that since the opening of the Home in 1892, 61 candidates have been received, representing seven denominations. Eighteen are now in training, but before the year closes it is hoped twelve of these will have "left for the front." The students obtain practical experience in the Collingwood Medical Mission. The directors are Dr. and Mrs. Warren, 90, Gore-street, Melbourne.

Christian Endeavour.

It is proposed to hold the World C.E. Convention for 1900 in London.

The National Council has held, in connection with the local Union, an important convention in Hull. The District Union reported 1536 members.

The Bradford and District Union has decided to approach the licensing authorities of Bradford with a view to the prohibition of the sale of intoxicants to children under thirteen years of age.

The Shut-in Friend is a little monthly published by Charles T. Zepp, of Melrose, Md., for the help of the sick. An Endeavour department has been established, with the intention of founding a Shut-in Endeavour band. The Christian Endeavour pledge is provided for the signature of these Endeavourers, omitting the portions to which an invalid could not subscribe—those, that is, that relate to church-going and taking part in services.

The third annual meeting of the Birkenhead and District Union was held in the Town Hall on Friday week. The retiring president (Rev. E. Peake) took the chair. Mrs. Hinchliffe gave an address to the Juniors on "The Watchwords of Three Nations." England—Duty; America—Progress; France—Glory. Her address was illustrated by a flag display. Rev. Dr. Brook, of Bristol, in the course of an address on "A Disciplined Christian," said, "The object of the Christian Endeavour movement is to make men."

Personalia.

Mr. J. Ball (recently of Wood Green) has entered upon his work as evangelist at Union Hall, Carlisle-street, off Edgware-road. Home address, 155, Carlton-vale, Kilburn, N.W.

Dr. Baedeker proposes leaving England once again to visit several places in Germany, and thence to proceed to Finnland and Russia. He will be grateful for the prayerful remembrance of the servants of God.

Rev. Thomas Evans, from India, with a view to the consolidation of the "penny-a-week" system in Wales, prolongs his stay at home, and will officiate pro tem. as pastor of a church in his native town, Newport, Pembroke.

Shoreditch Christian Mission.

The report of the work at the Mission House, Hoxton, N., tells of earnest and loving work amongst poor women, many deeply interesting incidents being given. Much distress has been relieved, and many have been won to Christ. The evening classes have been regularly held, the sewing class being specially liked by the girls. The open-air meetings have again been held during the summer. "We hesitate to speak positively of conversions, but know that God's Spirit has touched some hearts. Several have come into the Mission House after the meetings, for prayer and personal dealing. The children in the Sunday School always occupy a warm place in our hearts. Though as years pass on they go to work, or move into another neighbourhood, younger ones taking their places, the link with former scholars in many instances is not broken. They know we still love them, and are interested in their best welfare."

The secretary is Miss A. S. Catlin, 24, Charles Square, Hoxton, N.

A Unique Service was held at the "Art Journal" office, 294, City-road, on Sept. 30, in connection with weekly Bible-classes held for the young men and young women of the firm. The service was in the form of a harvest thanksgiving. The members took up the idea with enthusiasm, and the result was a display of fruit and flowers, which afterwards was passed on to gladden the hearts of the inmates of the Fistula Hospital, next door. The president, Mr. Thompson, gave a thoroughly practical address; and the Misses Bristow still further enlivened the meeting by their beautiful singing. The workers in the above work are generously supported by their esteemed employers in their labour of love.

Sailors' Rest, Rotherhithe, S.E.—The second annual report has been issued. The Rest has been a refuge and shelter to tired and tried workers on the mighty deep. During the year forty-seven meetings were held on shipboard, with an attendance of 492 seamen; 247 meeting were held on shore with an attendance of 1409 seamen and 6175 landspeople; 109 temperance pledges were signed, and 3180 visits were paid to ships. Bibles, Testaments, and Scripture portions were circulated to the number of 2734, and many thousands of tracts. Situated near to the dock entrance from the river, and in the poorest district of Rotherhithe, there is a great need for this work.

Scottish Notes.

It is proposed to erect a Livingstone Institute at Blantyre, where the great missionary traveller was born, as a memorial of his life work.

A special Gospel Mission is about to be held simultaneously in all the Free Churches of Dundee. Similar efforts are to be made at Free East Church, Aberdeen; St. Enoch's, Glasgow; and Renfrew.

Seven young men have left Edinburgh, one going to Mr. Moody's Bible Institute, Chicago, and six to Rev. A. B. Simpson's Institute, New York. It is their intention to go abroad to the heathen after some training. Mr. B. McCall Barbour has been much used among young lads in the city.

Dr. McKilliam, of Blackheath, has given a series of fifteen lectures on the Lord's Second Coming in the Railway Mission Hall, Abbey Hill, Edinburgh. The hall was crowded night after night; great interest was awakened. The addresses were characterised by much simplicity and clearness. At nearly every meeting souls were awakened and led to trust the Saviour.

At a temperance conference in Glasgow last week some of the speakers urged that the existing laws should be administered with much greater justice and rigour. One speaker unfavourably compared the state of things in this country with that of some parts of the continent. During the whole of a recent tour in Germany, Russia, Sweden, Norway, and Denmark he had not seen half a dozen drunken men.

The Bible booth of the Religious Tract and Book Society of Scotland has during the past season been erected at Glasgow Fair, Kilmarnock Fair, Paisley Races, Dumbarton Show, Ayr Races, and Lanark Races. There were sold 430 Bibles, 1660 New Testaments, and among other religious books, 605 "Grace Abounding to the Chief of Sinners," 724 "Pilgrim's Progress," while 45,500 tracts were distributed.

Interesting meetings have been held in Edinburgh during the past week in connection with the departure of a number of missionaries to the regions beyond. Three ladies go to Ceylon in connection with the Ceylon and Indian General Mission. Three ladies go to India in connection with the Church of Scotland Women's Association for Foreign Missions, and seven go out under the auspices of the Free Church Society.

Irish Notes.

Rev. John Hall, of New York, has sailed for America after paying his annual visit to Ireland.

A vigorous evangelistic mission has been held in Ballymacarett Methodist church by Revs. Henry Ball and W. E. Daly.

Rev. W. B. Collins, of North India, has been giving a series of interesting addresses on behalf of the Church Missionary Society in the Midland counties.

The missionary to the deaf and dumb in the South of Ireland has succeeded by dint of effort in obtaining funds to open a mission room, in which he holds a service every Sunday afternoon for the deaf and dumb in Cork.

The annual meetings in connection with the Young People's Guild of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland have been held in Belfast, and have been largely attended by delegates of both sexes. The object of the guild is to supply a missing link between the Sabbath-school and the Church, and to get young people to connect themselves with the Church and engage in Christian work at the most critical period of their lives. During the proceedings two able addresses were delivered by Dr. John Smith, of Edinburgh.

Missionary Conference, Exeter Hall.

The conference on missions, arranged for by the Y.M.C.A., will be held at Exeter Hall next week. We append an outline of the programme of subjects:—

Wednesday, Oct. 13, 11 a.m., Central Africa; 1 p.m., work amongst Women in India; 3 p.m., zenana and students' work in India; 7.30 p.m. public meeting, Mrs. Bishop and others.

Friday, October 15, 11 a.m., Polynesia, Madagascar, Malaysia, etc.; 1 p.m., medical missions; 3 p.m., West, North, and South Africa; 7.30 p.m., mass meeting of young men.

Meetings for praise and prayer each morning at 10 a.m.

THE BOOK WORLD.

OCTOBER MAGAZINES.

Bubbles. (6d. 158, Aldersgate-street.) Highly-coloured pictures are the great feature of Dr. Barnardo's attractive monthly for boys and girls.

The Fireside, among its varied contents, has a useful article against auricular confession, entitled "Private Consultation: Its Dangers and Advantages." (6d. "Home Words" Office.)

The Preacher's Magazine. (4d. C. H. Kelly.) Rev. J. T. L. Maggs contributes a deeply-interesting Bible word-study on "Blasphemy," and Rev. J. D. Clapperton continues his suggestive articles on "Pitfalls in Bible English."

Sunday Hours (6d. R.T.S.) keeps well up to the mark in variety of attractive reading and in illustration. The Boy's Sunday Monthly (1d.) has a very readable account of "A Sunday at Rugby" and "A Mystery of the Goodwin Sands."

The Sunday Magazine has inter alia an excellent and well-illustrated article on Miss Weston's work in the Royal Navy, and an appreciative sketch of the Methodist Forward Mission in Edinburgh, under the leadership of Rev. George Jackson.

In The King's Own, Rev. W. Profeit answers the question, "Was Matter Created?" and Rev. D. Gath Whitley writes on "The Oldest Human Settlement in Europe"—Solutré, in the valley of the Saone, in Eastern France. This number completes the eighth volume. (6d. Marshall Bros.)

In The Church Missionary Intelligencer there is an instructive article by Archdeacon Warren on the evangelisation of Japan; and a correspondence on the alleged sinlessness of Mohammed, which will be of service to many missionaries, as showing that this dogma is opposed to the plain teaching of the Koran itself. (6d. C.M.S. House.)

Evangelical Christendom, the organ of the Evangelical Alliance, in addition to thoughtful notes on current topics, and news from different countries, gives an instructive sermon by Canon Bell, on "Union with Christ," and another by the late Rev. Thomas Jones (Swansea) on "Ye are Complete in Him." (6d. J, S. Phillips, 121, Fleet-street.)

The Missionary Review of the World for this month (1s. Funk & Wagnalls) is specially rich in information regarding Persia and Arabia, with accounts of mission work in those countries. Dr. Pierson sketches the life of the late Ion Keith Falconer, and Vladimir Solovief writes on Church and State in Russia. Taken as a whole, the number is very instructive.

In The Clergyman's Magazine Principal Moule continues his luminous studies on the Epistle to the Colossians. Besides several sermons, there is a "prophetic study" of the Lambeth Conference, by Rev. Gordon Proctor, who thinks that in course of time the Anglican Communion will supplant the Papal power in the supremacy of Christendom, and exercise a dominion as universal as any Pope has done, and wiser, more reasonable, and more Scriptural. (6d. Hodder & Stoughton.)

The Young Man (3d. Horace Marshall & Co.) has a medical symposium on the injuriousness or otherwise of smoking; the weight of the argument, to our mind, decidedly goes against the use of tobacco. The same number has a thoroughgoing and common sense "Letter to a Young Preacher," by Dr. Parker. The current issue of The Young Woman (3d.) begins a new volume with a very full table of contents. One article is devoted to an account of East-end match-box makers, and there is a very diverting interview with Louis Wain, the artist in cats. Mrs. Fenwick Miller contributes a character sketch of the Duchess of Sutherland. In the Home Messenger (1d.) Mr. Meyer has a sermon on amusements, and there is a short sketch, with portrait, of Mr. George Müller.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

The Young Crusader, vol. VI.; this is the C.E.T.S. organ for Bands of Hope. The bound volume, illuminated (1s.), will make a pleasing reward book.

Bright Eyes, a charming annual for the little folks, whom its bright pictures and pleasing stories will delight, instruct, and amuse. "My Journey to Capetown" will, however, interest bigger boys as well. (G. Stoneman. 2s. 6d. and 4s.)

Home Words is an old favourite, and the new volume is as bright and wholesome as any of its predecessors. The editor, Rev. Charles Bullock, is the author of some instructive papers, amply illustrated, on the early days of Christianity in our islands. (2s. "Home Words" Office.)

Chums, the well-known illustrated paper for boys, makes an annual volume of gigantic size. Stories, serial and otherwise, are numerous, and the other features will have equally strong attractions for buoyant lads. The words and deeds of famous men are presented, and there are interviews on scores of subjects relating to work and play. There are also many "True Fire Brigade Yarns," and articles on pets and their treatment. (8s. Cassell & Co.)

Messrs. Partridge's Annuals.—These monthlies for young and old are veritable institutions in many homes. The annual volumes, good within and attractive without, cannot be surpassed for presentation purposes, in the nursery and the Christian home. For the little ones there is The Infants' Magazine, and for their growing brothers and sisters, The Children's Friend (each 1s. 6d., 2s., and 2s. 6d. according to binding). The Friendly Visitor, in bold type, and The Family Friend (incorporating "The Mother's Companion") with fuller pages, will be welcome in homes of all grades (1s., 2s., and 2s. 6d.) Then, there is The British Workman (1s. 6d. and 2s. 6d.), and The Band of Hope Review (1s. and 2s.), both of them well on the way to their golden jubilee.

RUSSIAN HORRORS.

Two books are before us which make us feel exceedingly thankful that we were not born subjects of the Czar. Christian Martyrdom in Russia (1s. nett. Brotherhood Publishing Co.) is an account from reliable sources of the persecution of the "Spirit Wrestlers in the Caucasus," of whose trials the newspapers have recently informed us. This worthy, if somewhat obscure, sect in Russia endeavours to carry out in daily life the precepts of the Christian Gospel as they understand them. They refuse to serve in the army, and the autocratic government of the empire think to suppress this deadly civil heresy by extreme measures of persecution and repression. It is a pitiful narrative, and it shocks one to think it possible in this age of advanced knowledge and toleration. We hope the little work (which includes a contribution from Tolstoy) will find many readers. All profits of publication go to a fund for relieving the deep needs of these simple-hearted and patient people.

We are more familiar with the sorrows of the Stundists, but most readers will learn much from the other volume, by Hesba Stretton, In the Hollow of His Hand (R.T.S.), which graphically describes the ruthless oppression of these Russian Christians and the horrors they undergo in banishment to Siberia. It makes one's blood boil with indignation that such heartless cruelties should be practised in the name of a so-called Christian Church. Doubtless it will prove true, as ever, that "the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the Church," but that does not relieve us as Christians from our plain duty towards these persecuted fellow-disciples of Jesus Christ.

Part six of The Queen's Empire (6d. Cassell & Co.) gives representative specimens of the homes of the Queen and her people, from a room in Windsor Castle to the huts in a Kaffir kraal.

Under the title of Sacred Art, Part 1 (6d.), Messrs. Cassell & Co. have begun the serial issue of pictures reproduced from the works of modern painters, representing the chief scenes in Bible story.

A South African Boy, or Schoolboy Life in Natal, by "Natalian" (2s. 6d. Marshall, Russell & Co.), introduces the reader to various phases of life in South Africa, many of which will prove especially interesting to the young folk.

The Keswick Week (2s. nett. Marshall Brothers). Into this goodly volume are gathered most of the addresses given at and in connection with the last Keswick Conference. It forms a very substantial memorial of a blessed week.

Ramji. (1s. T. Fisher Unwin.) A "tragedy of the Indian famine," which makes very painful reading, must surely move many hearts to pity and help. Those who would know what famine actually means should not miss this bit of terrible realism.

The Pilgrim's Progress, by John Bunyan, with appendixes on the various editions and on antecedent and subsequent allegories, has been added to the red cover series of Messrs. Bliss, Sands, & Co. (2s.) There are numerous illustrations, also a brief biographical introduction.

His Majesty's Beggars.—By M. E. Ropes. A simple well-conceived story of Russian life, illustrating the hardships of peasants and the winning power of the Gospel. Farm by the Wood.—By Scarlet Potter. A pleasing story of rural life and of a little runaway girl. (1s. each. Partridge & Co.)

Mona St. Claire.—By Annie B. Armstrong. (3s. 6d. F. Warne and Co.) A story of girl life. Motherless girls, who, after many vicissitudes, reach high position and wealth. The escapades of one of them, who is a somnambulist, lend mystery and variety to the tale. The book will be a welcome gift to most girls.

Brief Sketches of C.M.S. Workers. We welcome Miss Emily Headland's excellent papers as collected in this goodly volume. (3s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.) Here are the stories of twenty-five of the right honourables of the C.M.S., representing every part of the great field, and in almost every case a portrait accompanies the biographical sketch. Rev. H. E. Fox, hon. sec. of the Society, contributes a hearty preface.

The Preachers of To-day. (Nisbet & Co. 1s. 6d.) Here we have the first of a projected series to include sermons by Archdeacon Sinclair, Rev. F. B. Meyer, Rev. E. A. Stuart, etc. No. 1, now published, contains "The Glory of the Lord" and other sermons, by Canon Eyton, whose faithful and fluent utterances will charm and instruct many readers.

Sandy Scott's Bible Class. (Bliss, Sands & Co. 1s.) Rugged and rough these talks may seem, in their dialectic address—"Braid Scots"—but there is real grit in them. Moreover, they are fair specimens of the homely but trenchant teaching in many a Scottish village Bible class where the ploughman leader knows his Bible if he knows little else.

The Church of England Temperance Society send Juvenile Reciters and Dialogues (1s.) containing 100 poems, original and selected, for well suited use at Band of Hope and similar meetings. Defeat and Victory (4d.), by Marie Robinson, and The Quest, by Miss O'Connor Morris, form part of a new service of temperance song. Band of Hope Outline Addresses (4d.) will prove most useful to young speakers.

Inspired through Suffering. By Rev. David O. Mears, D.D. (2s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.) These chapters on the value of life's discipline constitute a singularly bracing study. Every page breathes courage and hope and the faith that realises the unseen. Such utterances are a capital antidote to all timorous or pessimistic tendencies. No one can rise from the perusal of the book without feeling stronger for the work and warfare of life.

Bringing in Sheaves, by Rev. A. B. Earle, is a volume which should be read by all earnest workers for Christ, and many will rejoice that it has been reissued in a convenient form. The first chapter answers the question, "How can I best Promote a Revival?" and the last enlarges upon "The Rest of Faith." The twelve intervening chapters, rich in teaching and illustrative incident, tell the story of earnest sowing and reaping, not overlooking the sorrows and joys. This is an eminently practical and purposeful book, calculated to give useful direction to the lives of learners in the school of Christ. (1s. and 1s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.)

The Emphasized Bible. By Joseph Bryant Rotherham. With commendable promptness the second, third, and fourth parts, completing the New Testament, have been issued by Mr. H. R. Allenson (2s. each part). We recently described the work in some detail, so it will suffice now to say that it is throughout characterised by scrupulous care and general excellence. The translation is the result of conscientious labour extended over many years and in view of the latest research; and the means adopted to indicate emphasis, both idiomatic and logical, are remarkably successful and delicately applied. The appendix considers in a thoughtful manner several important questions, some of them much controverted; and though we would not be held to agree with every position assumed, we are glad to believe that this section, as well as the work in its entirety, will be of great service to students. It is to be hoped that the translator will be encouraged to carry through his version of the Old Testament, adjusted to the newly-revised Massoretico-Critical Hebrew text of Dr. Ginsburg.

How can You be Saved? By W. W. Fereday. (T. Weston. 1d.) A plain word, commending and enforcing the Gospel of salvation to everybody.

The Fireside and Home Words Almanacks are useful wall-sheets. The former is coloured, and costs three halfpence; the latter is also very attractive, and costs a penny. ("Home Words" publishing Office.)

Scripture Characters Roll. By Albert Midlane. (Wheeler.) Hymns set in large type and arranged for hanging on the wall—say of the nursery or schoolroom—so that the young people may see before them, read, learn, and remember simple lessons from Bible characters.

At Pretoria the deputation had an interview with President Kruger. During the visit to Johannesburg large meetings were held to welcome the deputation from England.

Rev. Dr. Leach has finished the first eight months of his ministry at Cavendish Chapel, Manchester. During these eight months the aspect of the whole place has been completely changed, and many hundreds of people have been added to the congregation. On the Sunday evenings in September the large building has been comfortably filled, and seats are letting almost every week. With the support of the deacons and officers he has been able to start many new movements, and he is now considering and preparing rules for a number of provident thrift societies for the benefit of the people who crowd the populous district in which the chapel stands. Public-houses are more numerous in the "D" district, in which Cavendish Chapel is located, than in any other in Manchester. It was recently reported by the police department that in this district there are 426 liquor-sellers who offer sweets and toys to children who buy beer at their houses. Dr. Leach is anxious to employ a number of agents to work among the people as soon as he can see his way to the necessary funds. He could find work for half-a-dozen sisters, for a good ministerial assistant, and one or two good lay missionaries.

At Avenue Hall, Bush-hill-park, Enfield, special services were held on Sunday, September 26, when the new minister, Pastor B. Farringdon, preached both morning and evening. The attention was most marked, and much blessing followed. On Monday a public meeting was held to welcome the new pastor, Mr. R. L. Wates. An old friend of the hall occupied the chair, while Revs. G. W. White and J. T. Peace gave addresses.

Services in connection with the fifth anniversary of the settlement of Rev. John Felmingham at Northcote-road, Wandsworth Common, were held last week. On Wednesday a service was held in the afternoon, conducted by Rev. C. B. Sawday. Subsequently a large gathering took place in the chapel, at which Mr. George Joy presided, and which was addressed by Revs. David Llewellyn, of Brighton, and John Wilson, of Woolwich.

Since 1891, a good work has been doing under the care of Rev. F. B. Monti on the north side of Shepherd's Bush. The services have been held in an iron hall, but the growth of the congregation and of the Sunday-school, as well as the terms of the lease, compelled the erection of a permanent structure. The work now in hand is merely the lower lecture hall, to cost £2000, leaving the chapel until funds are provided. Four memorial stones were laid on Saturday afternoon in presence of a large gathering. Amongst those who took part were the secretary (Mr. T. Paul), the treasurer (Mr. Carlile), the pastor, and Messrs. John Neal and A. Hewitt, Mrs. Hopkins, and Revs. E. W. Stenlake and A. G. Egerton.

In connexion with the autumnal meeting of the Baptist Union of England and Wales, which is being held at Plymouth this week, a meeting was held at the Plymouth Guildhall on Monday evening to celebrate the centenary of the home missions connected with the denomination. Rev. Dr. Booth, secretary, said there was greater need than ever for village work, because they had to battle with the great enemy of sacerdotalism. Rev. A. Rowland, chairman-elect of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, said that if they suffered the village churches to decay, the free churches throughout the country would become weaker and almost extinct. If the Church of England did not alter her tendencies the free churches would alone stand as the bulwark of Protestantism in the villages.

Peace Society.—The autumnal meetings of the society will be held in Newcastle-on-Tyne on Tuesday, October 12. There will be a morning and afternoon conference and a public meeting in the evening. This will be presided over by Sir Joseph W. Pease, the afternoon conference by the Dean of Durham, and that of the morning by Dr. Robert Spence Watson. All the meetings will be held in the hall of the Church Institute, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

Travelling in Egypt.—Messrs. Cook and Son have issued their new programme of arrangements for travelling in Egypt, by which it appears their fleet of tourist steamers will commence to run between Cairo and the First Cataract on November 16, and continue until the middle of March. The mail steamers will run from Cairo once a week commencing from Saturday, November 13, and twice a week commencing from December 11, and from Nagh Hamadi twice a week throughout the season to the First Cataract and back. The facilities now afforded to the travelling public for reaching the First Cataract, and inspecting the wonderful remains of ancient civilisation which adorn the banks of the Nile, are now greater than ever, and with luxurious hotels, not only at Cairo, but at Karnak, Luxor, and Assouan, there is every probability that Egypt during the coming winter will receive a larger share than ever of the health and pleasure-seeking public.

The Santa Claus Society.—During last year a hundred poor convalescents were sent away to homes and hospitals to gather health and renewed strength. The first aim, as the title indicates, is the bestowing of Christmas gifts to poor, sick, weary children and adults. For the little ones, dolls, toys, and scrap-books are the special favourites. Preparations are already going on for next Christmas, and help is sought for the patients in hospitals and infirmaries. Toys, games, books, clothes, writing-paper and envelopes, and wool for knitting are very acceptable. The gifts are exhibited before distribution in hospitals; the distributors are generally friends interested in the Society. Further particulars can be obtained from Miss Janie F. Charles, Stormont, Highgate.

The Prison Mission.—A difficulty often experienced in rescue and prison work is to find and supply the most suitable employment for the lapsed ones whom it is desired to reclaim. Mrs. Meredith has, in connection with her Mission to Discharged Female Prisoners, many women whom it is imperative to keep employed. Amongst other things they are taught to make felt slippers, which are manufactured in various colours and in all sizes of the best felt, every care being taken to send out a good and useful article. This is only one of the ways in which the women are employed. Church kneelers, dusting brushes, and other goods are manufactured at a reasonable price. This summer has been a very trying one in every branch of Mrs. Meredith's good work, and the funds have been at the lowest ebb, hence there is now great need of help either by contributions or orders. Particulars can be obtained of the Secretary, Slipper Department, 143, Clapham-road, London, S.W.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE announcement made a fortnight ago that our publishers would send a handsome Paragraph Bible (with references) under certain conditions (specified on page 8 of the current issue) has brought a large number of applications, so that the demand has been in excess of the supply. But our friends may rest assured that their communications are duly noted, and will be attended to with the least possible delay. Messrs. Morgan and Scott have received many encouraging letters, some extracts from which are given below :—

A Worcestershire vicar writes :—Thank you very much for beautiful Paragraph Bible which came this morning. I will do my best to distribute the copies of The Christian. This is a very poor parish, but I will send some to friends at a distance. I value the paper very much.

Dr. Baedeker says :—I hope to send The Christian to various friends in England and abroad, and I trust the result will be to your benefit as well as to theirs. The Bible is a very valuable and very cheap book, in excellent print, and nicely got up.

From a lady worker among soldiers :—I will circulate The Christian over England and Scotland. I have sent my own one to the Orkneys, and others when read will be sent to Portsmouth and Plymouth.

We have received several replies to the letter inserted last week from Mrs. Milne, defending the position of the B.W.T.A. in retaining Lady Henry Somerset as its president for the present year. Most of the communications are too diffuse, and some raise side-issues. One writer, however, makes a point worth noting when she says :—

"We know very well that departments are not binding on branches, but it is binding on a president not to work contrary to the spirit of any department.

The distress resultant on the epidemic of typhoid at Maidstone is likely to be so great that the Lord Mayor has decided to open a relief fund for the sufferers. Many of those who have died have left families behind who will need substantial help during the coming winter, and the disease is such that those who are recovering must spend long periods of weariness and weakness before they are able to resume their occupations and earn their livelihood. It is an added call on public generosity that the outlook in regard to the epidemic is again far from reassuring. The total number of cases on Tuesday had reached 1590, and this number has since been increased. The relief fund already started amounts to £6000, but this is an insignificant sum compared to the needs of the case. Every effort is being taken to prevent the spread of the disease in other towns.

In spite of the Church Times' assertion that the "circumstances which seemed to concur to give the Church Congress a Protestant tone were providentially over-ruled," the prevailing tendency right through was, as our report last week showed, to give the Evangelical wing a tardy recognition and opportunity, and they took an excellent advantage of their opening. How differently the same thing affects minds who look at it from diverse standpoints may be seen in the contradictory impressions recorded in the Church Times and the Methodist Times. The former says :—

Perhaps the great lesson of the Nottingham Congress is that it is not an empty piece of claptrap, but a very well-founded truth, that our points of agreement [i.e., between the Ritualist and Evangelical parties of the Anglican Church] are, in fact, of greater importance than our points of difference.

The latter devotes its leading article to an exposition of the real unity of mind and purpose between the Evangelical party in the Church of England, and the Evangelical Churches outside it. It is a matter for thankfulness, at any rate, that the dominant note in the Congress was refreshingly free from the blatant Ritualism that has had all its own way of recent years.

There was a great deal of strong anti-Popery sentiment at the meeting of the Baptist Union, where the question was discussed. But it was very pleasing to note the tone of the speeches. There was an utter absence of bitterness, even against Roman Catholics. The utterance of the speakers was to the effect that the Reformation gave us a religious freedom which Rome denied its adherents; that the Romish Church was the same to-day as ever so far as its latent persecution of those who refused to accept its creed is concerned; therefore, let us stick to the Reformation freedom, and do all in our power to adhere to the Protestantism which alone allows liberty of conscience and opinion. We commend this as the right way to go to work. Mere attacks on the Church of Rome make martyrs of Catholics, and win for them the sympathy of the unthinking. Better far to teach the blessedness of a Gospel free from the trammels of a priestly intervention.

Mr. Aubrey de Vere, in his "Recollections," says, that when Cardinal Manning was on the threshold of the Roman Catholic Church, Carlyle went to see him, and said, "I have ridden over here to tell you not to do that thing. You were born free. Do not go into that hole." Evidently the sturdy old prophet of Chelsea had grasped the situation far better than many professing Protestants do. The Romish Church, so called, is a government—a hierarchy—and the disciples have no voice in its affairs; their sole duty is absolute obedience to the government. No Roman Catholic is free—he gives himself into the hands of a great system, mind, conscience, and body. We believe that the spirit of the British people is too much attached to freedom to accept the doctrines of Rome when they know what such acceptance entails.

The movement for an English Sunday Closing Bill was splendidly initiated, under the presidency of the Archbishop of Canterbury, last week. Convincing testimony was borne from the three countries where the law has been already in force, of the boon conferred on the community by the various Acts. Mr. Arnold J. Hills, who has done so much to bring the matter to its present ripeness, suggested a scheme whereby 20,000 meetings would be held in the next six months, for the proper organisation of which £50,000 would be needed. The present lull in party politics seems an excellent opportunity for the ventilation and furtherance of the scheme.

Unfortunately, the daily press is almost entirely hostile to the movement, as the comments prove. The Daily Telegraph speaks of the "ethical delusion of compulsory sobriety, with all that it involves of pedantic restriction and Puritanical hypocrisy"; the Standard denies the validity of the testimony borne to the success of the Sunday Closing Act in the large Welsh and Scotch towns; the Morning boldly affirms that while the purpose of the movement is to diminish Sunday drunkenness, "experience shows us that the exact opposite is the result"; while the Pall Mall is openly contemptuous. The Echo stands almost alone in its advocacy, and puts the case trenchantly thus :—

The seller of drink and drinkers alike enjoy freedom which is denied to those who would enjoy higher resources of recreation and instruction. Why should not the spirit-seller be put on the same level with the ordinary shopkeeper, and particularly if England thereby would reap similar blessings as those reaped in Scotland, Ireland, and Wales? The time will come, and may come soon, when the Sunday closing of public-houses will be effected, and when the organs of old-fogeyism will receive another blow.

It is clear that no time should be lost of educating public opinion on this matter.

The attempt of Mr. Ritchie on behalf of the Board of Trade to mediate between the disputants in the great engineering conflict has deplorably failed, and both sides are girding themselves for a lengthened and terrible contest. Without knowing all the facts, the most important of which have not been published, it is impossible to apportion the blame of this failure. But we are all concerned in this matter, which threatens to develop into a huge disaster, and there is a call upon all who have any public influence to use it in the direction of peace. The strike and lock-out has already cost in wages alone, according to the Daily Telegraph, about three-quarters of a million sterling, and in loss of profits to the employers about £100,000. If the battle goes on till Christmas on the scale threatened, this total will rise to something like two millions. The amount of privation, loss of trade, and loss of prestige among foreign customers entailed by this time will be incalculable. In view of all this, every effort should be made to bring the parties to a friendly conference, and to end the dispute by some wise compromise.

A feeling of dismay fills one's heart on reading that tens of thousands of men are likely to be added to those now locked out and on strike. Haughty and hard words have been spoken, which will not ease the friction or lessen the strain. They make one feel that the question is not so entirely one of mere percentages as some would have us think. There is feeling kindled—so much the worse for a settlement. Temper and method have much to do with most things, both with the unhappy and the happy working of them. We trust that this present mood may soon give place to a better.

The Archbishop of Canterbury has advised his clergy to burn their sermons when they have preached them three times. This is a poor compliment to the sermons and to the men who compose them. Christmas Evans never felt satisfied with a sermon until he had preached it at least twenty times. There are some sermons that ought to be burned before they are preached once; but if a good sermon has benefited a congregation, why not repeat it as we do our beautiful hymns?

In a letter to a correspondent the Bishop of Salisbury says, referring to a sermon he had preached on our Lord's ministry in the Temple and the Synagogue:—

That He took part in the service of both seemed to me to be a justification for having two kinds of service in the Christian Church, one with more of ritual and sacrament, the other simpler and unsacerdotal. This may be a hint for a basis of reunion in God's good time. The difficulty of accepting Nonconformist ministers without episcopal ordination touches chiefly the ministration of the Lord's Supper, which ever since the first century has (for reasons which we can well understand) been restricted to persons specially set apart as Presbyters. As far as we can judge, these Presbyters were ordained either by Apostles or men in an episcopal relation to the Church—i.e., not simple Presbyters. Supposing, however, other difficulties to be arranged, I can conceive of Nonconformist ministers (if they did not desire such ordination), to be admitted into the United Church to administer baptism, and to teach and preach in our churches, and to take a large part in its services. I hope I have made my meaning clear. The matter is one I have deeply at heart, and I trust, with God's help, to do something to promote a better understanding.

How does the Bishop manage to find in "our Lord's ministry in the Temple" anything different from his ministry in the synagogue? and how can he say that "He took part in the services of the temple," and connect that with sacerdotalism? Surely the Bishop cannot hold that our Lord ever officiated as a priest in the temple? And yet such a distinction is the whole ostensible ground of the Bishop's plea for the admission of Nonconformist ministers to preach in churches of the Church of England.

The Life of Tennyson will prove not only a delight to the lovers of his poetry and a book full of interest to those who take pleasure in the lives of intellectual men, but a clear and great gain to the religious forces of our time. The courage with which he faced poverty rather than be untrue to himself and his ideal, will be a stimulus to every noble soul among us. The fidelity of his future wife to him and of him to her, through long years of waiting for each other, will be some antidote to the passion and licence too often glorified in our novels. Above all, his steady faith in God through Christ, his grasp of the life invisible, will help to turn men again to the purest and best. It is like emerging on a high table-land where the atmosphere is clear and the prospect extensive to read words like these:—

He dreaded the dogmatism of sects and rash definitions of God. "But take away belief in the self-conscious personality of God," he said, "and you take away the backbone of the world." A week before his death I was sitting by him, and he talked long of the personality and of the love of God. "I should," he said, "infinitely rather feel myself the most miserable wretch on the face of the earth with a God above than the highest type of man standing alone.

The Academy notices that every step we take from infancy brings us nearer to prosaic commonplaceness...The child is not the father of the man intellectually, or the world would be filled with poetry and humour.

What then becomes of the power which we all seem to have in infancy to be original, to be ourselves? Is some of it buried from fear of being noticed, and perhaps laughed at? Children are very sensitive, and often feel the special attention they draw when they say something remarkable; once they have suffered from the look of many eyes and the talk of many tongues, many of them shrink from encountering the same ordeal again. It might be as well, therefore, to let their sayings pass unnoticed outwardly; keep them and ponder them in the heart. Another explanation of the commonplaceness to which we nearly all sink is the fact that life comes with such peremptory commands that we have no time to let the soul dwell on things beyond the common sphere. The greatest loss we suffer in the battle of life is from the absorption of heart and soul in the things of the day.

In the day-schools of the United States the Bible used to be read and some recognition made of religion. This was altered out of deference to an agitation carried on by the Roman Catholics, one State after another suppressing everything that savoured of religion. So serious are the effects which are believed to have come from it that a movement has now begun in favour of returning to the former order of things. In 1890 Archbishop Ireland grieved that in their jealousies they had given over to materialists the teaching of the school, "the nursery of thought."

"Religious indifference will be the people's creed. His manhood will be, like his childhood in the school, estranged from God."

A few things are worth observing here. 1. How certainly the power of Rome leads on to irreligion. 2. How easy it is to carry out a system of religious training when men are all of one mind; how difficult when divisions appear. 3. How much more necessary it is to have religious men than a religious system; for the spirit of a teacher is all-pervading. We are persuaded that one of the finest spheres for Christian work is the day-school.

Fortunately there is less and less likelihood that the religious difficulty will be raised at the forthcoming School Board election. Those who would do so are hopelessly at variance among themselves. The issue, therefore, will really be fought out on other lines, and the question of religious teaching be settled on the basis of the compromise that has for twenty-seven years worked so well on the whole. With the example of some of our colonies and of America to warn us against the results of secular education, and with the certainty that the High Church party would interpret the privilege of teaching Christian truth in a "Catholic" sense, we have abundant warnings against extreme policies in either direction. The via media here is the via vitæ.

The New Orthodoxy.

WE have received the first number of a new magazine, entitled The New Orthodoxy, edited by Rev. Robert Tuck, B.A. (Elliot Stock. 6d. monthly.) In the first article, "Our Scope and Intent," occur the following passages:—

The title of this magazine is open to criticism, but we hope to disarm it with the assurance that by a New Orthodoxy we do not mean a "New Gospel." By a "New Orthodoxy" we mean that setting or presentation of the Gospel which precisely adapts it to a new age.

The New Orthodoxy will advocate the following setting of the revealed truth, and so endeavour to aid in forming the theology of the new age:—The redemption of moral and spiritual beings from moral and spiritual evils must be a moral and spiritual enterprise, accomplished by moral and spiritual forces, however these spiritual things may gain pictorial illustration in historical incidents and transactional scenes.

Whether this is a new Gospel or not, it certainly is another Gospel than that which the apostles preached. For they attributed redemption, not to moral and spiritual forces, but to the blood of Christ. "In whom we have redemption through his blood," says Paul. "Ye were...redeemed...with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot," echoes Peter.

But this new orthodoxy lays it down as in the nature and necessity of things that redemption is by moral and spiritual forces, pictorially illustrated in historical incidents and transactional scenes. What does this mean? Do the historical incidents and transactional scenes include not only the Passover lamb of Exod. xii., but also Christ our Passover sacrificed for us? Not only the five offerings of Leviticus i.-vii., but Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered Himself without spot to God? Not only the brazen serpent in the wilderness, but the Son of Man, who, as the antitype of that serpent, must be lifted up? Not only the declaration of the curse of the law on Mount Ebal, but Christ Himself, who redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us? This appears to us to be the honest meaning of the phrase used to define the position taken up by the New Orthodoxy; and if it be, is it honest or true to say that by a New Orthodoxy we do not mean a New Gospel? Is this only a different setting to adapt the old Gospel to the new age?

Another paragraph in the same article represents F. D. Maurice as the apostle who is the foundation of the new orthodoxy:—

There are hundreds of clergymen and ministers, and thousands of Christian people, who were brought up in the atmosphere of the Evangelical Revival, which provided for the nineteenth century a setting of the primary truths of the Christian revelation. These devout men and women find themselves seriously affected by the recent developments of Science, Philosophy, Literature, and Biblical Criticism. The entire range of Evangelical thought has been toned, in a very remarkable way, by that movement towards a spiritual and mystical apprehension of the Evangelical verities, and which for England F. D. Maurice may be regarded the leader.

It is interesting to read the following in the opening article of The British Weekly of September 30, published almost simultaneously with the first number of The New Orthodoxy.

Macleod Campbell, who was very partial to Maurice, said once of his system, "There is nothing real in the nature of things answering to this sense of guilt. The sense of guilt becomes a mistake which further knowledge reverses." All sin is thus reduced to ignorance. Even the late Mr. Hutton, that ardent Maurician, recognises an element of truth in this saying: "If the only difference between sin and righteousness is that men living in sin do not recognise their accomplished redemption, while men living in faith do, the sin would appear to be a sin of ignorance rather than of will." In exact agreement with this view Maurice says in a remarkable letter, which will be found in his Life, that he wishes to treat evil "as though it were not, for in very truth it is a falsehood. It has no reality, and why should not we treat it as having none?" Mr. Hutton admits that there are many partially analogous statements to be found here and there in Maurice's writings, and confesses that he has never been able to reconcile Maurice's profound and deep sense of the awful reality of sin with his language as to the absolute completeness of redemption, even as regards those who have been rescued from a life of sin; nor with his language here and there as as to purely negative and unreal character of sin. If there is no such reality as sin, and if the sense of guilt is an illusion, then the Propitiation is an illusion also, and the value of the New Testament has ceased, for it is threaded through and through by a theory altogether different—a theory to which guilty consciences in all ages have moaned their Amen.

We leave our readers to judge of the assertion in the opening article that the Christian thinkers and preachers who represent the New Orthodoxy "resent every accusation of disloyalty to the faith of their fathers...They think it cruel, and wholly unworthy of the common Lord, the 'Master of Love,' to call them names—Down-Grade or other."

The Root and Fruit of Holiness.

Col. iii. 1-7.

By Rev. H. C. G. MOULE, D.D.

THIS is one of the golden paragraphs of the whole Bible. To countless hearts it is one of their peculiar treasures. There is a celestial music for them in its very phrase and rhythm. It lifts the soul as with wings, till we get a glimpse of that exalted One sitting throned after death at the Right Hand of power, and in some sense realise that where He is we his people are, as to the true heart and basis of our regenerate being, and know that that basis is nothing less nor lower than Himself, and stand upon that fact, and look out from it towards the coming glory, and turn to a renewed and joyful walk here, "in this present world," by faith in the Son of God.

It is a passage memorable for its messages to servants of God. Stevenson Arthur Blackwood, of ever bright and blessed memory, soon after his conversion, entering William Pennefather's church at Barnet, caught sight casually of those words printed on a paper in the pew, "Your life is hid with Christ in God." The recent discovery of his Saviour had been joy unspeakable; but who does not know that fear often lies near great joy, and that a treasure may seem far too precious to be safe? But here, he felt, was a safety equal to the treasure; "with Christ in God," a double rampart, all Divine.

A beloved and honoured friend of my own, now doing a great work for God (and may it be continued into distant years, if our Master tarry yet), has told me how in early life those five words, "Christ, who is our life," were made new life to him. As he walked back to his home over a Scottish moor from a mission-service he had been conducting, those simple, those familiar words passed through his soul in one of those moments of insight which God alone can explain. "Within ten paces as I walked, life was transformed to me," he said; "so wonderful was the discovery that the Lord Christ is not merely Rescuer, Friend, King, but Life itself, Life central, inexhaustible, springing up within my heart, rising to eternity."

For us, too, writer and reader, may the paragraph bring its moments of insight into the full glory of grace and the full assurance of the hope of glory.

Meantime, let us not forget that the whole paragraph is written with a certain purpose. It comes to us in organic connection with the close of the previous chapter; and we remember in what direction that passage ran. It was altogether upon the problem, how to be holy, how to deal with "the gratification of the flesh," and to live a life pure and victorious, worthy of the child of God. This is full in view here. And accordingly we remember that all St. Paul says here of mysteries and glories, all his presentation of our death and our resurrection with Christ, and of our eternal life hidden with Him, and our coming manifestation in the endless bliss, is matter as practical as possible. It all means an answer to the question, "How shall I deal with the gratification of the flesh?"

So viewed, the passage loses nothing of its exaltation and charm of thought. But it becomes as different as possible from a mere golden reverie, in which the man attempts to escape from realities into the evening clouds, or tries to take a sort of opiate against earth's trials and temptations, compounded of imaginations of heaven. The verses are a chain of God's indissoluble facts, for the Christian's use amidst the formidable facts of the devil, the world, and the flesh. It is in order to his walking at liberty, in holy purity, in holy love, that he is (not to imagine but) to recollect that because Christ died, he died, and is in that sense dead; dead to sin's doom, and to sin's dominion, in his crucified Lord. It is for practical holiness, for the life of open eyes and conquering hands in the way of righteousness, that he is (not to imagine, or "feel," but) to recollect (for it is fact) that because Christ rose, he is risen, and has within him the very "power of the resurrection" of his Head. He is to "seek the things above" with the most practical intentions. He is to "seek" them—as the needle "seeks" the pole—with the "search" of earnest thought and expectant faith, not as things only whose hope may cheer his faint steps onward, but whose present power is to make his steps sure and strong.

For what are those things above? The throne of all love and power; the Saviour seated on it, triumphant for his follower, and faithful to him; and the life hid there with Him in God; yea, He who is Himself the Life. Sure of his own death with Christ, and his new life with Christ, in a union with which heights and depths of distance have absolutely nothing to do, he is to be always, at the back of everything, there—where Christ, his Life, is seated; where his true life is "hid," so hid as to be always, however, as truly in the Limb on earth as in the Head in heaven. And as he looks forward to "the glory that shall be revealed in us," it is to be with the same object, sure and certain, even a present holiness. He is to use the power he has in having the crucified and glorified Christ for his Life, all the more confidently and promptly because of its foretold development—"with Him in glory."

Here is St. Paul's programme, his prescription, for the blessed life, the transfigured life, at Colossæ. Live in heaven, that you may really live on earth. Live in heaven, not in the sense of the poet but in that of the believer. Live in recollecting and conscious union with Him who is there, but who is at the same time in you, your Life. Live in the continual confession to your own souls that you died in his death, and live in his life, and are with Him—by the law of union—on his throne; and then bring this to bear upon the temptations of your path. Use these things. Take them as facts into life, exactly as life is for you to-day. You shall find that in them, that is to say, in Him, you can be holy. You can walk at perfect liberty, and you can walk (with the same steps) in perpetual and delightful service.

Let our programme be that of St. Paul, for his is that of the Holy Ghost. Our aim, our longing, our hunger and thirst, is for a holiness which shall indeed be real, real before God in its root, and real before man in its fruit; a holiness which shall win the world to own that Christ can make a poor human life blessed and fruitful, loving, cheering, useful, humble, tender, while yet strangely strong, with a power not its own, to rebuke the evil which it meets. We want to be holy in a way which shall never glorify ourselves, but always our Master. We want to have "a heart" that does "not condemn us" (1 John iii. 21), not in the delusions of a supposed sinlessness, but in the happy, honest certainty that the central and steadfast desire is to please Him, to do his dear will. Then let us go up, to fetch our secret down. Believer, your talisman for that life, the only "life worth living," is in the heaven of heavens. It is seated on the right hand of God. It is—"Christ which is your Life." It is He, as He died for you, as He lives for you, as He lives in you, as you live in Him, as He is coming for you, as you are going to be glorified with Him. "Seek Him," with the seeking which is also a perpetual finding; and use Him as He is so found; and you shall have your desire. — The Clergyman's Magazine.

The Awakening Kiss.

THE recent article in The Christian, entitled, "Kissing the Baby," brought to my mind an incident in the experience of the friend who related it to me.

A new scholar had been placed in her Sunday School class, a girl so hopelessly unattractive and stolidly stupid that my friend Miss K. with difficulty subdued the instinctive repulsion she felt toward her. The new scholar proved a very discouraging subject, and her teacher's most conscientious efforts failed to rouse a spark of intelligence, or make any impression, spiritual or otherwise, upon her.

She had not been long in the class before she called to bid Miss K. good-bye, as the relatives with whom she lived were about removing to another city. After a painfully unsuccessful attempt at conversation, my friend accompanied her to the door, where, just as she was leaving, a sense that no one could ever feel any affection toward such a forlornly repellent creature swept, with a wave of pity over Miss K.'s heart, and she impulsively stooped and kissed her. The only response was a stare of stupid bewilderment, and the girl walked away.

Years passed: Miss K. had long since left her old home, when she received a letter from her quondam scholar—a letter well-written, well expressed, such indeed as only an intelligent, educated person could have penned. The writer said, that for a number of years she had vainly endeavoured to obtain Miss K.'s address, in order to thank her for the kiss, which had proved her salvation. She gave a sketch of her history, which was briefly as follows:—

In all her childhood years she had never received a word of tenderness, nor a caress. An orphan, she lived with relatives who had over-worked and under-fed her, and otherwise abused her, until when placed in Miss K.'s class, she was rapidly becoming mentally incapacitated.

Then came the startling new experience, her teacher's kiss. At first, simply dazed by the surprise of it, it reached and woke her heart and mind. In some instinctive way, she connected it with the fact that Miss K. was a Christian. What a Christian was she had no idea—so little had she been able to grasp the Sunday lessons—but all her longing went out to discover, and to become one herself. Outwardly, her life became more wretched than ever; but living on the memory of that kiss her mind became awake and eager. Finally she escaped from her miserable surroundings, began to earn her own living, found the Christ for whom she was seeking, worked hard to obtain an education, and, at the time of writing, was happily and well married, her life crowned with every blessing; and all because her teacher, moved by a heaven-sent impulse, had kissed her.

So the kiss, which Miss K., even after reading the letter, could but dimly recall having bestowed, so slightly had the incident impressed her, had been made the signal for the awakening of the sleeping princess to her birthright as daughter of the King of kings.

Manchester Boys' and Girls' Refuges.—Mr. Leonard Shaw gives in his latest occasional paper a cheering account of his recent visit with his wife to Canada, and of the well-being of boys and girls planted out in the Dominion. The result of his investigations has been to confirm his opinion, "that for children who are up to the high standard of character and health required, but who have degrading relatives or surroundings, no conditions are more suitable than those on a good Canadian farm home under proper supervision."

Some of the Bushels.

By Rev. J. R. MILLER, D.D.

THE illustration was homely, but very suggestive. In the evening, when it began to grow dark and the housekeeper lighted her rude lamp, she did not set it on the floor and turn a bushel over it, but set it on the lamp-stand, that its light might fill the apartment. Jesus told his disciples that they were his lamps, and that He wanted the light to shine out clearly. Yet there are many ways in which Christian people hide or obscure the light that is in them.

For example, there is the covering of shyness. There are persons who love Christ, but shrink from a public confession of Him. The very depth and intensity of their love seem to make it impossible for them to express the love. Their feelings are too sacred to be revealed. There must always be an inner chamber of faith and love in a Christian's heart where only God may hold tryst with the soul. There are feelings which can be uttered to no human friend. There is a love of which we cannot speak. We are not required to talk about our heart religion with many people. It is a proper reserve which shrinks from laying bare one's inner spiritual experiences. We say it is scarcely less than desecration when a man prates in public of the sacred things of even a tender human affection. Is the heart's friendship with Christ less sacred, less holy? Surely no one should be expected to expose to public gaze all that belongs to the holy of holies of his communion with Christ.

Still, there is danger that shyness may become a covering which shall hide the light of Christian confession. Even so good a man as Timothy seems to have needed the exhortation from Paul, "Stir up the gift of God which is in thee." Timothy was not making the most of his Christian life. He was not using all the power he had. Only a comparatively feeble light was shining out from his life, when there ought to have been burning brightness. Paul said this to him: "God gave us not a spirit of fearfulness, but of power and love and discipline." Timothy seems to have been covering his light under a spirit of fearfulness, timidity, shyness, almost cowardice.*

It becomes all of us to look to ourselves whether the gift that is in us does not need stirring up like whether we do not need to get more courage, whether our shyness may not be a serious fault in us, and whether it may not be hindering our usefulness as Christians. We should get the lamp out from under the covering of timid reserve and set it on the candlestick of sincere and courageous confession.

There is also the covering of natural feeling. The very heart of all Christian life is love. God is love, and we are commanded to be perfect as our Father is perfect. The sum of the commandments is, "Thou shalt love." We are taught to be long-suffering in the enduring of injury and wrong; to be patient unto all men; to love our enemies; to forgive those who have done aught against us; that the servant of the Lord must not strive, but be gentle unto all men; that when reviled we should not revile again; that we should not avenge ourselves, but rather give place unto wrath; that we should put away malice, anger, and clamour, and be sweet-spirited always. Love is the light that should shine continually from the Christ life in us.

But some people hide this blessed light of love under the old natural feelings of resentfulness, unforgiveness, bitterness. They are quick to take offence. They hold grudges. They are not thoughtful. They do not forgive. They are quick-tempered, hasty in their speech, lacking affectionateness and sympathy. They may have a heart of love; but it seems as if there were a hard crust surrounding it and covering it, which prevents the outflow of the love.

There are many good people who do not reveal their best selves. They are like frowning fortresses; outside, cold, stern, forbidding walls, but within, a beautiful garden spot, with home, love, and refuge. These men are outwardly brusque, severe, unapproachable; but, when you find the way to their hearts, there is warmth there, with faithful constancy and shelter of strong love. But how much better it would be if there were not if the love found its way into the manners, the speech, all the expression! We should not hide the warm light of love in our heart beneath a covering of external unloveliness, but should set the lamp where its shining will reach every life that touches ours or comes under our influence.

Then there is a covering of egotism and self-conceit. The Christian religion teaches us to be modest and humble in our demeanour, to give rather than to receive, to seek to minister rather than to be ministered unto, in honour to prefer one another. We are not to insist upon always having our own way, nor to think that none but ourselves know anything well or can do anything rightly.

But sometimes we find a man, a Christian man, who is so full of vanity that he considers no other one's opinion as of any account. He is upright, truthful, honourable, firm in his principles, inflexible in his integrity; but the lamp of his good life is hidden under the bushel of his egotism. He treats other people and their suggestions almost with contempt. He is dictatorial and despotic, incapable of co-operation in work with others. Such a man by the grave fault in his character defeats the very purpose of his own aim. He wants to be a leader, but he seeks position as a right, claiming it, demanding it, rather than winning it by force of character and fitness, and by readiness to serve. Some splendid men with magnificent powers are rendered almost useless to their fellows by this unhappy spirit. The true leaders are those who pay no heed to the mere outward forms of position, precedence, and rank, but devote themselves in love and self-denying service to the good of others.

By demanding place one may become like the figure-head, which vaunts itself in vanity upon the ship's prow; but the true man of influence is rather like the propeller, which, hidden out of sight, drives the vessel through seas and storms. Jesus said they are chief, not who claim to be first and to have highest rank, but who serve the most deeply and unselfishly. We must not hide the light of our life under the but should set the lamp on the candlestick of self-forgetting devotion to the good of others.

Another of the bushels which some Christians put over their lamps is the fretful, complaining habit. Light is clear and white. Christian life in its divine beauty is all brightness. Two words, "peace" and "joy," express its true spirit. Peace is quietness, calmness, restfulness, contentment in any circumstances. The light of peace should shine in every Christian life. Then joy is distinctive of the Christian; not the joy of this world, which depends on worldly conditions, and ebbs and flows with the tides of circumstance, but the joy of Christ, which the world cannot give and cannot take away.

Peace and joy are essential characteristics of the light that should shine from every Christian's lamp. But how many people cover this white, pure light with the habit of discontent and complaining! How many of us have allowed the spirit of worry to creep into our lives! How many of us permit ourselves to murmur and find fault with almost everything in our lot! How many of us live in a perpetual fever of discontent. Such habits dim the shining of the light that should ray out of our life. Fretfulness spoils spiritual beauty. A habit of anxiety hides the light of peace and joy. If only we would strip off these unfit coverings and let the light of Christ in us shine out, it would add tenfold to our influence and power as Christians.

* It does not appear to us that the Apostle's exhortation necessarily implied quite so much as this.—Ed.

A Soldier's Wild Life.

JOSEPH SMITH was born and brought up in the Army. He enlisted at the age of seventeen in the 71st Highlanders. In two months he was sent on board the transport Bolton to Bombay. During the voyage he took part in every evil thing, and whilst in India indulged in a reckless, dissipated life with ungodly companions. This brought in its train illness and disease, which compelled his being invalided home. On the voyage the ship encountered a terrible storm of three days' duration, which placed those on board in a critical position. All the masts were carried away, and it seemed impossible the passengers could be saved. Yet in all this terrible danger he, with others, was cursing and swearing, hoping the ship would go down. The ship put into the Cape of Good Hope for repairs, and during this time the soldiers were in the Castle Barracks. There again all his evil nature was given up to Satan. On reaching home, and after his recovery, he entered again for active service in the Crimea in 1854. Thousands of his comrades fell around him, but he was still spared; yet this led him to no thoughts of God, and he continued in sin.

After this the regiment was ordered to India for service during the Mutiny. He was brought into contact with scenes of horror and bloodshed, besides seeing many stricken down with sunstroke, fever, and cholera. He escaped with but two slight wounds and was again spared to leave the battlefield for barrack life until his regiment returned to England. He continued to give himself up to sin of all kinds, until he was ordered to Aldershot, and there took up his discharge.

Having served over twenty-one years, he received a pension of eightpence a day and not a good record as to character. He made his way to Portsmouth, and was employed as a navvy. Notwithstanding vows and promises to God to lead a better life, he continued in his old courses.

One evening he was led into the Seamen's Bethel, Gosport, and during an address given by a lady was deeply convinced of sin. From that time he shunned the companionship of the ungodly and found a delight in attending the means of grace. His eyes were opened more fully to see all his past folly, and very soon he found peace in receiving Christ as his Saviour. His spiritual life was strengthened by a visit of the late Henry Cook in the mission ship Annie to Plymouth, where there was a revival among the fishermen on board. Evening after evening souls were brought out of darkness into light, and here he learned to testify to the great change God had wrought in him.

His testimony has frequently been heard in the Bethel, the open air, and other places where he has gone, even before his old companions, and told what the Lord had done for him. He never ceased to warn the young of the dangers besetting their path, and to beseech them to turn to the Saviour before their lives were wrecked and wasted by sin. His own life after his conversion spoke loudly to all who knew him by its whole-hearted consistency and love. He suffered intensely during his illness, which was borne with wonderful patience. We praise God for his trophy of redeeming grace, and that now he is at rest with Christ. A. M. G.

THE EVANGELIST.

"A Great Cheat."

By Rev. GEORGE EVERARD.*

A FEW months ago I met by the wayside a poor, wretched-looking woman. Her house was sadly neglected, and all about it gave evidence that those who dwelt there were living without the least regard to God, or even common morality. No prayer, no keeping holy God's day, no training up the little ones in the nurture of the Lord, was known in that house. It was a mission season, and many were inquiring the way to Heaven. So I put a plain question to this woman. I asked her whether she was seeking Christ. I met with the old answer: "I'm doing my best," said this careless, ungodly woman. Thus she tried to quiet her conscience and stifle the appeal that was made to her.

"Doing my best" is a great cheat and deceiver. I constantly meet with him in some shape or other. But I should like to unmask him if I could, for he has ruined many souls already, and is likely, I fear, to ruin many more.

You say, "I am doing my best," but is this true? Has any one ever done their best? Did this woman do her best? Have you done your best? For example, when some one inflicted upon you a trifling annoyance, and you gave way to angry feelings, and uttered many hasty words, were you doing your best? Or when you wasted an hour or two in bed, and arose too late, and duties were neglected, and perhaps you hurried to your work without a word of prayer or of thanksgiving to Him who had watched over you through the night, were you doing your best? Do you mean to say that every day and every hour of the day you have been striving to please God? Is there a day in your life in which you might not have done more for God's glory and the good of others? And if this be so, is it true when you say, "I am doing my best?"

Nay, I would go further and say, have you not again and again done your worst? Have you not many a time yielded to temptation, doing that which you knew was contrary to God's plain command and the warning of your own conscience? And what could you have done worse than this?

"Doing my best!" After all, what is the value of this hope of yours on which you are risking your salvation? What is it but "a sinner's best"? and a sinner's best can be but sinful. Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? Who can bring a drop of sweet water out of a bitter fountain? Who can bring good fruit from a bad tree?

I remember hearing of a lad that had such a disposition to steal that he could not overcome it. "I can't help taking it," he said, "unless it is too hot or too heavy." Here was an honest confession of his own character, so that whilst such a disposition lasted he would be sure to act dishonestly.

Now, what is the nature of man? He is prone to sin and evil. It may not be to theft or murder or any open crime, but in some shape or other the heart follows the evil and not the good; it may be pride or covetousness or selfishness; it may be self-will, worldliness, and utter indifference to a God of love; but in some form sin lives and works within. And whilst this remains unchanged the fruit of such a disposition cannot but be sinful thoughts and words and deeds. Every action, either in itself or its motive and principle, must be defiled and impure when tried by the standard of God's holy law. Therefore, until your heart is changed by Divine grace, whatever you may call "doing your best," you are only adding day by day to the long catalogue of your sins and transgressions.

"Doing my best." This is the law and not the Gospel, and none can save themselves by "doing." As many as are under the law are under its condemnation. Till you give up trusting in any works or doings of any sort you stand guilty and condemned. Never, since the world began, has there been a man saved by doing. Till you are saved and forgiven through Christ, "doing your best" is only like a man in a condemned cell sweeping or cleaning the floor, or putting a few pictures on the wall, or falling in with the rules of the prison; it cannot the least remove the sentence of death. Ah, think of this! The sentence has gone against you: "Sinner, thou must die!" and all these self-efforts are utterly in vain to blot it out.

"Doing my best." If this were sufficient, why has God given us such warnings of danger and such promises of pardon to the penitent? Why did Christ come down from Heaven and die for sinners on the cross? Surely, all this were needless if you or I could ever be saved by doing our best.

The truth is, you cannot be saved by any doings of your own. You can only be saved by that which Jesus has done for you. He gave Himself to fulfil the law, to work out a perfect righteousness, and then to suffer death as the penalty of our transgressions. He finished the work of man's salvation, and by his death He made it a righteous thing for God to forgive the sinner. And you have to believe and accept this salvation thus provided for us.

Instead of pleading that you are "doing your best," acknowledge that you have left undone the things you ought to have done, and have done the things you ought not to have done. Acknowledge that you are guilty, and then plead the death of Christ on your behalf: "O God, I am guilty, and deserve to die, but Jesus died instead of me. For his sake pardon my sins, and receive me as thy dear child."

When you come in this spirit, you stand on solid ground. You are no longer on the sand, but on the Rock. God will welcome you, and bestow upon you all the blessings of his grace. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life." "All the promises of God in Him are yea, and in Him, Amen."

Missionary Day has become an institution at the Strangeways Conference Hall, Manchester, and is looked forward to with special interest by a large number of the friends of the Refuge work. This year it is fixed for Friday, October 22nd. Among the speakers, will be Rev. H. E. Fox, Mrs. Bishop, Miss Annie Taylor, Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, Mr. Walter R. Miller, and Rev. David Baron.

Hebrew Christian Prayer Union.—On Tuesday evening, last week, being the eve of the Day of Atonement, a large number of Hebrew Christians assembled at the church room adjoining Whitechapel Church, to offer prayer to God on behalf of their unbelieving Jewish brethren. Rev. S. T. Bachert presided, and a short address was given by the Rector of Whitechapel, who expressed great interest in the work among the Jews. After singing and prayer, Rev. M. M. Ben-Oliel delivered an edifying address, dwelling on the efficacy of the great Atonement made on the cross. He also exhorted the Jewish brethren not to be discouraged in times of trial, but patiently to endure persecution and suffering. The meeting having been thrown open for prayer, it was deeply impressive to hear Jews pray for parents, brothers, sisters, friends and relatives who are still in unbelief. A spirit of prayer and earnestness pervaded the meeting.—Israel Sunlight, Hon. Secretary.

Wesleyan East End Mission.

THE thirteenth anniversary of the Wesleyan East End Mission was celebrated on Wednesday last, at Stepney Temple, by a series of meetings Though all the gatherings were interesting, that of the evening was the largest and most enthusiastic. A devotional spirit pervaded the proceedings, and in that spirit the work enters upon what it is hoped will prove a year of signal blessing.

After a brief financial statement by Mr. J. G. Widdicombe (treasurer), showing that, although heroic endeavours had been made on the spot and generous assistance contributed by distant friends, there was yet a balance on the wrong side, Rev. Peter Thompson enlarged upon the work in its spiritual and social aspects. The Mission was started twelve years ago, and it has ever since been growing steadily. Only in a limited degree is it the joy of the Mission to witness its converts growing up under the shadow of its enlightening, educating, and nourishing institutions. Another joy is experienced, however, for as the converts become settled in principles and launched upon a new life, they choose purer and happier social conditions, and make for suburban districts. During the past twelve years some 4000 people who have received blessing at the Mission have removed, and in many cases taken up work and membership of outside churches. Yet there remain about 1800, young and old, on the class-books of the Mission.

The present staff of the Mission is: four ministers, four evangelists, one medical man, and twenty ladies who care for the poor in their rooms and houses. The voluntary workers, officers, stewards, and teachers, have for the most part grown up with the Mission, and they are rendering valued service on week days as well as Sundays. The Sunday-schools have considerably over two thousand scholars, and all the work, whether among young or old, is associated most vitally with prayer and trust in God. And the Mission has made its influence felt to such an extent that the bad characters of the district know of it and the converting work which goes on through its instrumentality.

Mr. Thompson's one grief was that friends of aggressive work do not visit the various centres of the Mission and make themselves acquainted with what goes on. From time to time the work undergoes rearrangement, in order that things may not run in ruts and interest flag; and quite recently changes have been made for deepening and widening the work. Alluding to the prosecution of himself and Mr. Howard for the stand they took against the drink interest, Mr. Thompson said that he was so convinced of the great importance of the course he took that if the costs had fallen upon himself, and involved living on bread-and-water for ten years, he would not have hesitated to accept the consequences.

After some encouraging words by the chairman, Mr. T. Morgan Harvey, a hearty address was delivered by Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, who declared his belief that well-to-do Christians will never enjoy the greatest privilege of wealth until they give on a larger scale in support of the work of God. Dr. Barnardo followed, and for the good of those who had not taken up Christian work, told the story of a young lady, who, after witnessing the operations of a great institution in East London, said she was surprised to observe how pleasant it is to be engaged in doing good.

Among Indian Lepers.

The famine has played sad havoc among this unfortunate class, and has sent many of them to the asylums of the Mission to Lepers. This has meant more mouths to fill at famine prices. Many of these outcasts, driven to our doors by stress of starvation and suffering, have become permanent inmates. Moreover, the needs for work in new centres are urgent. We are very anxious to have homes in Swatow and in Korea, as well as in more places in India. But as our work includes the maintenance, as well as the evangelisation, of the lepers, these proposed extensions mean large additional expenditure.

Work on behalf of outcast lepers is being carried on by the Mission in some fifty centres in India, Burma, China, and Japan.

Protestant Bordeaux.

SUNDAY brings with it a dreary feeling, and a sad one, in the lands which know no Sabbath, and especially is this the case in so-called Christian lands where godlessness prevails on that day more than ever. So finding myself alone, and knowing no one, on a recent Sunday in Bordeaux, I set out to see what I could learn about its Protestants.

The directory gave, besides foreign chapels or churches, three French Protestant "temples," two belonging to the State-subventioned "Reformed Church," and the other to the "Free Church," known as the "Evangelical Chapel" only. To these I learned must be added four small chapels of the Reformed Church, and the Salvation Army. First I visited the principal "temple"—dating from 1855—the most mausoleum-like structure I ever saw put to other than funereal uses. Most of the congregation came late. No one showed the way to the seats or provided hymn-books, and one wondered what could induce a second visit if the heart were not touched by the sermon. Afterwards, talking with the presiding minister, he endorsed my views about the building, but supposed it would have to remain as it was, since the people did not care enough about it to raise fresh funds.

The Reformed Church in Bordeaux—a city containing eight to nine thousand Protestants—numbers six pastors, and has perhaps about a thousand communicants, though it makes no distinction between members and adherents. A body of electors having certain qualifications choose the fourteen members of a consistory controlling local affairs. In their Sunday schools they have about 800 children, who are further provided for by two boys' and several girls' schools, with fifteen teachers among them. There are also homes for the young and the aged, and a Protestant hospital.

The Evangelical Chapel has a regular membership of about a hundred, under one pastor; and from what I heard outside I should think that there was more fervour among them. All the Bordeaux Protestants call themselves Evangelical, and all the pastors work in harmony.

The only other French work is carried on by the Salvation Army on much the same lines as in England, though the ladies in charge find it there extremely hard, on account of the utter unconcern of the people. A small local corps of some thirty-five have been gathered in, but they have no relations with the other Protestants.

Besides these French services there is a flourishing Anglican church, for Bordeaux has a good-sized Anglo-American colony, connected for the most part with the wine trade. At the service there we had a good Gospel sermon, though unfortunately read in a dry style. In connection with this, and under the direction of the genial and active Chaplain, Mr. Burke, is also a Sailors' Rest on the quay. There is a Swedish Church, too, the pastor of which looks specially after Scandinavian sailors; and there is a German Church.

Thus Bordeaux, with its Protestant colony, is not neglected, but one cannot help feeling how great, in common with the whole of Protestant France, is the need of

A BRIGHTER AND DEEPER SPIRITUAL LIFE.

Bordeaux has its noble army of martyrs, dating from the early decades of the sixteenth century, if not before, when worship was all in secret. In October, 1572, the year of St. Bartholomew, two hundred and sixty-four Protestants gave their lives for the faith in Bordeaux, and even after the Edict of Nantes in 1598, the survivors could only worship outside the walls. Their temple there was destroyed by the king nearly a century later, three weeks before the revocation of that edict, and thenceforth they worshipped at terrible risks in private dwellings, till, in 1754, under the influence of the heroic Antoine Court and Paul Rabaut, an organisation was ventured upon, though singing was not till 1789. The prisons still held fifteen condemned for assembling or assisting others to assemble for worship, while in 1762 one of their pastors was put to death. Children unchristened by Romish priests were still considered illegitimate, and their inheritance passed to others, a sad temptation to many. But the spirit of the times was also at work, for in the words of one of their then pastors, "They would rather have the discourses philosophical than Christian, desiring spirit rather than unction, preferring antitheses and plays on words, to solid, simple, and Christian thoughts." Such, one fears, is the general state of Protestant France to-day, notwithstanding bright exceptions; and the laws of 1802 and 1852, which accorded the Protestants State aid and State recognition, do not seem to have greatly improved things, for with liberty too often is involved indifference, and there is nought like persecution for the deepening of spiritual life.

BUDGETT MEAKIN.

Christmas Letter Mission.

WE have year by year called attention to the work of the Christmas Letter Mission, an organisation peculiarly adapted to meet the needs of Christian workers who aim at making the season not only one of festivity and happiness, but of Gospel seed-sowing on a wide scale. Many who have read with heartfelt sorrow of the death of Miss E. Steele Elliott, for many years secretary of the Mission, will be glad to learn that all this year's letters were written and in the printer's hands before the sudden call came, and that the activity of the Mission is as great as ever.

Letters suitable for distribution among all classes—sick and well, young and old—are ready to hand, bright with illustrations, and conveying in happy, anecdotal form the Gospel message of life and peace, as well as seasonable good wishes. The new report gives interesting details of the world-wide distributions carried on through the secretaries of the Mission at home and abroad. Clergymen, visitors, and Bible-class teachers may secure a complete catalogue from Messrs. Hazell, Watson and Viney, 1, Creed-lane, E.C.; and three stamps sent to the same will procure a specimen packet. The Mission has always applications for grants of letters. Offers of co-operation will, therefore, be thankfully received by Miss E. Thornton (Hon. Sec.), Eastfield House, Broxbourne; and subscriptions by Miss Dupre, Beaumaris House, Surbiton.

Medland Hall.—A pamphlet issued by the London Congregational Union on its East End work states that Medland Hall, within a stone's-throw of Stepney Station, Commercial-road, E., is the only home in London to which friendless men are admitted every night in the year and supplied with food, bed and bedding, washing and other requisites, without charge. Over 100,000 admissions, including sleeping accommodation and food, are recorded every year. In addition, about 18,000 supplies of food are given to men for whom sleeping berths cannot at present be provided. None are sent empty away. The Sunday evening congregations show a total each year of over 20,000 homeless men. To many Medland Hall has been a means of escape from the prison house of despair, a life-raft which has kept them from sinking among the submerged. Some 300 of these men have had new homes and health-giving work provided for them in Canada, and and this daughter-land of England is a gainer by the transfer.

The Book of Jonah.

THE Book of Jonah has more marvels than one. While the story of the great fish seems puzzling to some, the story of the repentance of the Ninevites is equally marvellous to minds of a more reflective order. Recently, at a meeting of the Liverpool Literary and Philosophical Society, Dr. J. Birkbeck Nevins, a gentleman whose scientific reputation is neither confined to the medical world nor limited to the city in which he resides, read a paper entitled "On some little-known historical events in the life of the prophet Jonah; and an inquiry—as a naturalist—into the credibility of some of the incidents of his career, alleged to be impossible and incredible." The lecture has not been published for sale, but we have been favoured with a private reprint from the Society's Proceedings. The first part of the paper is a study of Dr. Burgess's English version of a metrical sermon in Syriac by Ephraem Syrus (fourth century), entitled "The Repentance of Nineveh." From this it appears that as Jonah entered Nineveh there was an earthquake, which continued throughout the forty days of his preaching. Naturally this was associated with the prophet's mission, and it so alarmed the people that they believed the preacher's word as to impending judgment. Moreover, the general fear saved Jonah from the violence of the populace, and led to their repentance. Dr. Nevins identifies this earthquake with the one mentioned in Amos i. 1 and Zech. xiv. 5, and gives many interesting traditions regarding the prophet and his work. He also writes helpfully on other points in Jonah's career; and shows sound learning as well as loyalty to the Sacred Scriptures.

Another work on the same subject is "The Story of Jonah: in the Light of Higher Criticism." By Luther Tracy Townsend, D.D. (2s. Funk & Wagnalls Co.) The writer is well known as a sturdy defender of the faith, and he never fought more manfully or more triumphantly than here. Higher Criticism claims to bring a subject under the light of all the facts that relate to it, and on these lines our author conducts an orderly study of the Book of Jonah, his style being uniformly pointed and succinct. After discussing incidents in the early part of the narrative, Dr. Townsend gives facts concerning sea monsters and their capacity to swallow men, a footnote telling the story of a sailor who was missed by his companions while a whale was being secured, but was found, a day and a night later, alive in the cetacean's belly! As to the repentance of the people, it is not surprising (1) in view of the common knowledge of Jonah's experiences, (2) of the earnestness of the preaching of a prophet who opened his mouth for God after such a deliverance as was wrought in Jonah's case, and (3) of the well-known fact that the fears of Oriental people have many a time been excited to the pitch of terror by an announcement of coming doom in plague or earthquake. Dr. Townsend does not naturalise the story: God "prepared," or appointed, the fish, and at length miraculously interposed to save the disobedient prophet. This places the narrative of Jonah alongside many others in the Old and New Testaments, in which God interposed to carry out his own purposes. God delivered Jonah that "the more faithfully he might declare the Divine message, in order that the people of Nineveh might listen the more attentively to what he had to say, in order that Jonah's deliverance might be a prophetic sign of Christ's resurrection, and in order that His deliverance might also be a prophetic sign extending through the ages, that God will keep his children in safety, though dead, until the morning of the resurrection."

Wolverhampton.—The report of the Protestant Association in this busy town shows earnest work and faithful testimony in Sunday-schools, Bible-classes, open-air and cottage services, and in other directions. The work is full of interest, and may well prove rich in suggestion of Christian effort to earnest men and women in other places where sacerdotalism holds fell sway.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, October 17.

"It was perfect through my comeliness, which I had put upon thee, saith the Lord God."—Ezek. xvi. 14.

HOW rich this chapter is in spiritual significance for ourselves! We, too, were born in the land of the Canaanite—our father the first Adam, our mother Eve. There was no beauty in us by nature, but everything to cause abhorrence to the Holy God. And if we are washed and clothed, decked with gold and silver, arrayed in fine linen, silk, and embroidered work, eating fine flour, and honey, and oil, exceedingly beautiful and arrayed in royal estate, it is all of grace, of the exceeding and eternal grace of God. There is nothing of it at all in which we can boast ourselves. Of Him are we in Christ Jesus, through whom we are what we are. We are perfect only through his comeliness which He has put upon us.

First, let us dare to believe that it is so. Accept and value your position. In Christ, we are more than tolerated, we are loved. We are more than forgiven; we are arrayed in fair garments. The King greatly delights in us In his eyes, and because his beauty is upon us, we are all fair. The joy that the Father has in Jesus, He has in us who are in Him. We may be deeply conscious of our sinnership, but He doth not behold iniquity in Jacob, nor see perverseness in Israel. We need not shrink to take our place even among the holy ones of the Presence chamber, because we are accepted in the Beloved, and clad in his comeliness.

But, next, let us not presume. We have nought of our own. When the temptation tries us to pride ourselves on our goodness; to arrogate to ourselves a special position because of our superiority to others; to assume that we can be independent of our immortal Lover, then let us remember what we were.

MONDAY, October 18.

"All fowl of every wing."—Ezek. xvii. 23.

The text suggests that Christ is the cedar, and all kinds of people come to roost in Him, as birds of every wing. Young and old, rich and poor, men high-soaring as the eagle, fierce as the raven, gentle as the dove. The young, just learning to try their wings; the old, weary, and lonely; those who have kept all the commandments from their youth, and those who have broken them all.

It does not matter with what wing we come to Jesus so long as we come. The practised eye can easily recognise the birds by their flight; each bird has its own wing; so every soul has its own disposition and temperament—one feverish, the other languid and lethargic; one impetuous, the other dilatory; one affectionate and warm, the other cool and shy. But the Lord Jesus knows our frame, and understands us afar off. He does not chide the dove because it cannot breast the storm and face the sun like the eagle. He does not expect the sustained flight of the seagull from the sparrow, or the song of the nightingale from the chaffinch. Each has its distinct beauty and use; each is dear to Him, but each must be content to pursue its own nature.

Do not imitate another; be yourself. Do not go about the world counting that you are useless and a failure, because you cannot do what is done by others. Be satisfied to be Mary, and do not always be longing to be Martha. Be content to be a humming bird. Learn how to be abased, and how to abound. Only rest in Christ. Out of the windy storm and tempest, make for the shelter of his dear love. There thou shalt roost, quiet from the fear of evil, until the day break and the shadows flee away.

TUESDAY, October 19.

"Behold, all souls are mine."—Ezek. xviii. 4.

This is bed-rock. Let us ever get down to the beginnings of things, when we state God's claims on men. Instead of only pleading with them, let us boldly assert God's claims upon them. All souls are his: of the African as of the European; of the heathen as well as of the Christian born; of the toiling, sorrowing, sinning, as of those that stand in the sunlit circle.

His by right of creation. "He made us, and we are his." Has not a man a claim on all that his hands have made? and has God less? His by right of redemption. To any man we have the privilege of saying, "You have been purchased by the precious blood of Christ." His by the right of his own holy and glorious Nature. Not to own Him and love Him supremely is a gross violation of the eternal fitness of things. The parent has a claim on his child.

Need you fear anything, fellow-Christian, since thou art his? Though thou goest forth alone into the wilderness, where there seems no spring, no food; though thou hast no visible means of sustenance through no fault of thine. Though thou shalt be called to pass to-day out of this world into the unseen. Since thou art God's, is He not responsible for thee? Will an owner allow his house to fall out of repair, or his beasts to lack food and tendance? Will God not tend, maintain, nurture, and cherish thee? Would it not be to his discredit if He were careless of thee, his own? The fact of thy bearing his mark and stamp upon thee is guarantee enough of his obligation to be a God to thee. Let Him do with us as He please, and we can perfectly trust Him; He is within his rights. Let Him send us whither He may, and entrust us with what commission He choose, it must be well. Let us look up into his face with a smile of satisfaction that we are his; but let us be sure that we voluntarily yield Him all that is his own, that He may do all his will.

WEDNESDAY, October 20.

"Take thou up a lamentation. This is a lamentation, and shall be for a lamentation."—Ezek. xix. 1 and 14.

This chapter is a dirge, first over two kings of the House of David, Jehcahaz and Jehoiachim, who, like wild beasts, had been carried off, the former to Egypt, the second by the Chaldeans; and then over the whole royal family, described under the figure of a wasted vine, humbled and almost destroyed.

We, too, may lament for the sufferings and sorrows of our King. The Holy Spirit would not have us forget them, because our sin-laden and wounded hearts can only become healed by pressing against the wounds of Him who was pierced by the nails and the spear. "Consider Him that endured such contradiction of sinners against Himself"—the agony and bloody sweat, the cross and passion, the scorn and reviling, the contradiction of sinners, and the malice of Satan. And as the full measure of his sufferings is unfolded to us we shall weep and lament, not for Him, but for ourselves and for our children.

But it is strange that the remembrance of all this brings strength, and solace, and peace. As Bunyan says, "He hath given us rest by his sorrow." The bitterness of his sorrows alternately makes us sad and blessed. Sad that we brought Him such a heritage of woe: happy that since He has borne us, we are for ever emancipated from a lot which must have crushed us. Our lamentations are turned to songs. The cup of his blood brims with the wine of joy.

THURSDAY, October 21.

"That which cometh into your mind shall not be at all; in that ye say, We will be as the nations, as the families of the countries, to serve wood and stone."—Ezek. xx. 32.

There was a tendency among the chosen people to reason thus: Why should we be perpetually reminded of the claims of Jehovah? Why should we not do as we please? Why not do as other nations around, who select their own deities, and do not seem to suffer as we do? Nay, said the Most High, this cannot be. When once I have entered into covenant relations with any, they cannot lightly cast off those sacred bonds. My name and character are too deeply implicated. I must work for my holy Name's sake, that it may not be polluted (ix. 14, 22).

It is a very solemn thing to have become God's children. Sin is not the same in us as in others. In those, it may be slightly passed over, but in us it will be visited with many stripes. We cannot sin with impunity, nor do as we list.

But the thought cuts in two directions; if we are bound to God, He is also bound to us. We may not leave him, but He cannot leave us. He will always be mindful of his covenant. There is one plea with God that never fails; "Do it for thy great name's sake." He cannot deny Himself, or allow his honour to be trampled in the mud. We cannot be as though we had never taken God; nor God, as though He had never taken us.

FRIDAY, October 22.

"I will overturn, overturn, overturn it; and it shall be no more, until He come whose right it is; and I will give it Him."—Ez. xxi. 27.

This prophecy was directed against Zedekiah and Jerusalem, and predicts the coming of Nebuchadnezzar, who is represented as considering an expedition against them and Ammon. Whatever the king of Judah thought to establish by his wit and power, God would overthrow. Nothing should stand, however carefully constructed, till the Messiah came to take up the kingdom and rule with meekness and righteousness.

That fortune which you had built up with so much care was overturned, that you might acquire the true riches. That reputation which you had established for integrity and self-restraint was overturned, that you might despair of yourself and avail yourself of the provision made for sinners in Jesus. That friendship was overturned, that you might come to the love of God. And God will go on with this overturning work until every high thing that exalts itself against the Lord Jesus is thrown down, and until He be admitted to the empire of your heart, who alone has the right over it.

SATURDAY, October 23.

"I will scatter thee among the nations, and disperse thee through the countries; and I will consume thy filthiness out of thee."—Ezek. xxii. 15.

The idea here and in the following paragraph is of the smelting furnace. We are refined by fire. Fire is pain. It is the symbol of all that our nature shrinks from. But affliction is all this. It may be anxiety about money-matters or the chronic ill-temper of some member of your family, or a random word, or a telegraphic message, or a whispered secret, or anxiety about your health, but your soul is filled with fire—keen, strong, alive, devouring. Do not wonder at this, for only so can you be delivered from your dross and filth.

But God appoints it. As much as the process of refining implies the presence of the refiner, the afflictions of the believer imply the presence and purpose of the Lord. The process could not be carried on without Him. So that in every sick chamber, where his servant lies, besides the attendant wife or nurse, sits the Great Refiner of silver, closer than close, nearer than near, tenderer than the tenderest. You may not see Him now, but some day when you look back on your present sufferings, you will understand, and say: "I could not have lived through it, had not the Master been with me."

The trial is a sign of preciousness. You do not cast a stone into the crucible, or winnow chaff, or prune a bramble, or put a cinder in the lap-dog's meal. Now, when Jesus subjects us to trial, it is only because, amid all our dross, His keen eye detects the precious gold which cost him Calvary, and is capable of becoming his ornament of beauty for ever. And in the heat of fire while the dross is passing off, the metal is being wrought into some fair shape.

But, courage, the crucible will soon break; the long process will be over; the soul will break the egg-shell and soar.

Through the test of sharp distresses,
Those whom Heaven most richly blesses,
For its joys are purified.

Spiritual Joy.*

By Mr. GEORGE MÜLLER, Bristol.

WHEN we are exhorted to "Rejoice evermore" (1 Thess. v. 16) the joy spoken of is not of a worldly character, nor joy which arises from temporal success, nor joy even which arises from a goodly measure of health and strength of body and mind; but spiritual joy. This evidently is what is referred to by the whole connection in which the verse stands before us.

Now this spiritual joy we have not naturally, we cannot have naturally, because by nature we are far from God; we have a guilty conscience, we love to go our own way and to please ourselves instead of pleasing God, living for God, and glorifying God; on account of all this it is impossible to have joy in the Lord. There is no love in our hearts to God by nature. In order to get to this state, to love God, we must first be convinced that we are sinners, that we are far from God, and that we need a Saviour, and must seek for salvation in God's appointed way, which is through the Substitute whom He has provided. When the heart enters into it: "Jesus wrought out a righteousness for me, Jesus bore the punishment for me because I trust in Him for salvation," then begins, it may be in a little way, joy in God.

This joy is to be habitual—"rejoice evermore," at all times—rejoice when you are sick, when you have heavy losses in business, when you are greatly tried in the family, in your position and circumstances. It is not said we should rejoice in these things, but in the Lord. Thus it is possible, even while tried in great afflictions, in great difficulty, in great poverty and straits as to the affairs of this life, to be happy in God. How can this be?

The first thing is, the whole heart has to be surrendered to God on the part of those who are believers in the Lord Jesus Christ. By this I mean that not only this great sin and another great sin in which we were living in our unconverted days should be put aside, but that everything which is contrary to the mind of God has to be surrendered, to be hated; and only that which is according to the mind of God has to be loved. This is what we have to understand by the surrender of heart to God. There remains but one single object for your whole life; not five, or ten, or twenty, but there remains only one single object for your whole life, and that is to live for God.

I was converted on November 1, 1825. I walked, in a little measure, in the fear of God and according to the mind of God; but my heart, my whole heart, was only surrendered to God in July, 1829. I cannot tell you the blessedness of the result. One result of it was this, that now the love of money was gone; the love of rank and power; the love of the pleasures of this world; the love of dress, and every little thing that had yet remained, was put aside. Since then, though I have not been a perfect man—for weakness, infirmity, shortcoming, failure, still have been clinging and cleaving to me—my whole life became different from July, 1829. The blessedness of the result cannot be described, so vast and so great is it. Earnest prayer, daily prayer in the consciousness of our weakness, is needed in order to be kept in this state of heart into which we are brought by surrender to God.

We have not to suppose that we can go on spiritually well and neglect the Word of God. This is one of the greatest mistakes. And let me affectionately beseech all believers on no account to neglect the habitual reading of the Word of God, with prayer and with meditation. I cannot lay too much stress on this, because I know from my own experience how even this very thing has been the great instrumentality whereby peace and joy in the Holy Ghost have continued and abounded in me now for sixty-eight years, ever since the heart was surrendered to God.

That is, I have not merely read the Word of God, but have sought to think about it, to apply it to my own heart and circumstances. I read the Word of God in this way: How does this suit me? How does it comfort me? How does it instruct me? How does it warn me? How does it reprove me? That is what I mean by meditation on the Word of God.

I especially urge my young brethren in Christ to read the Scriptures consecutively. For the first three years and a-half I picked out here and there a chapter, and here and there a psalm. I read a little in the New Testament at one time and a little in the Old Testament another time, but I never read consecutively through the Scriptures. But when the whole heart was surrendered to God I began with Genesis and read the Old Testament through to Malachi, and I began with Matthew and read the whole New Testament to the end of the Book of Revelation; and this I have continued all these sixty-eight years now, and I never get tired of reading the Scriptures. For many years I have read the whole Bible through four times, and when I begin it again it is like a new precious book to me.

Then it is not simply prayer over the Word of God, and consecutive reading and meditation, but especially this—to seek to practise what we find in the Word of God, and to carry it out; and on no account to suppose that we may reason about it, and only practise what we think suits us. To me there is this one thing only: It is written, it is written in the Word of God. God has made a revelation of Himself, and this revelation has been recorded in the Word of God by the inspired men of God; and my business is in childlike simplicity to read it, and in childlike simplicity and obedience to act according to it; and the result of it is this—increased peace and joy in the Holy Ghost, increased deadness to the world, increased heavenly-mindedness, and increasing glory.

Work in North China.

May I ask an interest in the prayers of your readers for three young missionaries, who are now well on their way to join the Sheoyang Mission? Dr. and Mrs. Lovitt, with Miss Coombs, sailed for China in August. Dr. Lovitt has gained very useful experience in medical mission work at the Bethnal Green Hospital in connection with Mildmay. He goes out to study Chinese with a view of helping Dr. Edwards at the Schofield Memorial Hospital in Tai yuen Fu. There is a large medical work there, and the need of fresh help has long been felt. The district is a hard and dark one, much under the bondage of opium.

We do not know how soon there may be new and vast movements in China, and we greatly desire to see such forestalled by a wider, deeper Gospel work. Our latest letters give some particulars that may interest your readers. Not long since Mr. Chu confessed Christ; now we hear that he seems truly converted, and that his wife and children are learning the Gospel too. This man is a Chinese scholar, and a most enterprising and active man. From his natural character and wide circle of acquaintance, he is a man likely to be used.

The city of Ping ting Chow has lately been opened, and Mr. Sung, the evangelist, has found a ready hearing and friendly reception. This is a cause for thankfulness, as it is a reading centre, and we were expected to meet with much opposition there.

Field Lane Open-air Mission.—This department of the Field-lane Institutions held a thanksgiving service last week to close the summer session. A most encouraging account of the summer campaign was given. The superintendent reported that meetings had been held every Wednesday evening at Mount Pleasant, Clerkenwell. God has greatly blessed the efforts put forth.

Winchester Soldiers' Home.

A MEETING of friends interested in the work of God among redcoats, and especially in connection with Miss Perks' Soldiers' Home at Winchester, was held at Exeter Hall, on Thursday last. Sir George Williams, who presided, said that no one could read the book, "On Active Service" without feeling it is a book of living miracles, a marvellous testimony to the fact tha God is willing to bless true work among soldiers.

Col. Phillips spoke of his early military experiences when there were no Soldiers' Homes. Yet how much they are needed becomes apparent when we consider that from thirty to forty thousand lads leave their homes every year for the Army, where they are exposed to peculiar temptation. Something is now being done, but after all how little it is compared with the vast need, and the evil which ungodly discharged men may work in the land. The Winchester Soldiers' Home was to his mind a model home. The work done by the earnest ladies who have given themselves to Christian effort in this direction is beyond description. If the godly people of England only understood what is being done, and how much more might be accomplished did funds permit, there would surely be no lack of means to support genuine effort for the salvation of our soldiers.

A drummer testified in a few simple words to the blessing which the Home at Winchester had been to him personally, and to many of his comrades. He added a brief description of the operations at Winchester among the soldiers and their wives. The Chairman questioned the speaker on the work of the Soldiers' Christian Association and its results in the Army.

Miss Perks told once more the story of her work. Having now spent twenty-five years in labour among soldiers, she loves it more than ever, and her faith in its results deepens with fuller experience. The short-service system is filling the country with men who have passed through the army; hence the importance of winning them to Christ, and sending them out as witnesses for Him. A Christian soldier can do in India and elsewhere grand service for God. As to the general mission work associated with the Home, it is going on actively and with much blessing. Amongst "wants" she mentioned bags for books, chest protectors, text cards, lavender bags, and other little things which are used to comfort sick men, touch hard hearts, and win a hearing for the Gospel. Letters from converted men, as well as from thankful wives and mothers, afforded cheering evidence of the way God is blessing these efforts, "Troopship visiting" is also opening out wonderfully, and giving delightful opportunities for telling of God's great gift. This new development caused by the troopships having been removed from Portsmouth to Southampton, has formed into a very important branch, and added considerably to both labour and outlay. Special mention followed of "The Bugle Call," which has been greatly used amongst men in the ranks. Personal workers are much needed, also funds for the maintenance of various important branches of the work.

Sympathetic addresses followed by Messrs. J. Kitchin, H. Hutchinson, M'Call, and others.

The Northfield School.—At a meeting of the trustees of the Mount Hermon School, East Northfield, Mass., Professor Cutler, the principal, presented a report showing that a hundred and twenty-six new students had been received in addition to the nearly two hundred who had returned. This report was followed by one explaining that for every new student who had been accepted, four had been rejected, owing to lack of dormitory room. Mr. Moody and the other trustees were so deeply impressed by this report that they decided that a new dormitory accommodating one hundred students was absolutely necessary. The one hundred additional students can be taught by the present faculty with scarcely any additional expense. The estimated cost of the new building is from 25,000 to 30,000 dols. The new chapel at Mount Hermon is well under way, and will be ready for the commencement next spring.

Mission Work in Callander.

THERE is a lovely village in Perthshire called Callander. It is most beautifully situated, nestling in a valley through which meanders the river Teith. It is almost surrounded by mountains—the chief one named Ben Ledi, which means "the Hill of God." All the surrounding district is exquisite, Loch Katrine and the Trossachs being within walking distance. The whole place, in fact, is fragrant with the name of Sir Walter Scott, for in this neighbourhood lived many of his heroes and heroines. Here were witnessed those stirring scenes which are the national inspiration of the Scottish people.

The village is so far-famed for its beauty that artists come from all parts to depict on canvas as they best can the loveliness of running water, mountain peak, and verdant valley, glowing in the sunset tints, for which the place is so celebrated. Here, too, come numbers annually, seeking health in the pure bracing air, returning to their homes loud in the praises of Callander's climate, which has been of such physical benefit to them.

In the midst of all this beauty of nature men and women live needing salvation. About twenty years ago a lady living there, Mrs. Robertson, the wife of Colonel Robertson, having been truly converted through a serious illness, made a promise to the Lord that if He would raise her up again she would consecrate herself and all she had to his service. So fearful was she of dishonouring God by not keeping her word that this resolve was told to no one. Before she was fully restored to health, however, she felt impelled to begin at once, seeking to be used of God in blessing to others. Never having spoken on such matters to a human being, the reader can understand the dreadful nervousness that possessed her at first.

She started a noon prayer-meeting in her own house, and on her going outside to walk, knocked at the first door with a beating heart, wondering, with much fear, what reception she was to get. The Lord marvellously helped her; intense was the surprise and wonderment all over the place, as never before had a lady in her position lived after this fashion. The local newspapers expressed their indignation, and cartoons ridiculing her and her work were put forth. The enemy raged, but God triumphed; a glorious revival took place, people walking for miles to attend the evangelistic meetings which were begun in the Free Church. Ladies' Bible readings, cottage and kitchen meetings were all started, with many "signs following" the Word preached.

After a little, the work so increased on all sides that she built a mission hall, which was opened by the sainted Dr. Andrew Bonar in 1880. This proved a great success, for now could be focussed all the various meetings under one roof. Another blessed wave of revival was experienced. Soon it was manifest that help was needed from others, who could give their whole lives to the work. This urgent want was spread before the Lord, and in a very striking and unexpected way, He inclined the heart of a lady (Miss Chenevix Trench) living in England, to give up her beautiful home there, and her life, to working for God in Callander. For eighteen years these two ladies have laboured together and witnessed for the Lord "amid good report and ill," amongst all classes, and knowing no other name but "the name of Jesus" in their testimony. Scores of people have testified to being truly converted to God; many have left the place so blessed that they have started similar work in their own homes. The great day only will make manifest all the blessed work that is continually going on in Callander, for the workers prayerfully aim at an unbroken manifestation of the Holy Spirit's power, and they look for, and expect, to see sinners saved and believers helped and strengthened all the year through.

A missionary, Mr. Bisset, is permanently working, and the Lord is graciously using him in blessing to many. Much could be said about his scriptural addresses and the great favour he has found with the people. Many striking incidents could be given of conversion and blessing through the instrumentality of these three happy workers together, but our limited space forbids more. Will the readers of this short story of the Lord's blessed doings in the Highlands pray for the place and the workers, and, as opportunity arises, will they bend their steps, as many already do, to this highly-favoured village, blessed of God in nature and in grace?

Howard Street Gospel Mission.—We have again commenced our Sunday evening services for girls and lads of the neighbourhood. A short Gospel address is given, and plenty of bright singing. The service lasts about an hour. We get very fair order considering the rough class we have to deal with, as they are some of the roughest in the South of London. There is also a sewing class for the elder girls on Tuesday evening, and the elder lads on Friday evening meet for drawing, painting, and making of various useful articles. We need useful articles and literature for reading in their dinner-hour. A number of them are employed in factories near the Mission.—J. Soames, Howard-street Gospel Mission, Wandsworth-road, S.W.

Miss Leigh's Paris Homes.

THE beneficent work of the British and American Mission Homes in Paris, with which the name of Miss Ada Leigh (Mrs. Travers Lewis) is so honourably associated, has frequently been described in our pages. Having for their primary object the befriending of English-speaking young people in the French capital, the Homes deserve generous support; while the fact that around the original institution there has grown a cluster of works, educational and religious, social and philanthropic, for the benefit of young and old, should lay the Homes as a real charge upon the hearts of Christians in the home-lands. On Monday afternoon the cause of the Homes was earnestly pleaded at the Mansion House, in the drawing-room of which the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress convened a public meeting. It is hoped that more friends will come to the help of the work as a result of the statements then made regarding the Homes and their needs.

The report for last year, submitted at the meeting, showed that the admissions to the Mission Home, 77, Avenue de Wagram, numbered 525, making a total of 9274 from the commencement. This large number was chiefly composed of governesses and nurses who had gone to Paris in search of employment. By the agency of the Free Registry 370 situations were found, in connection with which thousands of visits were made by servants and governesses, and persons requiring such helpers in their families. The income for the year amounted to £2199, leaving a deficiency which, added to one on the accounts of the previous years, meant that the institution was now in debt to the extent of £1134.

The Lord Mayor opened the meeting with some hearty words on the worthy character of the work. The Archbishop of Ontario followed, telling the story of the Homes from the beginning. He pleaded for sympathy with the many poor girls who, finding themselves thrown into the battle of life, seek a livelihood in Paris, away from friends and kindred. Although all possible is done to persuade English girls not to go to Paris, yet the stream cannot be stopped; therefore the Homes and their workers follow the stream, to benefit the young people temporally and spiritually. In order to show that the Homes are needed, the speaker remarked that, though much generosity has been exhibited by the British public, the greatest benefactors have been M. Galignani and Baroness Alphonse de Rothschild, both residents in France. Mr. F. A. Bevan emphasized the value of the Homes on the testimony of those who use them, as shown by the considerable extent to which the work has become self-supporting.

Mrs. Travers Lewis outlined the story of the work. Girls of the professional classes, who live at home while home holds together, strike out for themselves as orphans, and Paris attracts them. They are inexperienced, but think that they will make their way somehow. Having regard to the resourceless situation of many of the young women, it is out of the question to think of the Mission Homes being entirely self-supporting. To make a prohibitive charge would be to exclude the very classes whom it is intended to benefit. The Washington Home, for students and those who have means of their own, is much valued by young people and their friends. The Orphanage has been the refuge of hundreds of children, protecting them from lives of misery and shame. To sustain the various institutions, with their 185 beds, at least ten guineas a day is required.

Baptists and their Work.

THE autumnal gatherings of the Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland were held last week at Plymouth. Many helpful words were spoken, and various questions were discussed and causes advocated. As usual, the preliminary meeting, held on Monday evening, was devoted to the claims of the Home Mission, which celebrates its centenary this year. The evangelistic zeal and untiring devotion of the fathers were pleasantly recalled, and aggressive effort resolved upon.

Among the speakers was Rev. Charles Brown (Ferme Park, N.), who alluded to the generosity of the churches at the beginning of the century, when pastors were temporarily set at liberty to go through the villages with the Gospel. He said: No one ever heard in my time of a large church setting its minister free for three months or six, unless for a sea voyage or a visit to the churches of China and Jamaica. No one ever heard of such a thing being done by a church, in order that its gifted minister might be quite free to visit his brethren in his own country. Yet how they would welcome him! And, physically, it might do him as much good as a sea voyage; spiritually, too, it would broaden his sympathies and augment his zeal, and get him out of ruts—for it is written in the records of this society 100 years ago, concerning Rev. Daniel Sprague, bosom friend of Dr. Rippon, and pastor of Tiverton, that "Engaging in this delightful work, and preaching fourteen or fifteen sermons a week, strengthened his body and invigorated his mind, so that when he resumed his pastoral work at Tiverton he encouraged new meetings for prayer and exhortation at the extreme ends of the town, and began to preach in villages where he had never laboured before." Mr. Brown urged the duty of upon ministers and people, if only to save the children from the priest and his influence. Rev. Alfred Rowland showed that the noblest characters are often reared in village churches. He urged united effort on the part of Baptists and Congregationalists, for one thing to put an end to waste of power and unwholesome competition.

The early morning sermon on Tuesday, in George-street Chapel, was preached by Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, of Norwich, who took for his text Isaiah xix. 24—"In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and with Assyria." It was shown that the prophetic vision was of a new world, arising out of the confusion and struggle of the old; the now extinct peoples symbolise a redeemed humanity united by the benediction of God. "Blessed be Egypt my people, and Assyria the work of my hands, and Israel mine inheritance." Describing heathen darkness and hunger, the preacher said: Heathenism is the seeking religion which cries, "Who will show us any good?" Christianity is the finding religion which cries, "Thou hast the words of eternal life." Heathenism is man seeking God, the Gospel is God coming down to seek man. Heathenism is a speculation; the Gospel is the message from the heart of God. Therefore, we are not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ. We are not ashamed of the one cross, the one glorified and ascended Lord. We are not ashamed to range ourselves with the fishermen of Galilee. "Neither is there salvation in any other, for there is none other name given under heaven whereby we must be saved."

THE ONE EMPTY SEPULCHRE,

On Tuesday morning Mr. W. R. Rickett, treasurer of the Missionary Society, presided over a designation and valedictory service. Missionaries returning on furlough, and others going out for the first time, had an opportunity of stating in brief the way the Lord had led them. In the course of a hearty address, the Chairman remarked, that while proud of its missionaries, the Society was increasingly looking to the native Christians to preach the Word of Life to their brethren. The valedictory address was delivered by Rev. W. Brock, whose words were warm and stimulating. He assured the outgoing workers that their endeavours in the name of Christ would assuredly survive them, and alluding to those labourers whose task is o'er he said: There are no dead missionaries; there are no dead Christians. Our God is the God, not of the dead, but of the living. Whatever comes between the beginning and the end is everlasting life. When the end comes, then comes death, but not failure! Then we attain, we overcome, we enter into the joy of our Lord. Now you go from us, but you do not think we shall forget you. You are our comrades, our brethren, our sisters. No distance breaks the tie of blood. You are one with us in the gift and grace of Jesus Christ. You are more, you are our ambassadors, the angels of the churches to the heathen world. As you go forth, think of us as bearing you upon our hearts, pleading for you before the Throne. We will not forget you. We will cherish your names, we will follow your fortunes, we will rejoice in your successes.

On Tuesday afternoon Rev. W. L. Watkinson, president of the Wesleyan Conference, preached a powerful missionary sermon. In the evening a public meeting was held, Dr. Hingston presiding. Rev. E. C. Smith, of Chouping, Shantung, spoke of the work of God in China. Rev. Dr. Maclaren followed with an address rich in thought and strong in purpose. He dwelt upon the universality of sin, the sufficiency of the work of Christ, and the imperative obligation of Christian people to evangelise the world His concluding words were: "Keep close to Jesus Christ, and get more of his spirit. That will fire, and nothing else will fire missionary zeal. If you want to get down to the deep underlying reservoirs from which all treasures of self-sacrifice can be drawn—then you must get closer to Jesus Christ. The ground work of all Christian vitality and of all missionary enterprise must be that. Only if we keep near to Him shall we for the suffering and the lost. Only if we keep near to Him will our spirits be dwelt in by that Spirit which they that believe on Him should receive. Only if we keep near to Him shall we, filled with the Holy Spirit, become fountains from which shall flow rivers of living water. Wherefore, dear friends, as my last word, let us all listen to the tender commission and the last command of our dear Lord, 'Abide in Me. He that abideth in Me, and I in him, the same shall bring forth much fruit: for, severed from Me, ye can do nothing.'" Rev. J. R. M. Stephens, of Yukusu, Central Africa, described the conditions of work in the Dark Continent; and Rev. R. Wright Hay spoke on effort in Eastern Bengal.

At the first session of the Union on Wednesday morning Rev. E. G. Gange, president, delivered an address on "The Kingly Christ." It was a timely utterance with many striking arguments admirably sustained by Scripture quotation and pointed with illustrative allusion. Later on, deputations from the Free Church Council and the Society of Friends were received. Words were spoken in praise of Puritan principles, and a determination expressed to resist the sacerdotal invasion. Resolutions were unanimously carried on the following subjects: Primary Education, International Arbitration, State Regulation of Vice, Slavery in Zanzibar, and Sunday Closing. In the afternoon, Mrs. Rickett presided over a Zenana Missionary meeting, at which several lady workers from India and China delivered addresses.

On Thursday morning Rev. George Hawker read a paper on "The Attitude of Baptists Towards Romanism." He said that their temper towards Romanism had grown milder; if they were as good Protestants as their fathers, they were not so fierce. If this temper was due to it was open to the gravest criticism. They ought to maintain the right of the Protestant succession, but, at the same time, they would allow Roman Catholics civil rights. They might be taunted with a want of logic, but there was a logic of events as well as a logic of the schools; and they believed that Providence had ruled that it was for ever unlawful for a Roman Catholic to sway the sceptre of the British empire. Disclaiming any ill-feeling towards Romanists individually, Mr. Hawker dealt with the system. The chief error of the Papacy is sacerdotalism, the blasphemous assumption that raised the priest to equality with God; and as the priest replaced Christ on earth, so the Romish Church had made Mary replace Christ in heaven. Auricular confession provoked the sin which it professed to forgive. The Irish, although a Romanist people, had a proverb which ran, "as foul as a priest's ear." Statistics show the vast influnce which the Romanist revival has exercised in this country since the beginning of the Queen's reign, and it becomes Baptists to be vigilant in instruction and unceasing and uncompromising in their opposition.

Rev. Dr. Glover, moving a resolution deploring the advance of priestly pretensions and sacramentarian superstitions, and urging all Christians to uphold the sole mediatorship and sovereignty of Christ, recalled the fact that they had fought Rome when more truculent than now. The prosperity of their Protestantism was one of the greatest answers that could be given to the assumptions of Popery. Other speakers were Revs. C. Joseph (Portsmouth), N. H. Shaw (from Italy), W. A. Bloomfield, and E. C. Pike. It was decided that the speeches of Dr. Glover and Mr. Hawker should be printed and circulated among the Sunday-schools and young people generally.

On Friday morning the missionary breakfast was held, followed by a conference on how to deepen and increase

MISSIONARY ENTHUSIASM AMONG THE YOUNG.

In the course of discussion numerous hints were given, including the provision of well-stored libraries of missionary books and volumes of travel, missionary lantern lectures, etc. One delegate would have halfpenny a week collections, and the missionary boxes opened more frequently and the amounts announced. Mr. A. H. Baynes, closing the discussion, showed that during the last thirty years seventy-seven per cent. of their missionaries had been in the Sunday schools, and nearly all had also been teachers. Roughly speaking, one-third of their income was contributed by Sunday schools and young people's auxiliaries.

At the final meeting on Friday evening, presided over by Sir Hugh Gilzean Reid, much enthusiasm was aroused by the remark of Rev. D. J. Hiley, of Bristol, that the distinctive tenet of the Baptists enabled them to be the most efficient opponents of the Roman Church. Rev. J. Thomas, of Liverpool, dwelt on the expansion of the denomination, not by compromise of principle, but by loyalty to their fundamental truths.

The Mildmay Annual Sale is to be held on Wednesday, the 2nd, and Thursday, the 3rd of December. Contributions of clothing for the poor, or those in better circumstances, pretty or useful articles, either English or foreign, are sure to sell. Friends will perhaps remember the needs of the Mildmay Hospitals, which are very great. Among the things likely to sell best are women's stuff petticoats, men's comforters and socks, flannelette nightgowns, children's socks and stockings, children's stuff frocks, pinafores and overalls, fancy pinafores, white aprons of linen or nainsook, flannel dressing jackets, night-gown cases, shoe bags, Bradshaw covers, writing boards, slippers, cushions, pincushions, footstools, dolls of all sorts and sizes. Parcels should be addressed to Mrs. A. R. Pennefather, Deaconess House, Mildmay Park, N.

Good Roads, and How to Make Them.

By Grace Winter.

Let no man put a stumbling-block, or an occasion to fall, in his brother's way.

I WAS walking along a beautiful country road with some friends the other day, and as we walked we remarked to one another what a good road it was, how broad and well made, and how easy to walk upon.

I could not help thinking of all the people who had gone that way before us, and who had helped to make it a good road. There was the man who planned the road first of all, and the many workmen who carried out his directions in levelling and raising it. There were the men who built the bridges over the rivers, and those who put up the sign-posts and the milestones for the convenience of travellers. There were others who planted the hedges, or built stone walls to enclose the road, and the men who set the trees in avenues to make it shady. All these had been upon the road before us, and though they knew nothing about us, and had never heard our names, yet they had all helped to make our afternoon walk more pleasant for us.

What a very different matter it would have been if we had been travelling in a newly-discovered country, where there were no bridges, no roads, and no sign-posts! Pioneers—as those men are called who set themselves to open a way into a new country—have a hard time of it. They need to be very brave and very strong to do their work well, and to make an easy path for those who come after them.

Life is a road which all must travel. How many people have gone before us, and how much they have smoothed the path of life for us! The heroes of history, of whom you learn in school, who fought that we might live in peace—the martyrs who suffered and died that we might worship God in the way that we think right—all the inventors who have made work so much simpler than it used to be, the clever men who wrote your school-books, and other works of art and science, so that you, who come after them, might learn easily what they found out with so much difficulty—all these have been pioneers, making the road of life easy to travel. Ought we not to feel grateful for all that they have done for us?

Suppose that a gang of men should go out some night, and break down all the bridges, cut down the trees, put great blocks of stone in the way, dig holes for travellers to fall into, deface the milestones, and alter the directions on the sign-posts! what would you think of such men? Yet I am afraid we meet with some such people sometimes in the journey of Life.

There are Helpers and Hinderers—the people who make life easier for those about them, and the people who make life harder. You know those two kinds of people, don't you? The Helpers are always willing to lend you a hand in whatever you are doing, and to say an encouraging word to you when they cannot do anything else. Often they will go out of their way to put things straight and smooth for you. It means a pleasant day for us when we come across one of the Helpers.

But what of the Hinderers? They give you the cold shoulder when you most need their help; they discourage and wet-blanket you in whatever you undertake; they go around with cross faces and cross words, and they wouldn't go one step out of their way to help you, were it ever so little.

To which of these do you belong, to the Hinderers or to the Helpers? You may think that you are so young and so unnoticed that what you do makes no difference to anyone else, but it is not so. That is a great mistake to make. Every duty, no matter how small it is, whether it is the keeping tidy of a room or the learning of a lesson, every duty faithfully done makes the world better, and makes it easier, too, for others to do their duty. There is always someone at hand to be helped and encouraged. You can at least have a pleasant word ready, and that makes all the difference in the world sometimes to one who is tired or discouraged. Pleasant words go far towards smoothing life's pathway. And when I think of all those workmen who made and mended the road on which we walked that day, I do not suppose that they thought about the future; they simply did the work they were given to do, and yet it was a help to us years after. So with every little duty of yours, if you do it faithfully and well, you are helping to smooth the pathway of life for others. Even girls and boys can do this. You can make life easy, or you can make it hard, for your mothers, and your nurses, and your teachers.

The Best of Fathers.

By Rev. Joseph Woodhouse.

Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear Him.—Psalm ciii. 13.

Only when we try to understand this passage, we have to think of the very best Father that ever lived. A father like that laughing-faced little maiden had who said the other day, "Ah! my father is the very goodest good father of all." She thought there was no one in all the world equal to him.

It will not do to think of any but the very noblest earthly father when we look at this beautiful verse and think of God. Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear Him.

So then, God is our Father—our very own Father. How rich He is! The cattle upon a thousand hills are his. The gold, the silver, the iron, the precious stones—rare, costly, flashing gems everywhere—are his. The stars are his—his shining lamps to light the angels on their way in the night-time as they speed on his messages of love to his children. The glorious sun is his with its golden sheen. The rain, the winds, the frost and snow, the flowers, the rocks, and the sea—all, all are his, your heavenly Father's.

How easy it ought to be to love Him. How natural! Don't you think so? Just as natural as it is for the lark to sing and the lily to bloom. You are not afraid of Him I hope? It is a big mistake for any girls and boys to be afraid of God. Why, He is infinitely better than my little friend's father who said, "My father is the very goodest good father of all."

This reminds me of a destitute little lad, who was once lying in the ward of a hospital. There was no mother's soft hand to smooth his pillow, no mother's lips to kiss his pale forehead; and above all he was dying. The nurse tried to tell him of heaven and God. She told him, also, of the love of Jesus for children, no matter how small and poor they might be. The boy listened with a quiet smile on his face for a long time. Presently he asked, "Will God take me to heaven when I die?" "Yes," nurse said, "if you love Him; for God is your Father, you know."

But as soon as she said that, to her great astonishment, the poor little fellow looked frightened and began to cry. So she asked him what was the matter. "Oh!" he said, "I don't want to go where there is any father." She was startled. She could not understand it, and then he said, with tears running down his pale cheeks: "Fathers always knock you about so. I don't want to go where there is any father. He'll beat me. I am sure he'll beat me." And then it turned out that he had a bad, drunken father, who was very cruel to him, and the only thought he had was that of a father who would, as he termed it, "knock you about so." Not like that brutal father, but like the very best father you can think of is God, only a thousand, thousand times better. I don't think you can help loving Him if He is like that, do you? He is "the very goodest good Father of all," who showed his great love in giving his only Son to die for us. Shall we not love Him, because He first loved us?

Children of the Villages.

THE annual report and praise meeting of the Caravan Mission to Village Children was held on Saturday last at the Centenary Hall, Bishopsgate-street, Mr. D. C. Apperly presiding.

Mr. J. H. P. Cutting, who has been working in the villages of Suffolk, with van No. 4, told how the blessing of God had rested upon the work. He related several instances showing how not only the children, but adults, had been led to decision for Christ through the work of the Mission. At the first village visited this summer, a schoolmaster was converted, who afterwards testified that for thirty years he had been a member of a church choir, and for over twenty years, a daily reader of his Bible, but until the van visited his village he was unsaved. In another village, one of the most ungodly men in the place, a shepherd, cried aloud to God for mercy at one of the meetings in the tent, and was led to the Lord. He has since started a fortnightly prayer-meeting in his own cottage.

Mr. Coffin who, with his brother, has been working with van No. 1, spoke of the work in another part of Suffolk, and accounts of the work in Surrey and Somerset were given by Messrs. Fairclough and Glover.

Mr. Stentiford spoke of the work of correspondence with the children. Nearly 1000 children are being written to by about 500 Christian friends in London and elsewhere. Each month the children are written a letter of loving counsel and sympathy, and a small magazine is sent to them.

Mr. Geo. Goodman related many instances showing the depth and reality of the work among the children. Many of those who have been led to the Lord in past years through the work of this Mission are now bearing bright testimony for Him. He read a letter from a village in Cambridge showing how one young man, who was brought to the Lord in 1894, was holding a weekly meeting, and how God was blessing the work.

Mr. S. J. Hewlett spoke of the work in Somerset, and also stated that unless funds were forthcoming quickly the financial year would close with a balance on the wrong side.

Amongst London Missions.

A ROTHERHITHE "MEN'S OWN."

WORKING MEN are proverbially "shy fish." In most of the churches the problem of the day is: How are we to get hold of the men, who are conspicuous by their absence? Many a true servant of Christ is ready to confess that his hardest task is to win them—yet there are labourers notably successful amongst men. Whether it be due to personality, or special methods, it is not easy to decide; probably a happy combination of both goes far to account for success in winning the attention of working men.

A good example of this may be found in Rotherhithe Free Church, where the most interesting part of the operations is the Men's Own Meeting on Sunday afternoon. No baits are held out, political and social matters are debarred, the theme is the Gospel (and Gospel temperance) plainly and personally set forth, in language men can understand; yet already the membership is 668, while the actual average attendance is seven or eight hundred. Many of these are lightermen, dock labourers, factory hands. Many are of the roughest types. Numbers were wont to spend the Lord's Day in the public-house. But here they are ready and willing to listen to the Gospel, while few speakers are so welcome as those who deal with Christian Evidences; for however careless and indifferent working men may be, they are NEITHER ATHEISTS NOR SECULARISTS.

Membership in this Men's Own does not simply imply a formal attendance at a popular service. From all sides comes testimony to the effect that "My husband is a changed man since he took to going to your meeting." "My brother comes now on Sundays, and you've no idea how different his life is." Nor is this surface work merely. Many are radically changed. One worker—a notorious drunkard, brought in from the public-house—was led to accept Christ, and is now a devoted, thorough Christian, and one of the best workers in the "Public-house Brigade." Being asked, "Don't you get 'chipped' a bit by the men on the river?" he replied, "Well, I do; it's hard—but they

as they did to my Master." This is a man who not long ago would have knocked down anyone who made fun of him. The "Brigade" just mentioned is formed of members who undertake to scour the public-houses, and endeavour to bring in their old companions and others found loafing about. This Men's Own has been, indeed, a remarkable success, as all know who have had the privilege of addressing the Sunday afternoon gatherings.

While, however, this is the most salient feature in the work at Rotherhithe Free Church, it is far from exhaustive. It is in addition to, and not in place of, the large and important operations at this undenominational and evangelistic centre. The mission sprang, over twenty years ago, out of Gospel services in the Star Music Hall. It was carried on for twenty years by Mr. S. Golding. On his decease, three and a-half years ago, Mr. Thomas Richardson—a convert in Mr. Moody's services in the Bow-road Hall, and a fruitful worker at the Great Assembly Hall—was called to the oversight. Although a city man and fully engaged in business, he has carried on the operations with vigour and growing power.

The Sunday services are crowded to excess, many being unable to find room. On a recent occasion the fine Town Hall was taken for an overflow, when that too was packed, and hundreds turned away. The Sunday-school also—with 809 scholars—is overflowing. The Women's Bible-class fills two large rooms, while women, unable to gain admittance, crowd the passage and stairs. To enumerate all the varied agencies, reaching every class and condition, would be a vain task. Suffice that the present buildings are in full and constant use, that old and young are attracted, and that in every department the earnest workers are hampered and perplexed by want of space.

One unique feature to be noted is that the whole organisation is self-supported. The people are and they do give. For example, the recent harvest thanksgiving produced £30, mainly in small coins and coppers. On coming into the work, Mr. Richardson found a debt of £300. "This," he said, "we must clear." A day was appointed when those who had received blessing might bring thank-offerings. On reaching Rotherhithe Station at 7 a.m., he found some already waiting to be the first to give. Ere the close of the day the debt was cleared, and a balance was in hand. This past year they have given, out of their poverty, some £1600.

This willing-heartedness is typical of the whole spirit of the workers and members; and hence no appeal for ordinary funds has been made. Now, however, a special need has arisen. A larger hall is imperative. A freehold site has been purchased, and on it, as soon as funds are forthcoming, it is proposed to build a hall to hold 2000, while later on a lecture-hall and schoolroom will, it is hoped, be added.

The Pastor (Mr. Thomas Richardson, 48, Lower-road, Rotherhithe, S.E.) in his last report says:—

In December, 1898, our lease expires, and steps will have to be taken immediately to raise a permanent structure. To do this locally would, of course, be a sheer impossibility, for Rotherhithe is beyond doubt one of the poorest districts in London. We are very anxious to erect a plain, substantial building to accommodate 2000 or more people. We will do our part to the best of our ability, but we now appeal most earnestly to the Lord's rich stewards to come forward and help us. This is a real need, and it is to be hoped that those who have the means will come to our assistance at once.

This effort ought to commend itself to all who know the value of such a live Gospel centre, and appreciate the self-denying efforts of the people themselves to maintain the work so dear to them and so full of blessing to young and old.

PEARL FISHER.

The Maidstone Epidemic.

A PRIVATE letter received by a Manchester minister gives a vivid picture of the state of things prevailing in Maidstone. The writer says:—

"Our Wesleyan schoolroom, adjoining the chapel, has been open as a hospital since Monday, and is now, I believe, full. Men had to work all day on Sunday in enlarging the drainage system. It was a strange day to us—no bells ringing, a very small congregation, and a most terrible air of trouble and sorrow everywhere. We had the "Dead March" at both services, as three belonging to the congregation had died. And through the whole service there was the sound of the workmen. All communication between the chapel and the school has been cut off by a thick brick wall, so we shall have service as usual. A mission church, belonging to St. Michael's, and a Congregational schoolroom have also been turned into hospitals. We are now beginning to realise what destitution will be caused by this outbreak. Its effects are far-reaching. The trade of the town is practically at a standstill. People will not have a single thing sent from the town to adjoining places.

"It is almost incredible how foolish people are about the imagined infection. A Maidstone tradesman went to a London warehouse, and had the greatest difficulty in getting anyone to serve him. This kind of thing is repeated everywhere, and it will be long before trade is restored to its balance. I do not know what we should have done if it had been really an infectious illness—that is too terrible to think about. No one need ever say that the nursing profession is over full after our experience here. The supply is not in excess of the demand, and we have now nearly 500 nurses in the town. Many households are in great straits for want of servants, owing to their being down with typhoid, or having left through fear. No servant will come into the town from outside, so we shall be short-handed for a long time to come."

Zenana Missionary Farewells.

ZENANA BIBLE AND MEDICAL MISSION.

A VALEDICTORY meeting was held at Exeter Hall on Tuesday week, when farewell was said to ten ladies about to start for work in India in connection with the above society. Special interest was added by the fact that the noble chairman is about himself to start on a visit to Indian mission stations.

Lord KINNAIRD, in welcoming the outgoing missionaries, said they were proceeding to India at a time of remarkable interest and sadness. In one year there had come upon India famine, pestilence, and earthquake, and now a large frontier war, but he believed there was some Divine purpose in all this affliction. Referring to the work of the Society, his Lordship said that the famine had seriously affected the general funds, and the result was a debt of nearly £5000. The famine, although officially declared to be at an end, was by no means over, and there were numbers of widows and orphans to be provided for. In conclusion, the chairman made a touching reference to the loss sustained by the Society through the death of Miss Barrett.

Mr. J. E. COOKE, who has spent forty years in India, bore unhesitating testimony to the good work of the Zenana ladies in Allahabad, Lahore, Poona, and Bombay.

Touching words followed by Miss Cameron, who is returning to Bulandshuhr; Miss Gregory, who has long laboured at Patna, but is now going to Benares; Miss Harris, returning to the North-West Provinces, and Miss M. Hill to Jaunpur.

Amongst the new missionaries who spoke were Miss Weatherley, an experienced and well-known Christian worker now going to Lahore; Miss Cheshire going to Jaunpur, and Miss Fulcher to Malegaon.

Rev. J. G. Train gave the address to the missionaries, speaking from the text "But David encouraged himself in the Lord his God" (1 Sam xxx. 6).

CHURCH ZENANA MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

A well-attended meeting of this Society was held at Queen's Hall, Langham-place, on Thursday, to take leave of a number of the Society's missionaries about to leave for various stations in India, China, and Ceylon.

Col. ROBERT WILLIAMS, M.P., presided, and those present included the Bishop of Tinnevelly, Revs. J. Ireland Jones, H. E. Fox, J. A. Faithfull, and J. W. Marshall. The chairman in the course of a brief address, alluded to the need which existed for more missionaries in India, Ceylon, and China, and congratulated the Society on the fact that it was helping in some measure to supply that need.

Rev. G. TONGE, clerical secretary, stated that a special effort had been made during the year to commemorate the Queen's Diamond Jubilee by sending sixty additional missionaries to the countries where the Society was now working; but, notwithstanding that effort the reinforcements were below the average of the past few years. There were, however, many tokens of encouragement; in some parishes and neighbourhoods, special efforts had been made with cheering results. Nineteen new missionaries were now being sent out, while a number of others were returning. This number did not, however, represent all the volunteers, for of nineteen candidates now in residence at the training homes, by far the greater number had offered and been accepted during the present year. About one-fourth of the sixty additional missionaries asked for had been obtained, and of the £10,000 required for the sixty new missionaries, some £2500 had been subscribed. He then read the committee's formal instructions to the departing missionaries, who, including those returning from furlough, numbered thirty-four, ten of whom go to North India, thirteen to the Punjab and Sindh, five to South India, one to Ceylon, and five to China.

An address to the departing missionaries was afterwards delivered by Rev. Evan H. Hopkins.

A Temperance Convention.

UNDER the auspices of the National United Temperance Council a three days' conference was held last week, beginning with meetings on Tuesday in the Royal Albert Hall.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, who presided in the afternoon, spoke on as a matter which had been before the public some time, and had given rise to considerable debate. They had already succeeded in closing public-houses in Ireland, Scotland, and Wales. If it were true that Sunday closing was good for those parts of her Majesty's dominions it was very improbable that it would not be good for England also. They had so far succeeded in convincing the body of the English people themselves. A very large number would heartily welcome such an Act of Parliament as they proposed. We have got to the point when people are beginning seriously to consider how terrible is the evil of discrediting the Lord's Day in the way in which it is discredited at present.

Revs. F. B. Meyer, Dr. Newman Hall, Sir Thomas Lea, Canon Howell, Lady E. Biddulph, Prebendary Webb-Peploe, and others, spoke with like fervour on the evils of the Sunday traffic and the importance of energetic efforts to secure Sunday closing throughout the Empire.

Lord Kinnaird presided in the evening at a great public demonstration in the Albert Hall. In the course of his opening address he expressed the opinion that the convention would mark an important era in the history of the temperance campaign. All attending it were asked to join in a united effort during the coming winter to bring about Sunday closing for England. The campaign which was to be undertaken would bring to the front, in a way which had never been done before, the united position which temperance reformers took on this question.

Mr. A. Pease, M.P., moved a resolution recording satisfaction at the fact that the afternoon conference had unanimously resolved upon a united and energetic campaign in support of Imperial Sunday Closing. This was ably supported by Canon Murnane, Mrs. Pearsall Smith, Mr. A. C. Corbett, M.P., Rev. A. T. Guttery, and Mr. A. F. Hills.

Wednesday morning was devoted to the consideration of the advantages of a National Temperance Week. Mr. A. F. Hills dwelt upon the importance of COMMON ACTION IN A COMMON CAUSE.

He suggested that the first week in July would be suitable for the purpose. The first Sunday might be devoted to temperance services in St. Paul's and Westminster Abbey. On successive days it was suggested that there should be various gatherings, including a great national fête at the Crystal Palace, and affording a significant demonstration of temperance strength. Mr. W. J. Hicks cordially approved this programme. He deplored evidences of jealousy among leaders of the different sections of the Temperance party, and pointed out that the annual assembly would be for the purpose, not of discussing differences, but of emphasising points on which there was agreement.

At the afternoon meeting Mr. T. Vesey Strong opened a discussion on "The London Temperance Hospital." During the past twenty-five years 13,000 in-patients had been treated in the hospital. Its expenditure was £10,000 per annum, but annual subscriptions yielded only £1800. At present, owing to want of funds, two of the wards are closed.

In the course of the subsequent discussion, Mr. W. S. Caine said that if there was one institution more than another with a claim upon temperance societies for an annual collection or contribution it was the London Temperance Hospital.

The closing day was given to the consideration of

and how best to influence the magistrates and Quarter Sessions. Strong emphasis was laid on the duty of temperance reformers and of citizens, acting through corporations, watch committees, and other bodies, to bring pressure to bear on the police to do their duty, the whole duty in Brewster Sessions action being to get the facts properly before the magisterial bench. Local magisterial discretion was, it must be remembered, exercised under the serious disadvantage of being blocked and rendered nugatory in the event of appeal to Quarter Sessions. The Dover case, the most important decision since the equally remarkable case of "Sharp v. Wakefield," had affirmed the right of any member of the public to oppose the granting of a licence without incurring the risk of being compelled to pay costs on appeal.

At the afternoon sitting, in a discussion on "How to Secure a Better Enforcement of the Licensing Laws—the Influence of Watch Committees, etc.," Mr. R. Foulkes Griffiths pointed out that originally the licensing laws were suppressing laws, but that by legal interpretation and by other means the suppressing power of the licensing justices had been curtailed, and the appeal to Quarter Sessions acted as a complete block on the suppressing force of the licensing laws. Other speeches followed, and the need for further action was emphasised by representatives of temperance organisations in various parts of the country.

In addition to the Albert Hall Demonstration on Tuesday evening, meetings were held—on Wednesday, in the Presbyterian Church, Ossulton-street, N.W.; on Thursday, in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End; and on Friday in the Victoria Hall, New Cut, where Rev. J. Tolefree Parr presided, and said that on great moral issues, such as the temperance question, all Christians were absolutely united. One of the great schemes they had to consider was that of Sunday closing in England. Scotland, Ireland, and Wales had long ago enjoyed this blessing. He felt certain that Londoners wanted it. He hoped that one result of the week's work would be a closer union of the various temperance societies, so that in their attack on the stronghold of drink they might present a bold front and all be in line. Dr. C. T. Porter, of Southport, regretted that London had not set a good example to the provincial towns. He wanted to see a reduction in the number of public-houses. At present there were 116,000. One house for every 1000 people in towns and one for every 600 in the country was quite enough. If this were adopted there would then be 36,000 houses. He strongly favoured Sunday closing. Surely the man who most stood in need of it was he who frequented public-houses the rest of the week.

JOTTINGS.

At the Manchester licensing sessions the police reported twenty publicans for alleged misconduct, but all save seven licences were renewed.

The Yarmouth magistrates have refused to renew any of the existing dancing licences held by licensed houses, granting only those for halls where no intoxicants are sold.

At the fifty-fifth annual conference of the Evangelical Union of Scotland, Rev. John Kirk gave notice of the following motion:—"That all churches recognising the liquor trade in their membership be excluded from the Union."

Bishop Tugwell, on the eve of his departure for Lagos, made another appeal to the nation to face is responsibility for the liquor traffic in West Africa. Africa asks for Prohibition, and Europe refuses because it would "too seriously affect her commercial interests."

The National Temperance League has just published (1d.) a pamphlet containing letters by Archdeacon Perowne and Rev. Henry Brandreth, on the questions, "Did Jesus Christ make and drink intoxicating wine?" and "Does God's Word sanction the use of intoxicating drink?"

The executive of the Scottish Christian Union, B.W.T.A., have passed a resolution to the effect that they view with alarm the revival of the Cantonments Acts in India; they declare uncompromising hostility to the system of the State regulation of vice, and express determination to oppose the system by every means in their power.

Mildmay Consumptive Home, Torquay.—The annual report of the Home, "Smyrna," Bronshill-road, Torquay, says:—"The Home has been fully appreciated by the class for whom it is designed, being full up to the end of May, and through the summer six or seven patients gratefully accepting its care. Many of those received derived decided benefit, and only three deaths have occurred in the Home; two other patients, having relatives near, left the Home after nine weeks' care to die amongst their own people. Some have spent the year with us, the others periods ranging from ten to three months. These are all cases ineligible for hospitals or convalescent homes, and yet absolutely needing both care and nursing." The institution is entirely dependent on voluntary contributions. The hon. secretary is Miss Gumbleton, "Connemara," Torquay.

Wrongs of Native Races.

AN address on this subject was recently given at Westbourne-park Chapel, London, by Mr. H. R. Fox Bourne, Secretary of the Aborigines' Protection Society. It cannot be contended, he said, that one man or a small group of men should have a monopoly in land, of which better use can be made by far greater numbers with advantage to the original possessors as well as to the new comers. The prime condition is that the original proprietors shall not be injured in any way, but shall be benefited as far as possible by any and all who have legitimate grounds for intrusion upon them. The incontrovertible rights of native races may be said to comprise (1) a right to all the land they require and all the produce they can get out of it, (2) a right to hold any opinions and observe any customs they favour, however ignorant or barbarous, unless and until they can be brought voluntarily, by fair argument and good example, to adopt better ways and views; (3) a right to personal liberty and exemption from all such forced labour and compulsory service as are now approved by people who pretend that slavery under the British flag has been for ever abolished; (4) a right to all the genuine civilisation and real enlightenment—religious, social, or political—that we can give them in honest return for the commercial and other gains we derive from our dealings with them.

Too often, Mr. Fox Bourne contended, we ignore and violate those rights. What are the stages of our dealings with native races, especially in Africa? We covet their land and its produce. Frequently we take possession of their lands without pretence of an excuse. If we pretend to be fair or generous we make treaties with chiefs, who generally do not understand what they are signing or putting their marks to, and if they did would have no power to barter away the rights of their people for bottles of gin or other paltry gifts. If the treaties are broken, or if we say they are broken, we bring our Maxim guns and other "resources of civilisation" into play, and, having slaughtered hundreds or thousands, and having cowed the survivors, we cowhide them into toiling for us in any way we appoint, and to such work as we appoint, if any. This is slavery, however styled, and the culminating wrong of all the wrongs imposed by us on the native races that we propose to civilise and Christianise.

Having thus stated his case in general terms, Mr. Fox Bourne proceeded to illustrate his argument by some particulars. The modern "scramble for Africa," organised and developed by the Berlin Conference of 1885, was first touched upon, with brief reference to the proceedings of the Congo Free State, to the German, French, and Italian operations in Central Africa, and to our own action in Uganda and British East Africa, the Soudan, and West Africa, where the Niger Company and the Colonial Office appear to be on the eve of fresh developments. Fuller consideration was then given to British South Africa, to the increase of oppression in Cape Colony, as shown by the pass law, the compound system, the Glen Grey Act, and other infringements of native rights, and especially to the progress of affairs in Matabeleland and British Bechuanaland. The conditions under which the Chartered Company obtained a footing in Matabeleland, the overthrow of Lobengula in 1893, the subsequent appropriation of the natives' lands and cattle, the compulsory labour enacted from them, the origin and sequel of the rebellion of last year, and the unsatisfactory arrangements now in force or attempted were concisely reviewed.

The address concluded with an account of the methods by which the Crown colony of British Bechuanaland was established in 1884, of the betrayal of its people by their being transferred to the rule of the Cape Colony in 1895, of the trumped-up "rebellion" of last December, of the "nigger-hunting" that ensued, and of the present indenturing of "surrendered Bechuana rebels" to Cape farmers in want of cheap and compulsory labour. There are a few thousands captured and enslaved men, women, and children involved in this Bechuana affair, Mr. Fox Bourne pointed out; but their case is, or may be, and is likely to be unless the evil is stopped, the case of some fifty millions of Africans whom the British Government and British colonists have taken under their control, and nominally under their protection, and it is quite time for the British public to protest loudly and effectively against the wrongs that are being done to native races, and the violation of their rights.

THE LATE

Professor F. W. Newman.

AT the very ripe age of ninety-two this eminent thinker, professor, and publicist, passed away from earth, peacefully, in his sleep, at the beginning of last week. His name, with that of his still more famous (but not more illustrious) brother, Cardinal Newman, will ever be associated with the intellectual history of the nineteenth century. Both were trained in early life in the doctrines of strict Calvinism, and were taught to study and reverence the Bible. All lovers of the New Testament evangel must deeply mourn that both brothers were robbed of the simplicity of their youthful belief, though in widely different ways. The future Cardinal, accepting the baseless doctrine of a supreme human "authority" in matters of faith, found his natural resting-place in the Romish Communion. Francis, his brother, went astray on the side of intellectual doubts and questionings that carried him far beyond a trustful confidence in Jesus Christ, as revealed through the Gospel. No one, however, has ever questioned the perfect honesty and sincerity of both brothers, though they wandered so far and towards such opposite poles.

In a lengthy obituary notice of the deceased professor, a writer in The Times says:—"All Protestant Christians must have regretted that the two brothers could not find some middle course that would have enabled them to champion the cause of English Christianity. But long before his death, Mr. Newman had ceased to call himself a Christian, even." How far this last statement is strictly accurate we cannot say; but the interesting and remarkable letter from his pen which we give below scarcely warrants the assertion. This letter as will be seen, was written nearly eight years ago, and was addressed to the editor of The Christian in connection with a discussion that was at that time proceeding in our columns. We omit one or two sentences that were only of temporary application; otherwise we reproduce the letter in its entirety, as showing the mental and spiritual workings of a keen and devout, if sometimes mistaken, intellect:—

PROFESSOR NEWMAN'S LETTER.

Sir,—My wife takes in The Christian, and I see it pretty regularly. I rejoice in the moral and spiritual awakening of England and Scotland, especially in the last twenty years, which has more than fulfilled my most ardent hopes. The Protestant Churches are more and more manifestly to me "the salt of the earth." I rejoice also in the moral movement of Roman Catholics against intoxicants, impurity, and (I begin to hope) against slavery under Cardinals Manning and Lavigerie. But (alas for my brother, Cardinal Newman!) Catholics must always be false lights and real foes to the outstanding Churches. I have a word to say as to the cause of weakness to these last in a world-wide view.

Forgive an egotistic word, to explain faithfully my own position. I am not able to communicate with any Christian Church; but my difference is not moral or spiritual, but historical. My age is past eighty-four. At the childish age of eleven my earnest religion began. I account Doddridge my spiritual father before I was fourteen; and in early youth to the heathen. That was not to be; but my deep interest in missionary work has never abated.

MY DESIRE WAS TO BE A MISSIONARY

Naturally, the question has often come up in my mind, which of late has been made prominent—Why is conversion to the Christian faith so slow? One reason every pious heart feels deeply. It is the manifest Paganism in our public policy and in our own people, which foreign nations see as a glaring fact. This dreadful fact the churches at home seem almost powerless to affect; but they do not need me to suggest it. A second cause they seem scarcely to see, and it is to this I beg your impartial thought.

An American negro missionary, Mr. Blyden (if I have the name right), attests that in Africa the Mussulman lay preachers convert whole tribes quicker than English preachers can convert individuals. He gives reasons for this, which may have weight; but he omits the greatest reason of all, viz., Islam has a short clear creed, quite undisputed: "There is but one God, and Mohammed is his prophet." But the creed of Christians is very complex and very uncertain, because sect differs from sect, and the dispute is inveterate and endless.

In the Church of England the matter goes so far that, after pronouncing a convert "a child of God and inheritor of the Kingdom of Heaven," because he believes the Apostles' Creed, she proceeds to tell him, perhaps three months later, that there is no doubt of his damnation, if he does not also believe the creed that passes as that of Athanasius.

Dissenting Churches do not reach this height of absurd treachery. But I beg to ask the question: In seeking to maintain "the faith once delivered to the saints," do you not unawares come down to the age of Athanasius? Surely, you must know that the Apostles' Creed was so-called because all antiquity believed that the Apostles claimed no more of a convert. In the Acts it is manifest that the words, "I believe that Jesus was the Son of God," was thought enough to constitute a Christian, so far as creed was concerned.

Yes, dear Sir, I need not tell you that "with the heart man believeth unto righteousness." Intellectual belief in the moral qualities of God is of primary importance; yet higher than the mere intellect is right sentiment and conduct. These make "religious character," which no mere intellectual creed can make. The shortest, scantiest creed which saves the pure character of God, if crowned with heart emotion and sound conduct, fulfils Peter's phrase: "one that feareth God and worketh righteousness." Evidently in those days the Christian creed was as short and clear as is the creed of Islam now. If Protestants claim against the Papacy to revert to the primitive doctrine, they must honestly

GO TO THE FOUNTAIN-HEAD.

Till they do so, they are heavily in disadvantage, and drink the foul stream of the fourth century.

Being myself, outside of Baptists, Swedenborgians, Unitarians, and Papists, I yet profoundly pity the man who in fervent youth became minister of a creed-bound Church, and in fifteen or twenty years discovers that he can no longer hold to some parts of the creed, though he approves and loves it as a whole, and above all, loves the fellowship of its saints.

I value clear expression; I condemn ambiguity, when I see insincerity disguised. But surely you must know, that Holiness, and Love, and Trust, and Self-devotion never can be defined by a creed; and where these qualities exist, the man is accepted with God. Therefore, if a professed Christian has enough of creed to pass with James, Peter, and John (to say nothing of Paul's doctrine, "Who art thou to judge another man's servant?" etc.), the union to be sought is that of Christian character, or in Paul's language, "the mind of Christ." Unless this principle is made not only prominent but paramount, Christianity can never regain its primitive simplicity of fundamental creed.

I write as an outsider, but hearty well wisher, to all that is true in Christianity.

FRANCIS WILLIAM NEWMAN.

Weston-super-Mare, Nov. 5, 1889.

P.S.—British Churches are helpless against our Pagan ambition and Pagan avarice; but does not God claim of them vehement zeal to remove every stone of stumbling, in the way of spiritual conversion, to the outside world? Surely to recover the primitive simplicity of your creed is your very first task.

The funeral of Mr. Newman took place at Weston-super-Mare on Saturday afternoon. The ceremony was of a simple character. A short service was conducted at the Congregational Chapel by Rev. Temperley Grey, who also officiated at the cemetery, where about a dozen friends assembled.

Conference at Northampton.

THE third annual Convention for Deepening Spiritual Life has just been held amid many tokens of Divine favour. It had been anticipated with much desire and prayer for definite results. The cloud not bigger than a man's hand, indicating a coming blessing, was clearly seen in the first morning prayer meeting, when the excellent attendance and earnestness of tone marked much preparation in the hearts of God's people.

Rev. Francis Paynter presided at the gatherings, and gave a series of expositions on the Comforter from John xiv.-xvi., bringing forth things new and old, instructive and profitable. His first words, with which the Convention was opened, were significant, and realised throughout "The Holy Ghost is here," the gatherings increasing in numbers and deepening in interest and earnestness unto the end.

The speakers were Revs. E. L. Hamilton, J. J. Cooper, W. Houghton, A. G. Whaley, W. Darlow Sargeant, J. J. Luce, and P. Stott. It was evident each one came endued with power, and we felt the Holy Spirit was speaking to our hearts, so that at the close a bond of love united speaker and hearer, which made it hard to say farewell.

There were many testimonies during the meetings of the definite blessing which had been received, some of special interest. There were also evidences of Divine blessing in conversion. One was the case of a young woman formerly an attendant at an advanced Ritualistic church, who dropped in at the last convention, and heard words which sent her to her Bible, and led her to the Saviour for salvation. It has been a feature of these conventions that while the special teaching has led believers to a fuller consecration, the elementary truths of the Gospel have always led sinners to Christ.

The hon. sec., Rev. Henry Bradford, announced a one-day convention, with Rev. F. B. Meyer speaker, for December 1.

Requests for Prayer.

For blessing on a mission at Bicester, Oct. 25 to 31.

For a special mission, by the pastor, at Ramsay-road Congregational Chapel, Leytonstone, Oct. 17-27.

For special mission, October 17 to 31, conducted by Mrs. Evison in Doncaster.

Personalia.

Pastor W. Y. Fullerton has declined the call to the East London Tabernacle.

Mr. T. B. Bishop, the honorary secretary of the Children's Special Services Mission, is to be married at Llandudno on the 27th inst.—not at Bournemouth, as stated by error in our last issue.

Rev. W. Nicholson, for twenty-seven years chief agent in Russia of the British and Foreign Bible Society, has retired from his post, and will reside in Edinburgh. A large meeting of the British residents in St Petersburg lately met to bid him farewell.

Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.—The seventy-third report of the Royal Society for this object shows active effort in all parts of the land in the dissemination of kindly feelings, and the suppression of barbarity, towards dumb animals. In this good work surely all will rejoice; hence regret will be felt that the state of the funds threatens to compel the abridgement of operations unless help be forthcoming. New members are most specially needed. The secretary is Mr. John Colam, 105, Jermyn-street, St. James's, S.W.

The Charity Organisation Society has been able to organise pensions for over 1100 men and women in London, fulfilling the conditions as to character and thrift; but there comes a time when a certain proportion of them, unable from growing infirmity to live alone, must either be received into nursing homes, or placed in the workhouse, or parish infirmary. A member of the Society having generously offered a house for the purpose, a committee of management, largely composed of its workers, has been formed to establish a home where such infirm pensioners may end their days in rest and peace. An annual income of about £250 will be required in addition to the amounts contributed by the Society for the inmates

"Paul Before Agrippa."—Acts xxvi. 19-32.

Golden Text.—"Whosoever therefore shall confess Me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven."—Matt. x. 32.

FOR two long tedious years Paul was kept in prison by Felix. Then came Festus, a strong man whose fears the Jews could not rouse, though they tried to do so in order to get Paul back to Jerusalem. They failed in their design, and Paul was tried once more at Cæsarea. During this trial it became evident that the governor would not be averse to another attempted judgment by the Sanhedrin, and Paul at once cried that he appealed to Cæsar. There remained nothing for Festus to do but to send him to Rome. Before this could be done, however, King Agrippa and his sister Bernice paid a visit of state to the new governor. Agrippa was well up in the Jewish theology, for he was guardian of the temple and nominator of the high priest. When Agrippa said he would like to hear Paul, Festus readily acceded to his request, hoping that by the interview Agrippa would be able to assist him in forming some definite charge against Paul to send with him to Rome. (See Acts xxv.) Our lesson to-day deals with the interview and its result. Note:

I. Obedience to the Heavenly Vision:—(9) This obedience is the secret of Paul's career. The memory that he was called of Christ to do his work sustained him in times of despair. It is the key-note of his boldness before the court assembly. Julius Cæsar once crossing the Ægean Sea when a storm arose, the sailors were frightened and called upon their gods. Cæsar was calm, saying, "There is no force can overwhelm Cæsar until his work is accomplished." Paul's heroism was inspired by his faith, not in fate, but in the God who had given him his work to do. Point out that we also have visions—times when duty is made very clear to us—and we should use them by resolving to do that duty well. We cannot command these times—God sends them to us in order that we may realise his will concerning us.

> We cannot kindle when we will
> The spark that in our breast resides,
> The spirit bloweth, and is still,
> In mystery our soul abides.
> But tasks in hours of insight willed,
> May be through hours of gloom fulfilled.

II. Paul's Testimony.—The message he had delivered in Europe was "Repentance and Faith in God" (20). Emphasize that we can never make a good start in the Christian life until we are sorry for past wrongs. If we are truly sorry we shall bring forth fruit meet for repentance, i.e., we shall do better in the future. Faith in God's power to forgive is useless if we go on sinning without trying to do and be better. Paul also preached the suffering of Christ as a means of man's salvation, and that Christ had been raised from the dead. These things were foretold in the O. T. (22), and Agrippa knew it too well to contradict Paul (26, 27). The king was not likely to enter into any argument, but we may be sure that he would have contradicted Paul's facts if he knew them to be untrue.

III. The Fear of Festus.—The Governor was a Roman and a man of business. His life had been spent in making a good position for himself. As he listened to Paul's story of visions, salvation through suffering, and the resurrection of the dead, we can almost see his face lengthening in astonishment. He had never heard of such things before. But, like Pilate, Felix, Nero, and all men of material nature, he was extremely superstitious, and when Paul spoke of the resurrection of the dead he was so startled that he cried out, "Paul, thou art beside thyself" (24). Most wicked men are afraid of resurrection and judgment, and they have need to be afraid. To those who are followers of the Christ there is no terror in death, and the messenger of resurrection will not be hooted at as a madman, but will be regarded as the bearer of glad tidings.

IV. Effect of the speech on Agrippa. It drew from him the cynical remark: "You want with very little effort to make me a Christian" (28). How the gay company would laugh at the very thought of Agrippa being a Christian! We pity the man who can sneer at enthusiasm, for it shows that the altar fires have gone out in his own heart. But Paul did not care whether it were with much effort or little, providing Agrippa and all the company were like himself—except his bonds. Agrippa could bear no more, and so rose to indicate that the audience was at an end. Paul might have been set at liberty if he had not appealed to Cæsar.

Scottish Notes.

Rev. Mr. Walker, Aberdeen, has been elected minister of the Free Church, Drumblade, in succession to the late Rev. Alexander Forbes.

As an outcome of Mr. McNeill's recent mission in Huntly, an Evangelistic Association has been formed for carrying on Gospel work by cottage meetings, work among farm servants, etc.

Miss Annie Taylor addressed a number of large gatherings in Edinburgh at the beginning of last week. On Saturday she was in Dundee holding meetings under the auspices of the Y.W.C.A.

The Lanarkshire Christian Endeavour Union is finding a wide sphere of usefulness. Ten new societies have been added to the thirty reported last year. The Dundee Union also reports progress in every department of its work.

Rev. John McNeill was at work last week at Clydebank and Dumbarton. The largest building available in the former town was crowded night after night. The audiences are mainly drawn from the great shipbuilding yards in the neighbourhood.

At the annual social meeting of the Glasgow Sabbath School Union, held last week, addresses were given by Rev. Dr. George Matheson, Edinburgh, on "The Teacher's Manual"; by Rev. Dr. John Smith, Edinburgh, on "The Necessity of Studying the Child Nature"; and by Rev. Dr. Stalker, Glasgow, on "The Teacher as Artist."

Special evangelistic meetings are being held twice each Lord's Day in the Pavilion Theatre, Edinburgh. This place of amusement is situated in the West End in the midst of a thickly-populated district. There are manifest signs of blessing, and much interest on the part of the large audiences. Dr. Wolston, a well-known Edinburgh physician, and others are the speakers. Prayer is asked for these gatherings.

The gatherings of the Congregational Union in Glasgow last week were largely attended. Opening with a reception on Monday evening, much time was given on Tuesday and Wednesday to devotional exercises and to the discussion of papers on "Our Outlook as a Union," "The New Testament Ideal of Church Life," "Non-efficient Church Membership," and "Fellowship with God." It is felt that these meetings have done much to cement the union accomplished between the Evangelical and Congregational Unions in January last.

The various organisations in Edinburgh for the training of Christian workers have resumed their classes for the session. Under the auspices of the Missionary Council, Rev. Thomas Miller (St. Paul's, Leith) is giving a course of lectures on "The Bible—a New Book: or, Light from Eastern Lands." Pastor James Smith (Coalsnaughton) is providing Scripture expositions; Dr. Simla Paterson is to deal with elementary medical advice. Among the other helpers in the work are to be Mr. Wellesley C. Bailey and Dr. George Smith. In connection with the Christian Workers' Institute of the U.P. Presbytery three courses of training are intended to commence this week.

Irish Notes.

A new Presbyterian church, to accommodate about 800 persons, has been opened in Londonderry.

Owing to age and infirmities Dr. Wm. Pakenham Walsh has resigned his position as Bishop of Ossory. He was a most earnest and devoted minister of the Gospel.

By the death of Judge Warren the Irish Church has sustained a serious loss. Deceased was a decided Evangelical, and took a prominent part in the General Synod and other Church Courts. He also contributed most liberally to missions and other good causes.

A valedictory service has been held in the Gregg Hall, Dublin, to bid farewell to five graduates of Trinity College who are going out as missionaries. Four others are going out under Dublin University Fuh-Kien Mission, and one under Dublin University Chota Nagpore Mission. Two of the five are fully qualified medical men.

Miss Procter's Homes in the Lebanon.—Pastor Tanius Said, who is staying at 153, Adelaide-road, Hampstead, writes:—"Miss Procter's Mission is in debt £300. I have raised about £150. A kind friend has promised to give £50 if the remainder of the money is raised in three weeks. I pray that friends will help us out of debt." The treasurer is Colonel Williams, the Bank, Birchin-lane, E.C.

Evangelistic Notes.

The Sheffield Free Church Council is giving much evidence of life and activity. Gipsy Smith's mission proved to be very successful. Immense crowds gathered in the Albert Hall and in Norfolk-street Chapel. As many as 250 names of inquirers were taken, whom the several churches for which they expressed a preference are being asked to shepherd. In December a general interchange of pulpits will take place among the Free Churches.

A fortnight's evangelistic meetings have been brought to a close in Peterhead, conducted by Mr. Roland Edwards, who was invited by a committee representing various churches. The meetings were held in the Free South Church on week evenings, and in the Music Hall on Sundays. Large audiences gathered nightly to hear the Word. Christians have been stirred up, helped, and drawn closer to one another. A considerable number of young men and women have been brought to yield themselves to the Saviour. A direct result of the mission is that a United Evangelistic Association for the town has been formed, composed of young men and women from various churches, who are stirred up to seek the salvation of their fellows. G. W. A.

Evangelist J. H. Allen (says a correspondent) has been holding evangelistic services at Tacoma the last month with marked success. The subjects he has presented have been principally in connection with prophecy.

Mr. Charles Minor, since his return from visiting the prisons in the United States, has been working in the West of England. The week before last he conducted a mission at Epsom. The Town Mission Room was crowded night after night, and by a letter from Miss Alexander we learn that the Gospel services were very solemn and decidedly fruitful. Mr. Minor's lecture on "Billy Bray" and the story of his own eventful life were listened to with much interest, and some navvies in the locality heard the Gospel very forcibly presented. During several evenings last week Mr. Minor sang the Gospel at meetings conducted by Pastor W. Y. Fullerton in Exeter Hall. He is now working at the Soldiers' Institute, Portsmouth. Friends may write him to the care of Mr. Wrench, 10, Manor-place, Paddington.

Mr. Moody is to conduct Gospel meetings in Philadelphia during the coming winter.

Major D. W. Whittle has returned to his home in Northfield for a short rest after a very hard summer's work in Boston. During the mid-summer weeks Major Whittle conducted the daily noon prayer-meetings in Boston, which have been greatly blessed by his visit and were largely attended, an unusual thing at that season of the year. He has become greatly interested in the welfare of prisoners, and his addresses on their behalf have awakened deep sympathy among those who were able to hear him. Major Whittle will engage in evangelistic work in America during the coming winter.

Mr. S. Arumugam, a high-caste Hindoo from Madras, who is studying for a while at Harley College, E., has held a fortnight's mission in Olive Hall, West Derby, Liverpool. Remarkable interest was awakened in the neighbourhood, and the Lord used the foreign voice to reach the hearts of many. Mr. Arumugam's whole-hearted devotion to God and zeal for the salvation of souls are very impressive, and make him an instrument of blessing to Christians as well as to the unsaved. B. F. B.

Mr. Wm. Thomson, Jun., has concluded a three weeks' lime-light Gospel mission in the Seamen's Bethel, Glasgow. Meetings for school-children were held, and they came in such numbers that many were turned away for want of room. The adult services were also largely attended, and a considerable number professed to trust the Saviour. Four Bible-readings for Christians were given weekly, and proved very helpful. P. S.

The Women's Total Abstinence Union opened on Monday a temperance conference at Bristol. Special sermons were preached on Sunday in thirty-eight churches and chapels in the city. Lady E. Biddulph, in her Presidential Address, made a brief and stirring claim for temperance, urging that a great amount of work remains to be done, despite all that has been accomplished.

Obituary.

MISS R. G. GREEN.

Miss Rebecca Goodwin Green, the foundress of the Homes for the Aged Poor, passed away on Thursday last to the grief of many friends. For the last twenty-nine years of her life all her influence was used to strengthen the cause she had so much at heart, and sweet it was to see this aged saint comforted in her own hours of distressing weakness with the thought that many a dying pillow had been cheered by her care for poor people advanced in years. It was a cause of rejoicing to her to know that the parent society was just filling the fourteenth Home, while twenty-eight other Homes are at work in different parts.

REV. SAMUEL WESLEY.

The Wesleyan ministry has been deprived of an interesting and unique personality in the removal, at the advanced age of eighty-one, of Rev. Samuel Wesley—the only Wesley in modern days in the British Methodist ministry. He was a descendant of John Wesley, A.M., not the founder of Methodism, who had no family, but one of the notable 2,000 clergymen expelled from church and home in 1662. He had some of the natural characteristics of the Epworth Wesley, and bore a facial resemblance to John Wesley. Until declining years prevented, he rendered valuable service in circuit work, and latterly as chaplain to the Wesleyan soldiers at Hounslow Barracks. His daughter, Miss E. A. Wesley, did for some years—until she fell asleep—a grand work among soldiers. He died after a painful illness at Raunds, Northamptonshire. Mr. Wesley was peculiarly happy in his family life. He married in early days Miss Ann Knighton, who was a great blessing to him and his circuits. Those two godly people, with their saintly daughter, were a benediction wherever they were stationed, and their memory will be cherished by troops of friends. For the last year Mr. Wesley's health had failed, but the final illness was not very long, although it was painful and severe. He was surrounded by relatives who greatly respected him, and who rendered him loving and diligent attention. He had times of depression, but his experience in face of death was blessed.

MR. J. MATTHIAS WEYLLAND.

On Monday, Oct. 4, there passed to his rest, in his seventy-fifth year, Mr. J. M. Weylland, one of the widest known, as well as one of the most faithful and successful of Christian workers amongst the poor of our metropolis. Joining the London City Mission in the year 1849, he laboured earnestly as a missionary for upwards of fifteen years in the neighbourhood of Lisson-grove, Marylebone, his efforts being accompanied with many tokens of God's favour and blessing. Here it was that he commenced the work of visitation in public-houses, an undertaking for which he possessed remarkable qualifications, and one so fruitful in good results that the committee decided to extend this branch of their work to other portions of the metropolis. In 1864 he was appointed to assist the Society's country secretary in raising funds for the Mission, and in 1871 he became a district secretary in London, a post which he held until 1890, when, his health failing, he resigned, and devoted the remainder of his days to watching over and raising funds for the Society's "Disabled Missionaries, Widows, and Orphans' Fund." Brilliant in conception and bold in action, he attempted great things in the name and strength of God, and, apart from his mission work, he was useful in a variety of ways to the public at large. Whether it was the better housing of the poor, the right observance of the Lord's Day, the establishment of ragged schools, or the procuring of drinking-fountains for horses and cattle in the streets, he co-operated actively in the good work, supplying gentlemen in position with the information they needed for the promotion of their philanthropic enterprises. Bright and cheerful in disposition during his life, even in the days of trial, Mr. Weylland adorned the doctrine of Christ his Saviour, and his closing moments were full of blessed anticipation of the glory which awaited him.

Among his last utterances were the words, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly," and other expressions to the same effect. Thus has passed away a Christian worker, who was beloved by many. The Church Militant has lost a warrior, the London City Mission a much valued officer, whose place it will be difficult to fill, and his bereaved children a wise and affectionate father.

The Congregational Union.

For the fourth time the Congregational Union is visiting Birmingham. Altogether 1350 accredited delegates are attending the meetings. On Monday evening a preliminary service was held in Carr's-lane Chapel, when Dr. Horton preached from 1 John iv. 17: "As He [i.e., Christ] is, even so are we in this world." The Christian's task, he declared, was to hold fast divinity and yet not lose their humanity, to be human and yet hold continual intercourse with God, to keep in unimpeded contact with God and yet keep in unimpeded contact with men. They must keep in touch with men if they were to be in the world as Christ was; they must be mystics and yet men of the world. The sermon, which occupied about an hour in delivery, commanded the profound attention of a crowded audience.

At the Total Abstinence meeting, which was subsequently held, Rev. W. Mottram contrasted the position of the movement in the Congregational ministry with what it was in 1880, when the Union last visited Birmingham. Then only 703 Congregational ministers were abstainers, while now 2364 out of 2843 could be relied upon as such. A resolution was passed expressing profound conviction that the Sunday closing of public-houses in England as in Scotland, Ireland, Wales, and many of the British colonies would be highly conducive to the material, social, and spiritual welfare of the people generally, and therefore earnestly called upon the Government and members of Parliament, irrespective of party, to unite in securing such a measure as speedily as possible.

Christian Endeavour.

The Cleveland and South Durham Union reports 113 societies and 3,457 members.

A mass meeting of Belfast Endeavourers was held on Friday, when Rev. J. D. Lamont gave his farewell address as president.

The Central South London Union held its annual meeting at Surrey Chapel. Mr. R. H. Parsons, a former secretary of this Union, was present from New South Wales and gave a cheering account of C. E. Work in the Colonies.

At Praa, in Burmah, the Christian Endeavour Society, which is in charge of a native, is in the habit of holding services on Sabbath afternoons in the adjacent villages, leaving the missionaries at liberty for other greatly needed work.

The first annual convention of the Devon County Union, held at Newton Abbot, September 29 and 30, proved to be of a helpful nature to the hundreds of young people who were gathered together. Rev. James Mursell, of Derby, was one of the chief speakers, being assisted by Revs. Franklin Owen, of Torrington, C. Stedeford, of Exeter, and Mr. A. Tuckwell, of Exeter, the president of the union.

The Y.W.C.A.

The Teachers' Branch of the Glasgow Y.W.C.A. resumed its monthly meetings on Oct. 5. Mrs. Mirrlees presided, and introduced Mrs. Armitstead, head of the Home Study Department of the Scotch Division, who gave an able address on "The Sermon on the Mount." Mrs. W. M. Oatts, hon. sec., reported that the branch now numbered sixty-seven certificated lady teachers, representing twenty-eight schools.

The annual meeting of the Highgate-road Y.W.C.A. was held on Thursday evening in the Upper Lecture-room of Highgate-road Chapel, Pastor James Stephens presiding. There was a large attendance. The secretary reported 230 members, seven of whom were in the foreign field. The members had on their missionary evening, by the presentation of willing offerings, given £125 2s. 10d. to foreign missions, £60 for support of one of their number in North Africa, and £62 10s. to Mr. and Mrs. Patient, in Malvalli, India, toward their home-coming on furlough. It was also reported that Grove End Lodge (through the kindness of the deacons and of Mr. Cositer, whose gift it was to the church) was to be opened by them in a few weeks as a home and institute for young women. The meeting was addressed by several ladies, and by the chairman, who encouraged the members to work as they were doing on simple and Scriptural lines, and congratulated them on the blessing they were evidently receiving.

The Y.M.C.A.

WORK IN KIMBERLEY.

Two-and-a-half years ago the Y.M.C.A. was started in Kimberley. Little interest was, however, taken in the spiritual welfare of our young men. At that time several attempts to form a Bible-class failed, but about twelve months ago a better spirit manifested itself and has been felt ever since. Nearly every church now in the place has its weekly meeting for the young people. The Y.M.C.A. "Young Men's Own" is in a healthy condition. Rev. David Russell, of Capetown, recently conducted a five days' mission in the Town-hall. The interest manifested in the mission was testified to by crowded audiences, and at the last service hundreds had to be turned away who could not gain admittance. The mission was the means, in God's hands, of bringing home conviction to many hearts. God's Spirit was present in great power, and many sincerely resolved on a new course of life. Never was the Council Chamber of Kimberley devoted to a better purpose than when the ministers at the after-meetings counselled the inquirers to close with the offer of salvation.

This is the first time the Town-hall on the Diamond Fields has been let for religious services, and we rejoice in the possession this year of a mayor who is an out-and-out Christian man. Mammon was the god of Kimberley ten or fifteen years ago; to-day the spirit of religion largely permeates the people. This improved state of things is not directly traceable to any one church or organisation, but is the outcome of the power of God's Spirit on the hearts of his people. Now that the native war so close to us in Bechuanaland is at an end, we are hoping for a quieter and more sober spirit amongst our young men than is naturally to be expected in a volunteering centre like this, when wars and rumours of war is at our door.

I would ask for the prayers of all Christians interested in South Africa to pray for the advancement of Christ's kingdom on the Diamond Fields.

John Kent, Gen. Sec.

BRIEF NOTES.

Sir E. T. Gourley, M.P., presided on the occasion of the annual presentation of prizes at the Sunderland Y.M.C.A.

Rev. Dr. Parker will be the principal speaker at the Croydon annual meeting on the 18th inst. Mr. J. Compton Rickett, M.P., has promised to preside.

The annual meeting of the Aberdeen Association was held last week, Mr. G. C. Fraser presiding. The report showed 293 members, and a large amount of evangelistic and educational effort. Mr. W. J. Middleton, Rev. T. B. Kilpatrick, and others spoke of the good work being done by the Association.

A district conference, in connection with the Gloucester Association, was held last week. Addresses were given on the spiritual, physical, and intellectual work of the Y.M.C.A. Rev. Henry Dening gave a stirring word to Christian workers on the secret of good success. In the evening an enthusiastic meeting was held.

The visit of Mr. W. R. Lane, Evangelist, to St. Helens, has been attended by much success. Large audiences filled the gymnasium night after night, and the promoters believe the results of the mission will be permanent and far reaching. Under the guidance of Mr. George Holmes, secretary, the Association is being greatly improved in all its departments.

The ten days' mission at Exeter Hall by Pastor W. Fullerton, of Leicester, has been a time of much interest, and the results have been of a highly encouraging kind. The mid-day Bible readings were channels of refreshing to the goodly numbers that attended day by day. The evening meetings for young men were largely attended, and the evangelist's earnest utterances deeply impressed his young brethren. There were special meetings for members of the Civil Service Prayer Union and Bankers' Prayer Union, when good work was done.

Fulton-street Prayer Meeting.—Special services were held at 113, Fulton-street, New York, to commemorate the fortieth anniversary of the Fulton-street Daily Noon Prayer Meeting. The chief feature of the services was the presentation of a portrait in oil of Jeremiah Calvin Lanphier, the founder of the meeting, who is now in the eighty-ninth year of his age. The work is the gift of attendants at the meeting and other friends interested. Mr. R. R. McBurney, general secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association, sketched in outline the history of the prayer meetings, and told of their importance and the widespread good done by them. Mr. Lanphier was unable to be present.

THE BOOK WORLD.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

The Christian Pictorial, Vol. IX. (Alexander & Shepheard.) This illustrated weekly has gained for itself a recognised place in the journalism of the day. In its bound form it affords to some extent a pictorial record of the passing events of the day in religious circles.

The Boy's Own Annual for 1897, with its numerous stories, long and short, and its many articles on occupations and pastimes, is equal to its many excellent predecessors. The contributors include Dr. Gordon Stables, David Ker, G. A. Henty, Ascott R. Hope, and Rev. Theodore Wood, all of them well-known friends of youth; while the subjects, treated with a profusion of illustrations, cover a wide field in the world of travel and adventure, and in the department of hobbies useful and amusing. (8s., Religious Tract Society.)

The Girl's Own Annual is the counterpart of the "Boy's," and in every way an attractive volume. The writers include Eglanton Thorne, Frederick Langbridge, Sarah Doudney, and Rose Nouchette Carey, and while the stories are numerous, they have no monopoly of attention. There is new music—Princess Beatrice among the contributors; also there are many papers on household and useful topics, by Mrs. Brightwen, Sarah Tytler, Lady Bloomfield, Mrs. Mayo, and other well-known authors. (8s. Religious Tract Society.)

Young England (5s.) has completed its eighteeneth volume, and the result is a full budget of wholesome and amusing reading, amply illustrated. There are stories and sketches in abundance, and the book is in every sense admirably produced. Home Blessing (2s.) appears in its first annual volume, and it is well described as an illustrated magazine for the family. Among the series of articles are "Glimpses of Notable Preachers," and "Secrets of Home Happiness." The Child's Own Magazine (1s.) is a capital volume for the little ones. (Sunday-School Union.)

Queen of the Isles. By Jessie M. E. Saxby. (Partridge & Co. 1s. 6d.) A girl's story of Shetland life—of sore trial, patient endurance, and sunshine after all. It is well written and full of interest.

Dr. Luttrell's First Patient. (Hutchinson & Co.) A story by Rosa Nouchette Carey is always sure of a welcome from a large class of readers. This, her latest book, is a pleasant tale of the "domestic" order. It has already appeared as a serial.

The Boys of Huntingley. By K. M. and R. Eady. (A. Melrose.) Spirited boys will be attracted by this "public school story," in which justice eventually overtakes the wrongdoer. But the "rowdy" element is too prominent in the narrative in our opinion.

Jubilee of Rev. Peter Mearns. By C. H. Dick. (Religious Tract and Book Society, Edinburgh.) These memorials of a long, hallowed, and useful ministry at Coldstream should deeply interest, not only local friends, but the wide circle who value earnestness and fidelity.

How We Learnt It. By Lady Coote. (Nisbet & Co. 1s. 6d.) A mother's simple and loving talks with her children on the fulness and sweetness of the several petitions in the prayer our Lord taught his disciples. Many mothers and teachers will find it a real help in instructing the young minds.

Evolution and Revelation. By G. M. Macdermott. (2s. Jarrold & Sons.) The aim of the author is to show that evolution, as a method of God's working, is not inconsistent with the Bible account of the Creation. Different readers will have different opinions as to the success of the well-meant attempt.

The Construction of the Bible. By Prof. W. F. Adeney. (1s. S.S. Union.) A popularly-expressed statement, based on the latest results of study and research, of the way in which our English Bible has been built up. The author gives us the comforting assurance that modern historical criticism in no real sense affects the vital question of the Divine inspiration of the Scriptures.

Errors of Rome. By H. B. (2s. Hastings: Burfield & Pennells; London: Kensit.) A series of trenchant papers, exposing clearly the unscriptural and dangerous character of Rome's dogmas concerning the Virgin Mary, Purgatory, The Mass, Saints and Angels, Confession, Indulgences, and Relics. We wish it were wisely pondered by many whose eyes are dazzled by the allurements of Rome.

The Incarnate Saviour. By Dr. W. R. Nicoll. New Edition. (3s. 6d. T. & T. Clark.) Many will welcome this cheap edition of a work which has already met with wide acceptance, from the devout and reverent spirit in which it is conceived, and its practical suggestiveness of treatment. The blending of narration and exposition give it a valuable place among the many Lives of Christ which our generation has produced.

Pre-Reformation Worthies. By Rev. W. Cowan. (Elliot Stock.) In every age—even the darkest—God has had true witnesses who held aloft the lamp of truth and the banner of righteousness amid prevailing corruption and gloom. Such were the "worthies" whose lives are sympathetically sketched in this most interesting volume. It leads us into paths not familiar to the average student of modern history, and we join in the Bishop of Derry's prefatory words of commendation.

Tiyo Soga. By Rev. H. T. Cousins, Ph.D. (Partridge & Co. 1s. 6d.) Well do we remember (forty years ago) clasping the hand and listening to the earnest words of this devoted Kaffir servant of Christ. Hence we welcome heartily this admirable popular biography of a humble and consecrated life. May we suggest care in revision of any future edition? There are uncorrected errors.—"Rev. Henry Muller, of Hammersmith," is an unknown divine, but with the first vowel corrected a well-known minister stands revealed.

Christian Service. By the late Sir Arthur Blackwood. (Marshall Bros.) Welcome memorials of a precious and fruitful teaching. Many who have benefited by Sir Arthur's keen and fervid expositions of the Word will find in these notes of addresses, delivered at the meetings of the Civil Service Prayer Union—albeit they are epigrammatic and even, in some cases, fragmentary—a wealth of suggestive thought and practical exposition. They are specially addressed to young men, but none the less they have a ringing message to all.

Memory Training. By Rev. J. D. Kilburn. (2s. 6d. Marshall Bros.) This is a re-issue in book form of the articles on memory which lately appeared in The Life of Faith. Doubtless they will afford valuable assistance in the training of the memory in the useful art of grasping and retaining facts and figures of the most diverse kind. True, as the author fully concedes, the law of association is no new discovery, but its application to students and Christian workers will be largely aided by the manner in which the author develops its principles, and illustrates these by cogent examples.

The Life Story of a Village Pastor. By his son, Rev. J. J. Pool. (3s. 6d. Jas. Clarke & Co.) The author thinks that nearly all biographies are too long, and we are of opinion that he might judiciously have put his own dictum into practice in this story of his father's career. But we are bound to say that the narrative is an extremely interesting and helpful one. Though there is a certain amount of "padding" that could have been spared, we get side glimpses into the lives of the famous people with whom Mr. Pool was in some way associated or connected. The story itself is well worth telling, and it is admirably told.

Methodist Idylls. By Harry Lindsay. (6s. James Bowden.) These Gloucestershire "idylls" are certainly worthy to take rank beside anything that Barrie, or Ian Maclaren, or David Lyell has written. Many readers enjoyed them when they appeared singly in The Methodist Times, but their power and pathos are more sustained and cumulative in book form. They mainly deal, it is true, with Methodist traditions and surroundings, but we should imagine that "the humble annals of the poor" in any Christian denomination could furnish material for sketches as for emotion, if the gifted annalist were forthcoming. We trust Mr. Harry Lindsay will continue to keep his pen busy.

The Herods, by Dean Farrar. (Service & Paton. 3s. 6d.) The first of a projected series of popular Biblical handbooks. To many the history of the Maccabean and Herodian periods is practically unknown, yet these epochs are of intense interest as revealing how "the way of the Lord was prepared," and illustrating the political and national conditions prevailing during our Saviour's earthly ministry. The author traces the development of Judaism from the days of Ezra, shows how the Idumean Herods rose to power, how relentless their cruel rule, how unspeakably wretched their own family life, and how the formalism of the Pharisees and the fierce contention of factions culminated in the murder of the Messiah, and at length in the miserable ruin of the city and people. It is alike an instructive and entrancing book.

The Rip's Redemption. By E. Livingston Prescott. (6s. Nisbet & Co.) This powerfully-written tale, which bears the unmistakable stamp of reality, well illustrates the aphorism that "one-half of the world little knows how the other half lives." The author in his "Scarlet and Steel" has done a national service in exposing the cruelties of the lash in military prisons. In this story he adds to our indebtedness by showing us the interior of barrack life, and the ordeal which there awaits either the physical weakling or the timid Christian. The main purpose of the narrative, however, is to set forth the redemptive power of a good woman's influence even on the most hardened and apparently hopeless. No doubt the history of our Soldiers' Homes could furnish not a few similar examples, but few writers have the skill and the special knowledge of Mr. Prescott. In "The Rip's Redemption" he has given us a truly notable book.

Synonyms of the Old Testament; their Bearing on Christian Doctrine. By Rev. Robert Baker Girdlestone, M.A., hon. canon of Christ Church, and late principal of Wycliffe Hall, Oxford. (12s. Nisbet & Co.) A second edition of this very useful work will be heartily welcomed by theological students and thoughtful Bible readers. It is a quarter of a century since the book was first published. It is to be hoped that it will now resume its useful ministry of assisting those who would profit by the differences and distinctions of Scripture language. The work covers a wide field, dealing with about three hundred subjects, and as many typical words from the Old Testament, and again an equal number from the New. The author tells us that he has kept in view "first, the needs of busy people who have not time to learn Hebrew, and secondly, the requirements of beginners in Hebrew who need more encouragement than they sometimes get." In a word, Canon Girdlestone helps us to study Christian doctrine in the light of Old Testament terminology. The full indexes will make the work of great service for reference; one of these sets forth thousands of texts from the Old and New Testaments, many of them quoted repeatedly under various categories in the book.

The Church of England before the Reformation. By Rev. Dyson Hague, M.A. (7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton). This volume raises a question, the answer to which fundamentally affects one's conception of the Church of England as at present constituted. The theory of "continuity" has led many to shut their eyes to historical facts, and to affirm that the Church of England before the Reformation was distinct from Rome alike in doctrine and practice. This position regards the Reformation as little more than a repudiation of papal claims, and the freeing of the Church from Roman control. Mr. Hague shows the baselessness of the "continuity" theory, by contrasting the Romanised National Church of the pre-Reformation age with the National Church as at length reformed in ritual and purified in doctrine. Rev. Dr. Moule, who contributes an Introduction, welcomes this able effort towards placing the facts of history before the public; and we heartily echo his words, feeling assured that if the positions which are so powerfully presented by Mr. Hague were adequately realised by communicants and adherents of the Church of England, a new era would dawn in earnest Protestant witness, and the Evangelical controversy with Romanism.

Will it Last? By Mrs. W. E. Legg. (1d. Partridge & Co.) A letter booklet, with a strong appeal to faithfulness and holiness of life. With force and point (illustrated from experience) Mrs. Legg presents teaching of great and pressing value.

Helps Heavenward. (3d. and 6d. packets. Christian Literature Co., Edinburgh.) Four-paged leaflets, containing earnest words for Christians seeking to grow in grace and serve more fully. These printed messages may well be used in correspondence.

Romish Inroads. By Rev. E. H. F. Cosens, vicar of Holy Trinity, Tewkesbury. (Andrews, 31, Museum-street, W.C. 6d.). A vigorous counterblast by a sturdy Evangelical against the innovations, borrowed from Rome, so sadly apparent in many of the Established Churches. It is refreshing to find that the appeal of the author is ever to the written Word. Such protests as this ought to be circulated far and near.

We understand that Rev. Dr. Bullinger has in the press a pamphlet entitled "The Massorah," containing a large amount of hitherto unpublished information regarding the original text of the Old Testament. This publication will enable students and the general reader to follow up many of the points outlined in our recent article on the New Hebrew Bible prepared by Dr. Ginsburg, and issued by the Trinitarian Bible Society.

Christian Ethics. By C. F. D. (Thynne, 6, Great Queen-street. 1d.) A selection of texts from the Revised Version of the Scriptures, collated from the teachings of Jesus Christ and his apostles, in the hope that sceptics and others who do not read the Bible may be induced to reflect upon them. They set forth the Scriptural teachings on faith and morals in such a way that even opponents of the Word must be compelled to admit that it speaks as no other book speaks.

Open-Air Developments.

CERTAIN recent developments in open-air work were described on Monday at the Central Noon Prayer Meeting, Aldersgate-street. Mr. Barry Wake, who was the first speaker, began by calling attention to the carefully-organised "plan" prepared by the secretary of the Open-Air Mission, whereby thirty important stations in the metropolis are supplied with preachers; thus an effective testimony is regularly maintained at points largely frequented by the multitude.

Turning to the race-course work, the speaker gave details of experiences at Doncaster, amid scenes which could only be described as of a terrible character. Some of the men were of the most forbidding and dangerous type—for example, one man of gigantic stature, turbulent and violent demeanour, and possessed by a hatred of religion; yet a hook seemed put in his nose, a bridle in his jaws. During the preaching of the Gospel he stood noisy, clamorous, appalling in his threatenings, yet curbed, he knew not how, so that he could do nothing. Amongst the enormous hosts, gathered from the great cities of the north, at Doncaster, the Gospel was steadily told forth by a sturdy band, while immense quantities of Gospel literature were distributed. True, some tracts were thrown away, but vast numbers were retained and doubtless read. The speaker said he would never forget "the Battle of the Obelisk," a service, near the Obelisk in Doncaster, maintained in the face of considerable opposition. Notwithstanding all difficulties, the work is worth doing, for God has blessed it to some of the roughest characters.

Similarly encouraging facts were given of work, last week, at Peterborough Fair, where, amid immense crowds, God used the word spoken in the open-air to the conversion of souls.

Mr. Frank Cockrem, secretary of the Open-Air Mission, followed with particulars of visits paid to villages lying in spiritual languor. A party of open-air preachers, eight or ten strong, would settle for a week in one village—making it their headquarters—and visit the whole circle of villages lying within reach. In this way the Gospel has been carried into remote and dark corners; while the villagers have proved remarkably willing to listen to the message of salvation. The need of the villages is very great; would that many more were stirred up to their aid.

Mr. C. Cook spoke of the midday services carried on by the Open-air Mission outside the Small Arms Factory, Enfield. Very large numbers of the skilled artisans were found willing to listen, great crowds were attracted, and not a few have been saved this summer.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

The Bishop of Ossory has resigned the see, which he has held for nineteen years.

Canon Bulstrode, of Ipswich, has undergone an operation, and is progressing favourably.

A missionary mission is to be held in the Rural Deanery of Islington from Nov. 17-26.

Rev. W. Horne, of St. Philip's, Kennington, has accepted the vicarage of St. Saviour's, Brixton-hill.

A lady in Newcastle has given to the C.M.S., in lieu of personal service, a sum to produce £100 a year.

Rev. E. S. Savage, the devoted vicar of Jesmond, Newcastle, is resigning through illness in his family.

The vicarage of Clifton has been offered to Rev. G. F. Head, Vicar of Christ Church, Hampstead, who has, however, declined it.

Rev. Vivian Rodwell Lennard, till lately rector of South Hackney, has been instituted to the rectory of Lower Heyford, Oxfordshire.

Rev. J. A. Dodd has been appointed to the rectory of South Hackney, and Rev. H. L. James to the rectory of St. Dunstan-in-the-West.

Rev. F. Trevelyan Snow will conduct a series of meetings for Christians in St. George's Church, Tufnell-park, N., from October 19 to 22, at 3.30 and 8 p.m.

Bishop Tucker was unable to accompany, as arranged, the missionaries who left for Uganda on Friday week, but expects to return to his post towards the end of the present month.

"A Friend" has just sent a cheque for £100 to the Church Army for the purpose of placing another of the Society's Mission and colportage vans in the Exeter diocese. The Society has now forty vans, and many archdeaconries are still pressing for one to be sent.

At the Canterbury Diocesan Conference a discussion took place on the means of strengthening the hold of the Church on the masses, and a resolution was carried declaring the most hopeful means to this end to be the exercise of personal influence on individuals.

The Bishop of Bloemfontein (Dr. Hicks), as distinguished as a medical man as a divine, having carried off honours and prizes in chemistry, biology, anatomy, and animal physiology in the University of London and at Cambridge, and having published a "Standard Text Book of Inorganic Chemistry," left on Saturday on his return to his diocese.

On Sunday week, at Christ Church, Mitcham, the first of a series of P.S.A. services was held, some thirty men and lads coming in. A deputation from Christ Church, Westminster (Rev. F. B. Meyer), came down to assist. Three of the members addressed the assembly while another sang the solo "Come unto Me," all present joining in the refrain. It was a novel sight. The vicar (in his ordinary attire), the secretary, and the four members of the deputation gave their experiences. Several of the men gave testimony. One spoke of the afternoon he first attended a P.S.A. at Christ Church, Westminster. The clothes he was then wearing at the time not being worth fourpence, so low had he become. Another had been employed since a lad in a factory until he reached a position, but which he lost through drink. A third related how he had completed his three score years before he began to think seriously, and there they stood living witnesses of the power of God unto salvation.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

IN this number we commence a series of papers from the pen of Dr. J. Culross, on "The Testimony of Jesus Christ Concerning Himself." All who know the spiritual insight and experimental knowledge of this veteran writer, will eagerly welcome these studies, and we doubt not he will gain many new friends.

The following encouraging letter is of interest as indicating what can be done by one ardent helper. We shall be glad to hear of many others following suit. "Where there's a will there's a way." For particulars concerning the Paragraph Bible see page 8.

I am exceedingly pleased with the Paragraph Bible, and will value it very highly. I at once began to distribute a few of the copies of THE CHRISTIAN amongst the staff of this firm, as well as to a few others who came to Mr. C——'s office to-day, and you will be pleased to learn that already four gentlemen have decided to take your paper regularly. One is a superintendent of a Wesleyan Sunday-school, and another one of our town missionaries, and two of our staff. The manager of one of our departments would like to have a copy of the Paragraph Bible, and will be pleased to distribute the three dozen CHRISTIANS to advantage, he also himself becoming a regular subscriber. I may say that he is the secretary of one of our local churches and is a very earnest Christian worker. I think the foregoing will show that I have done some good work to-day with the parcel you sent me. I hope to have the pleasure of doing much more, as I believe THE CHRISTIAN is calculated to prove a blessing in every family where it is read. I have found it very helpful to me in many ways, and wish you every success in your efforts to enlarge the circulation of your valuable paper. I often read the "Daily Homily" at our morning family altar.

We give up a large portion of our space to-day to a report of the Missionary Conference at Exeter Hall last week. We do so all the more readily as we understand that no official record of the proceedings will be published. The attendances during the three days were by no means so large as the importance of the subject and the worth of the addresses would have warranted. We ask our readers, therefore, to assist us in introducing this issue into circles where missionary interest might be increased. Many foreign fields were represented, and the addresses as a whole afford a comprehensive glance at the spiritual condition of the heathen world.

At the Congregational Union meeting last week a pleasing incident took place, illustrating the spread of brotherly relationships between Christians of various denominations. On hearing the report of progress, and of the further needs of the work, made by the Church Aid Treasurer during the past year, Mr. W. P. Hartley, a Primitive Methodist and a great friend of the Free Church Federation movement, challenged the assembly to contribute an additional £1000, with an offer of £100 of his own. The response was immediate and complete, the whole sum being subscribed by the end of the week. There were other symptoms at these gatherings of the same widely-extending brotherhood among evangelical bodies. The Bishop of Worcester telegraphed a kindly message of greeting from the Diocesan Conference, over which he was presiding.

It is often and truly said that the gifts o the poor exceed those of the rich. Proof of tha was given in a letter read by Dr. Berry, President of the Union. The writer, a working man, who has never had more than fifty shillings a week wages, has given away over £700 in thirty years for Christian purposes, mainly Church extension. He now offers to give two shillings and sixpence a week for two years to a church extension scheme for the whole country, and the same sum to any local effort. "That is all I can do when wife and chicks are cared for." Some will be loud in saying that such an outlay for beneficent objects robs "wife and chicks," but let such objectors remember that there are still forty-five shillings a week left for the expenses of a working-man's home How delighted would thousands of wives be if they had such a sum at their disposal! And the good management of this wife has, we fancy, a good deal to do with the ability of her husband to give five shillings a week for two years out of his wages.

Amongst the noticeable utterances at the Assembly was a fine address from Rev. Stanley Rogers on "Directness and Evangelic Fervour in Preaching." Some searching words were spoken on the pointlessness of many pulpit discourses.

"I do not think he would win anybody by that sermon," was the remark made by a friend to me concerning a preacher to whom we had been listening. "No," I said; it seems to me he never thought to win anybody by it..."

"If ministers," said the great Daniel Webster, "in our day would return to the simplicity of Gospel truth, and preach more to individuals and less to the crowd," there would not be so much complaint of the decline of true religion."

This directness, weighted with fervour of a truly evangelic kind, is, beyond most other conditions, the vital thing in preaching. Without it, there can be no fruitful ministry.

The offering of universal prayer for Sunday-schools, to which last Sunday was devoted, will, we hope, bring home to all engaged in the work the imperative need for aiming at the conversion and decision of the older scholars. The influences abroad in the world make it increasingly difficult for young people to come out openly and publicly as disciples. A false modesty is at the root of much of the reticence that increasingly marks the life of those already Christian at heart, and this reacts on the younger folk and disheartens them from a personal and public confession of the name of Christ. If teachers and parents, as well as those who have friends younger than themselves, were to break down the wall of reserve, and get at the troubled heart which lies behind many a seemingly careless face, they would often be rewarded with an unexpected response. "A word spoken in season" by a loved and trusted friend or teacher, "how good it is!" It is often all that is needful to carry home the message of a stirring sermon or address, and lead to immediate decision.

One of the frequent sources of religious difficulty and doubt is the assumption that life has happiness—i.e., as great a freedom from pain, and as large a share of outward comfort as possible—for its end and aim. If that were so, then the course of God's Providence would be truly perplexing. If men have a right to happiness as they understand it, it is impossible to square the facts of life with the faith that God is good, for it is given to few mortals to be happy. But this assumption is foreign to all Bible teaching. Blessedness is the goal of life according to the Gospel, and blessedness can never be gained save by the victory over trial, and temptation, and the multiform sorrows of life. If we grasp this fact in all its bearings we shall be saved from many heart-breaking fears and uncertainties in the religious life, and face its conflicts with a new strength and confidence.

"The peace of God came into my life when I married her," is the testimony borne by Lord Tennyson to the influence of his wife. No finer or more beautiful tribute could ever be paid to the place of a good woman in the house. The late Laureate's biography, which is being so eagerly read just now, is more striking in the revelation it makes of the saintly character of this beautiful woman than even for the light it sheds on the strong and earnest personality of her husband. However nebulous in certain directions his creed may have been, there can be no doubt that Tennyson's writings have exercised a strong religious influence on the last two generations. This book proves that much of the finer and more spiritual qualities in these writings were due to his wife's extraordinary influence over him. Modest, retiring full of the peace that comes from an unswerving faith, she fed his nature, and steadied his character to a due performance of his great mission. Such women are the salt of the earth.

We published last week a remarkable letter from the late Professor Newman. On the same day The Daily News published a significant one from Mr. G. J. Holyoake on the Professor's "belief," in which it is said :—

No instance is known of a scholar or philosopher of so great an age being so intrepid in the love, the search, the acceptance, and publicity of truth, as anyone will see who reads his "Mature Thoughts on Christianity." Yet amid all his changes onward he had, like Theodore Parker and Mazzini, a passion for God, and never wavered in his belief, devotion, and trust.

There is something in the ring of these sentences which makes us wonder where the writer himself may be in his old age; not, apparently, where he was when we heard him discuss the Christian evidences with Thomas Cooper some forty years ago. It is noticeable that Mr. T. H. Gill, the writer of so many excellent hymns, also sent an interesting account of his late friend, Professor Newman, to the papers. Many seem to drift far in thought and theory from the Gospel who, nevertheless, never get free, from it. It holds the soul with a long cable.

Dr. Spence Watson pointed out at the meeting of the Peace Society in Newcastle-on-Tyne three signs of the times which cannot be called good. (1) The immense number of persons connected with the trades for manufacturing war materials; in Newcastle he reckoned that one-half of the population is dependent on Lord Armstrong's works; too many persons are dependent on the will of a few, and these few engaged in trades one would like to see obsolete; (2) the number of persons who are shareholders in breweries and places such as Lord Armstrong's, and who have a direct influence in pushing their businesses; (3) the spread of the jingo as distinguished from the patriotic spirit. A resolution was passed in favour of simultaneous and proportionate reduction of armaments, which could be done if there was a sincere desire for peace. At present the increase grows at a rate indicative of moral infatuation and mental blindness.

Our treatment of the native races in Africa seems to be as unsatisfactory as possible. Whilst we are hearing of the Bechuanas being condemned to slavery, sold at the close of a war, just as unchristianised nations have always treated the vanquished, there is made in the National Review, by Mr. J. Y. F. Blake, a charge concerning British conduct in Rhodesia which, whether true or untrue, fills one with a sense of shame. It is incredible that any man should put his name to such an article, and that any responsible journal should publish it, unless there be good grounds for believing it. Not to dwell on the offensive particulars, we may quote only one sentence, which is sufficiently specific and suggestive :—

The enslaving of Sjambo, king, and his men; the debauching of the women and young girls; the appropriation of their cattle and then their mealies, were the real causes which gradually ripened and forced the natives into rebellion; and be it said they rebelled none too soon.

Rhodesia is not so far away that there need be any difficulty in proving or disproving these statements. An honest inquiry, with no hushing up, would be a satisfaction to the nation.

The Century Magazine attempts this month to deal with some evils of American life by contending that it is a patriotic and common-sense thing to admit the existence of the evils. Its method is not unworthy of imitation at home. Our evils can only be met and remedied by "full and frank recognition of them in all their seriousness, without qualification or attempt at extenuation." If we substitute Britain for America, we might say, touching international questions, "Conduct these in such a way as to preserve our own self-respect, to prevent a disturbance of our own trade and industry by causing unnecessary alarm, and to hold us before the world as a civilised, Christian nation desiring to be just and honourable in all its relations." This seems to be a very simple method of procedure, and one that is patriotic as well, unless it be true that there is a conflict between common sense and true Americanism. Spurious patriotism is responsible for the continuance in every land of some of the worst evils that afflict the peoples.

Dr. Josiah Strong, who writes in The North American Review, expresses the opinion that great cities are in the line of our normal development, because of the application of machinery to agriculture, which enables four men to do as much as fourteen used to do; because the rise of manufactures in the cities attracts the men released from farms; because the railway makes it possible to feed a massed population. We are very reluctant to accept the conclusion, for (1) hand labour and small farms can undoubtedly fill a place in our social system, and a far larger place than they at present have; (2) the massing of people in huge cities reduces them to their original atoms, and makes fellowship and neighbourliness next to impossible, a state of things so far from the social and religious ideal, that one cannot help regarding it with anxiety. True, we may see our way out of the difficulty by great cities becoming congeries of small towns, each with its own civic, social, and religious life, but we are a long way from that goal. We wish God-speed to all who are trying to keep the people out of great cities.

Mr. Peek, who cannot be classed as an opponent of voluntary schools, is of opinion that the religious teaching in the London Board Schools commends itself to the parents of the scholars. He, therefore, would have it continued on the lines on which it was so long given. The battle, he says, is now not between Churchmen and Nonconformists.

It is between moderate men, who desire to continue the Biblical instruction as it has been for twenty years so successfully taught, and the sacerdotalists who under the evasive pretence of giving more definite religious teaching would explain the Bible as they do the words of the Prayer Book, to support their own pretensions.

The signs at present are that common-sense and charity will, in November, gain a victory over folly and bigotry.

The high estimate put by Mr. Spurgeon upon his work as a preacher is known to all; to preach the Saviour was the joy of his heart and the labour of his life. How often and how strongly he may have been tempted to give his splendid powers to other things none can tell; but a story comes from the United States which well illustrates his firmness of resolve not to depart from his purpose, and also his humour in expressing himself. The following words are said to have come as a parenthesis in a sermon :—

I have been urged to address the Reform meeting in Exeter Hall next Thursday, and I have declined: not because I am out of sympathy with the Reform cause—God forbid!—but any blind fiddler can attend to that. I am a preacher of the glorious Gospel of the blessed God.

A good deal less than a Reform meeting in Exeter Hall has been known to draw some preachers aside; but the concentrated men who can say, "This one thing I do," always make their mark.

It seems to us that the ethics of advertising need to be more closely attended to in these days of feverish commercial competition. Some months ago we reviewed a book by a popular author, and our estimate of the work as a whole was distinctly hostile, though we incidentally gave the author due credit for what appeared to us praiseworthy. The publishers of the book, in advertising it, quote our single commendatory sentence, but entirely ignore our lengthy adverse criticism. That is not what we consider fair and honest advertising.

In these days of change all manner of counsel is given to believers. We are told by the New Orthodoxy that the great fact in the Church which has now to be faced is that the centre of the Evangelical system of truth has become changed. It was a work; it is a person. It was a work of redemption; it is a living Saviour...We urge men to believe in a competent Saviour, who has been made competent to save through his work.

No doubt some teachers lay stress upon the work of Christ rather than point to the Saviour Himself; but even in their case they believe that this work had put into our Saviour's hands a power; work and person went together, and were inseparably connected. One great indication of a people's faith is the hymns they sing, and in the grand evangelical hymns, which are the favourites but those that exalt the Saviour of sinners? "Rock of Ages," "Jesu, Lover of my soul," "When I survey the wondrous cross"—this last especially is a perfect illustration of the manner in which the work and person of Jesus were associated in the minds of most believers. The centre of the Evangelical system of truth is just where it always was—in Christ and Him crucified.

The case of London clerks, who number over seventy thousand, is one which ought to appeal strongly to the sympathies of Christian men and women—perhaps more to women than men. Nineteen-twentieths of this number, says Mr. Robert White in The Nineteenth Century, receive salaries of two guineas weekly and under. The typical clerk is the young man who receives thirty shillings per week, and is without a home, or other resources, in London. The question is whether some one will build a "House" for such men, and put it upon a paying basis, as Lord Rowton makes his "Houses" pay. Considering the part that many of these men play in building up the fortunes of City merchants, and that not a few merchants have themselves served in the ranks of the great army, surely there ought to be some one with the means and the will to undertake the task of building one sufficiently large paying "House." More would be sure to follow.

How to make the best of life's trials is a maxim well illustrated in an instructive article in Cassell's Saturday Journal. Some interesting instances are given. A Somerset House clerk, finding his income insufficient for the needs of his increasing family, got over the difficulty by starting a coffee-stall in West Smithfield in the early morning, proceeding afterwards to his day's work. A rising author who found it particularly hard to find acceptance with the publishers, tided over the worst period by acting as a broker's man, therein afterwards finding material for his best work. And a Nonconformist minister in the South of London doubles his inadequate salary by carrying on an excellent photography business. These cases are parables of still higher things. The art of transforming the disadvantages and sorrows of life into spiritual capital is one of the last that many learn, but if we would grow rich toward God, it is needful to master it.

A United Mission in London.

A MOVEMENT has been set on foot to secure the services of Rev. John McNeill for a united and extended Gospel mission in London. A cordial invitation from a representative body of clergy, ministers, and Christian workers of all evangelical denominations is being largely signed for transmission to Mr. McNeill in Scotland, where he is now busy at work. It is proposed that the mission shall commence early in January next, continuing for several months, if God will.

It is felt that the time is fully ripe for such a special effort, and that the conditions are unusually favourable for its successful accomplishment. This conviction found expression in a gathering of interested friends at breakfast, in Exeter Hall, on Wednesday morning last week, at the kind invitation of Mr. T. A. Denny. The opinion was generally expressed that such a mission in the metropolis is very desirable, and that Mr. McNeill is a man eminently fitted to lead the campaign, with the hearty fellowship and help of those who are interested in the evangelization of this great city. A central committee has been formed, with Mr. Denny as chairman, and Messrs. W. T. Paton and J. H. Putterill (of Exeter Hall) as hon. secretaries.

Fuller particulars will be given in an early issue. Meantime we invite earnest Christian friends all over London to be much in prayer, and to hold themselves in readiness to co-operate at the fitting time.

The Testimony of Jesus
Concerning Himself.

BY DR. JAMES CULROSS.

Introductory.

I WISH to investigate the testimony of Jesus of Nazareth concerning Himself. It is of the most extraordinary kind. It is not cast in a scientific or dogmatic mould, nor put before us in a series of consecutive propositions or articles, but is scattered up and down the Gospel record just as occasion called it forth.

To outward appearance, Jesus was merely a Galilean peasant. His lineage, indeed, was illustrious. He belonged to the royal house of David, but his family had sunk into obscurity and poverty. Joseph, the husband of Mary, was a working carpenter in a town of no good repute among the Galilean hills. Men asked, till it became a proverbial saying: "Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth?" In this unfamous town, with its humble associations, He lived and worked as an artisan till He was about thirty years of age. Then He stepped out of obscurity, and speedily attracted the attention, while He excited the perplexity, of his nation. To the common eye He was only a Galilean rabbi, with a few humble followers, mostly fishermen.

What education He had received can only be conjectured, but that it was quite limited—probably not above the ordinary level—may be inferred from the question of the Jews: "How knoweth this man letters, having never learned?" Starting with the return from the Captivity, great attention had been devoted to their school system by the Jews. In every district there was a School Board, and the attendance of every child more than six years old was compulsory, except in those cases in which a satisfactory education was otherwise provided. The school-book was the Old Testament Scriptures, and hence every Hebrew boy was instructed in the law and the history of his people.

Out of the materials which have come down to us it is impossible to construct a chronological "Life of Jesus." We have simply a picture of Him in four memoirs, each with its own plan, and the heart-thought which rules it; but as these memoirs are studied it becomes evident to the student that they bear internal marks of truth, and form a unity. It is not merely that they are bound together within the same boards and have the same general title-page, but there is one Spirit inspiring them, and they combine to set forth the one unique Jesus. The attempts that have been made to assign these memoirs to a late date, it may now be asserted, have completely broken down, and leave us four trustworthy documents, exhibiting, not indeed a history, but a vivid portrait of the Christ as He lived and acted and spoke. These documents justify the posthumous testimony of John Stuart Mill:—

Whatever else may be taken from us by rational criticism, Christ is still left, a unique figure, not more unlike all his precursors than all his followers, even those who had the direct benefit of his personal teaching. It is of no use to say that Christ, as exhibited in the Gospel, is not historical, and that we know not how much of what is admirable has been superadded by the tradition of his followers...But who among his disciples, or among their proselytes, was capable of inventing the sayings ascribed to Jesus, or imagining the life and character revealed in the Gospels?

Certainly we cannot account for Him as the product of his age and country, which were likelier to produce a Barabbas, or a Judas of Galilee, or the leader of an insane rising against the might of Rome, than the Christ of the four Gospels.

The battle of faith and unbelief, retreating from other points, has been gathering for years more and more round the person of Jesus of Nazareth. He is Himself the embodiment of Christian doctrine, and the basis and ground of Gospel preaching. One noteworthy feature of the closing years of the present century is the multitude of "Lives of Christ" that have been produced, though in some of the most popular of them a thoughtful reader feels that a large portion of the information in which they are so rich affords little more help to an understanding of Jesus Himself than if a historian of the Peninsular War were to illustrate the career of Wellington by telling us the geology and botany of his various battlefields.

There are men who, overlooking the insight of loving and lowly souls without number in past generations, talk about the "rediscovery of Christ" as a recent achievement, and whose watchword is "Back to Jesus." Some of them are men of devout and reverent spirit, who have become weary of the doctrinal disputes of the age and the ingenious speculations of scholarship, and who long, like the Apostle Paul, "that I may know Him." For these men creeds and systems are growing less in value, while Christ is growing more and more. To gaze into his face and to hear his voice, is becoming the absorbing passion of their souls.

Others who use the same watchword make no secret that they wish to discredit apostolic teaching as we have it in the Epistles; and individuals among them think they see their way to get rid of that awful tragedy, the Fall, and to substitute for it a doctrine of the "ascent of man." Christ says that He came "not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." If, says one, you simply strike out that poetic legend contained in the earlier chapters of Genesis, and a certain section of Paul's Epistle to the Romans, there is no mention in the Bible of such an event as the Fall, nor is there any foundation for that heathenish doctrine of the Atonement, which represents the good and merciful God as an angry Moloch who must be appeased and placated with blood. It is clear that when Jesus was in the world He found not only "sinners" whom He called to repentance, but also "righteous" men, who "needed no repentance."

"If I must choose between Paul and Christ," he adds, "I follow Christ." The pure and perfect light, culminating in Jesus (who was probably sinless), shades off into the gloaming of Apostolic Christianity, represented in the writings of James, Peter, John, and Paul. The nearest and likest to the Master is James, whose epistle resembles a continuation of the Sermon on the Mount. Paul, we are told, is the real inventor of Christianity as it is generally received to-day, and he has obscured and distorted the beautiful and winsome teaching of Jesus. Again and again he introduces "notions," which he afterwards "contradicts" or "corrects." His "reasoning" requires to be closely watched. It is frequently "illogical"; he argues in the fashion of the Rabbis; he undoubtedly falls into "Calvinism," owing to the necessities of a bad mode of enforcing his theme. And almost every chapter in some of his epistles "reeks with the blood-theology."

This eagerness to go "back to Jesus" and to ascertain what He actually says is very commendable, though not for such reasons as some of those frequently adduced. I am satisfied it will turn out that apostolic teaching is in full harmony, when fairly interpreted, with that of Christ. Christ gives warning beforehand that revelations were to be made through the Holy Spirit to the Apostles which He did not make in his earthly ministry. "I have yet many things to say unto you," He told them just before his crucifixion; "but ye cannot bear them now." The telling of them was reserved for the coming of "the Spirit of Truth," when the full disclosure should be made—"When He is come, He will guide you into all the truth; for He shall not speak of Himself; but whatsoever He shall hear that shall He speak; and He will shew you things to come."

The Evangelization Society.

LARGE numbers of our readers will hear with deep regret of the resignation of the hon. secretary of the Evangelization Society, Captain W. E. Smith, who for nearly thirty years has presided with marked faithfulness, ability and encouragement over this valuable and important organisation. Some account of the life and work of Captain Smith appeared in our columns in the year 1889, and it now remains for us to say that he retires into private life not only with the deep regard and loving affection of the committee and the evangelists, but also of many friends and correspondents of the Society throughout the country; indeed, many who have never seen his face have keenly appreciated his life-work.

A successor has been appointed to fill the vacancy in the person of Mr. John Wood, who has been associated for many years with Captain Smith in the work, and who has also been a member of the committee for a long time past. We trust he will have the ready sympathy and needed support in helping to further the work so much required in the present day.

The Society preaches the Gospel in a large number of tents throughout the summer months, and in many undenominational places of assembly throughout the year. It also responds as far as possible to the invitations of all clergymen, ministers, and others who seek its help; and the new honorary secretary would be very glad to answer any inquiries, and to do anything in his power to promote evangelistic work wherever suitable openings present themselves.

Without the ready help afforded by the Society many mission halls, soldiers' homes, and other institutions would indeed be at a loss to know where to look for assistance in time of need.

Many who live near to the Lord witness that there is increasing departure from the truth in many directions, and that sin and worldliness appear to increase and abound. To those who believe that the message of the Gospel is God's great remedy for Satan's work, we would say, Do not hesitate to apply to the Society in question for help in needy districts. It is privileged to send the message of salvation to hundreds of thousands year by year, and we understand that it greatly needs new friends and increased financial support. All communications should be addressed to the Honorary Secretary, 21, Surrey-street, Strand, London, W.C.

Harvest Thanksgiving.

COME, brethren in the common faith,
With heart to heart most dear,
To thank our Father for the gifts
Which bless the passing year.

We praise Him for the budding spring
With flowers on hill and plain;
We praise Him for the summer suns
With fields of ripening grain.

We praise Him for the autumn rich
With rustling golden sheaves,
And useful root, and luscious fruit
Showered with the falling leaves.

We praise Him for the strong right hand
That tilled the stubborn soil—
For life and health again to reap
The harvest of our toil.

But over all, for boundless grace
That tracked our devious ways,
Forgiving and restoring us—
O Lord, we give Thee praise.

Fishing for Souls.

By Rev. THEODORE L. CUYLER.

JESUS CHRIST commissions his servants to be "fishers of men." As ministers and Christian people are now at home again, and commencing another year's labours, a good motto for them is in Christ's command to Peter on the shore of Galilee—"Launch out into the deep." Peter's reply to his Master was that they had been toiling all night and had caught no fish. "Nevertheless, Lord," he says, "at thy word I will let down the net." He was despondent, but not despairing. The command of his Lord is enough to rally his faith. To the eye of faith many things are clear that to the eye of sense are exceedingly dark. Faith sets the bow of Peter's little smack towards the deep water; the fish are there, and not in the shoal water near the shore. So out into the deep they pull; down goes the net, and lo! such a multitude of fishes are enclosed that two boats are required to bring the abundant haul to land!

Here is a lesson for pastors, Sunday-school teachers, parents, and all who long for the salvation of souls. Perhaps last year was not a year of success. Failure in any good undertaking is a calamity; it often breaks the back of a weak Christian's courage. Failure ought to provoke a true Christian to fresh ardour and new attempts to retrieve the losses of the past. Spiritual failures commonly have a good reason for them; for God does not work blindly with his people. A scanty crop of spiritual results is apt to mean poor ploughing, stingy sowing, and careless cultivation. No crop at all may mean indolence or unbelief, or both combined. Failure has a reason for it; and it ought to stir every honest heart to the solemn inquiry—whose fault was it? God does not break his promises; his injunction is—be not weary in your good work, for in due season ye shall reap, if ye faint not.

At the beginning of a new year's work the first duty of faith is to make a new venture. Christ's command is to "launch out," and make the effort. I would not make too much of a word which originally had only a local and temporary origin; but that word "deep" has a great spiritual significance. There must be a deep-down faith in our hearts, and a deep insatiate desire for the salvation of the souls with whom we labour. God grants to a fervent desire what He denies to a faint and feeble desire. "I will not let Thee go unless Thou bless me"; that is the temper of a Christian who is in dead earnest for a revival in his church, or for the conversion of the friend he or she is labouring with. Shallow interest, shallow feeling, shallow praying, catch no fish for the Master.

The minister who longs to convert souls must lay hold of the deep truths of God, and strive to penetrate the depths of the hearts before him. Down in the bottom of the unconverted heart is the lurking depravity, the besetting sin, or the unbelief that keeps the sinner from Christ; and the truth must go deep to reach the roots. It must uproot the sin to make conversion thorough. My brother, you will need strong doctrine to do this. Phillips Brooks well said that "no exhortation to a good life that does not put behind it some truth as deep as eternity can seize and hold the conscience." Preach all the doctrine your Bible gives you—and in love to the sinner's soul.

Fishing for souls is a personal work; it is not confined to the pulpit; every man or woman who possesses faith and an ardent love of Jesus should engage in it. It is not a "professional" business, restricted to a few, and to be done in a set fashion. Nor is it to be accomplished only by a whole church employing a huge net to bring in a multitude of converts at a single draught. Sometimes a powerful and general revival does this. But commonly conversions follow individual effort with individual hearts. A pastor often accomplishes as much by an hour of close friendly conversation as by an hour of public preaching. The Sunday-school teacher can reach his or her scholars most effectually by a private visit and a faithful talk with each member of the class. Personal work does the business; each fisher must drop his own hook, baited with love. No one is scolded to Christ. Yet an unconverted person will bear a tremendously searching talk if it is conducted in a frank, tender spirit, and unmistakably prompted by affection. The real aim must be persuasion—that is to persuade the sinner to let go his sin and to lay hold of Jesus. He is wise that winneth souls.

Pastors, teachers, and church members are too often reluctant to take hold of the "hard cases." Sometimes they are dismissed as past saving. The fish that bite readily are easily caught. But that inveterate Sabbath-breaker, or that hard drinker, or that open scoffer are too often passed by as hopeless. That was not the fashion of Peter and his fellow-fishermen, nor should it be ours. The Almighty Spirit which subdued Saul of Tarsus will attend us if with strong faith we grapple with the most chronic cases of open impenitence. Sometimes these "hopeless cases" yield the soonest—far sooner than some decorous church-goers who have become hardened under a thousand sermons, and through many seasons of revival. And when a conspicuously irreligious person is converted, the effect upon the community is all the more powerful. One thing is certain, and that is that those Christians who in their daily conduct live nearest to Christ will win the most converts to Him. Let us launch out into the deep, good friends, this year; and let us remember that the secret of success on Galilee was that Jesus was on board of the vessel.

The M'All Mission.

We are gathering to begin our winter's work. There are many tokens of encouragement. During the summer the work has gone on well, though the workers were few in number. Now the meetings are in a prosperous state, and with good attendances; there is also an excellent spirit manifested.

We have had with us Lord Radstock, who is speaking in both English and French, and Mr. Joseph Alexander, who is giving lectures with the magic-lantern on his journey round the world. Lady Congleton has also spent a few days in Paris, and at our prayer-meeting on a recent afternoon gave us an interesting account of her visits to three of our stations in the provinces. At St. Etienne she found Mr. and Mrs. Burroughs much encouraged in their work. At Limoges the work is being carried on steadily and with blessing, also at Nantes, where M. Leuba is very active. Lady Congleton was specially interested in visiting a village a few miles from Nantes, where there is a little colony of Welsh people, working in the tinware works. They have been ministered to by one of the French pastors of Nantes, Pastor Fargues, but he is now too unwell to continue, so they meet together and read the Bible and sing and pray; they would greatly value the visit of any Christian friends who would go there and cheer them for a time. M. Leuba knows English and can hold meetings in that language, but at present he is fully occupied with the French work, and has not time nor strength to undertake any fresh tasks.

We have good news from many parts of the field, and trust that this winter will be a fruitful one.

Paris, Oct. 9. W. Soltau.

Invalid Children.

A QUIET work has for the last nine years and more been carried on in London for the benefit of the weak and weary little children, whose wants and interests are often crowded out of sight when more attractive schemes or more self-asserting charities are pressed upon our attention. There are many thousands of these little ones in our streets, chronic invalids almost from their birth, sufferers from hip and spine disease or kindred maladies, brought on, it may be, by a fall in childhood, or by the rough-and-tumble rearing which is in general their fate. They may perhaps—if their parents care sufficiently about them to give themselves the trouble—drift into one of our hospitals for a time, and something may be done for them, but such an oasis in their lives is but of limited extent. To make room for others, they soon drift out again into the lanes and slums whence they came. They have no chance to compete with their healthier brethren—no after care. There is no one whose business it is to befriend them, and give them the chance of something better than sitting weary hours on a doorstep, wishing they could play about as others do.

It is to bring help to this class especially that the Invalid Children's Aid Association has worked industriously and carefully. The books at its offices, 18, Buckingham-street, Strand, show over 5000 cases, to each of which some measure of help has, where possible, been dispensed. Last year 646 fresh cases were received and attended to; this year will show a similar record. The wants of these children are never ending, and the report of the Association reveals their manifold nature. Surgical instruments and jackets, supports for spine and legs, crutches, boots, the loan of a perambulator or wheelcouch (at least ninety-eight of these were lent out last year alone), cots and mattrasses, water pillows, and similar comforts, clothing, fresh-air in the summer months by the seaside or in the country, medical and surgical advice and attendance, nursing in their own homes, and especially a friend who will visit from time to time and report to the headquarters of the Association.

Sometimes admission to a nursing home is the most pressing want of all. The society has at the present time 117 cases under its care in various nursing and training institutions, both in London itself and in the provinces.

There is so much to do for each child, so much unavoidable correspondence belonging to each case, so much thought and arrangement needed, that the Association is obliged to maintain a certain number of officials, besides accepting the volunteer help which it enjoys in a large measure. With the ever-increasing work the ever-increasing need of funds presses heavily on the workers. It is hard to make the bricks and gather the straw also. Will no one provide the straw, that the tale of bricks may be complete?

But, after all, the distinguishing feature of this Association is its attempt to find a friend for every crippled child among the London poor, a friend from a class above its own, who will see to its wants, fight its battles, and be to it—without in any way encroaching on its parent's province—an ever-caring Providence.

In this endeavour the Invalid Children's Aid Association follows closely in the footsteps of the Divine Master, who cares so much for these "least" among his brethren, and who in the same breath with which He had commanded his followers to take up the Cross, left it also on record for the encouragement of those that follow that even a cup of cold water, given in his name, should claim its full reward. The strain is great, the thirst is greater. We plead in the name of that Son of David who took the children up in his arms, put his hands on them, and blessed them. M. F. E. H.

Mr. Moody Interviewed.

IN a Chicago daily paper for October 2 there appears an interview with Mr. Moody, portions of which we subjoin:—

Mr. D. L. Moody left his home yesterday to begin his winter's work. Before leaving he talked freely of the condition of the churches throughout the country, and the need which he sees, from his correspondence and interviews, of more direct preaching on all doctrinal lines.

When asked about his plans for the winter, Mr. Moody said:—

"My desire this year is to go into the leading cities of the United States and Canada, to which I have been invited, and rouse the churches on the old lines."

"What do you mean by the old lines?" suggested the correspondent.

"The great fundamental truths of Christianity, from which in many places the churches seem to be departing, with the result that the audiences are depleted and the power of the pulpit lessened in this country."

"Do the people like these doctrinal subjects?"

"The masses do. They are sick and tired of speculative theology in the pulpit. That is why our churches are half empty and also why millions never darken a church door. People are not fed. They are hungering and thirsting for the pure Gospel, and they get pulpit essays and discussions of questions. They go away empty and disgusted, and then they stay away."

"Is this your opinion, or do you know it to be a fact?"

"The half-filled churches speak for themselves, and many of the people who stay away tell me that this is their reason for doing so."

"But the pastors say that their people demand that they shall keep abreast of the times?"

"And they are abreast of the times if they preach the old doctrines faithfully. If the 60,000 ministers preached a course of sermons every year on the Ten Commandments, do you think we should have so many defaulters among our bank officers? If the ministers in the leading pulpits in this country should preach a rousing sermon occasionally on the Fourth Commandment I think that some of the stockholders of corporations that are now desecrating the Lord's Day would either change the action of the corporations or get out of them. The ministry should do its duty to the community instead of discussing topics which are treated far abler in the newspapers and magazines of the day."

"It is said that the pew looks to the pulpit for information upon the topics of the day; that the people wish to know what their minister thinks about the subjects which interest them."

"He has other days besides Sunday and other opportunities than his half-hour in the pulpit to tell them. Few people comparatively among regular church attendants go to church more than once on Sunday.

"When a man goes to church he wants to know what God says, and it is the business of the pulpit to tell him. For two or three cents a man may buy a newspaper in which he gets all the news and also an estimate of the great questions of the day prepared by specialists. An editor knows a great deal more about the situation in Europe to-day than a minister can possibly know, because it is the editor's business to keep thoroughly informed on such matters."

"Do you never preach on the so-called questions of the day?"

"No, and I will tell you why. I haven't the time to study them up. Nor has the average pastor time for these things and the proper study of the Bible. Imagine my preaching on the 'Gold of Alaska!' What do I know about it? Or, take the great questions that threaten the peace of Europe. In order to discuss them intelligently one needs to be a diplomatist at least, and then he needs to know a good many State secrets. What business has the pulpit with such problems? Do they help to make men better? Even if understood, are they a proper subject for a Sunday sermon? I think not, and the leading men in the pulpit for the next twenty years will be the men who keep the Bible to the front. They are the men whom the crowds will follow."

"If you are hoping to reach the church people in your work this winter, why do you not hold your meetings in church buildings?"

"Because the services there only reach a single congregation, or, at best, the people of one denomination, while I want to speak to people of all denominations.

"The suggestion has been made that your meetings in New York last winter would have been more effective if they had been held in a church or in different churches."

"In Cooper Union and in Carnegie Hall I was able to meet on equal ground people representing every branch of the Christian Church, and thousands who belonged to no church, and the majority of whom would not have gone to any church. That was a great advantage, and another was this: It is just as easy to speak to 3000 or 5000 people as it is to address 500 or 1000."

"You have been preaching for thirty years now. Have you made any change in your sermons?"

"None, except to make them more doctrinal. The conviction deepens that the old truths must be stated and restated in the plainest possible language. The people must be made to understand what it means to break the law of God."

"But people think of you as preaching a gospel of love."

"So I do, but the Ten Commandments came from the great heart of love. We do not want a gospel of mere sentiment. The Decalogue was not superseded by the Sermon on the Mount. Jesus Christ magnified the law. He fulfilled it. After He came, men were to keep it in the spirit as well as the letter."

"Where do you begin your work this fall?"

"I begin a series of services in Montreal next week, and then make a tour through Canada, holding services in Quebec, Ottawa, and other cities, going as far west as Winnipeg."

"Have you invitations from American cities?"

"Far more than I can accept. I never had so many demands for my services as I have this fall. I have promised to go to Philadelphia, and I am holding invitations from other places under advisement."

"How long do you expect to stay in Philadelphia?"

"Long enough to restate the old doctrines."

"And these are—?"

"Repentance, the Atonement, regeneration, the law, love, faith, hope, assurance, justification, grace, the Resurrection, etc."

"Some people express surprise that so many college students attend your Bible conferences at Northfield."

"Why should they not come? It seems to me natural that an educated man should be anxious to inform himself upon a subject so important as the Bible. It is a singular fact that few men, otherwise well educated, are acquainted with the English Bible. I can secure a hundred men who can teach Latin and Greek well where I can find one that can teach the Bible at all. The coming man, in my opinion, is the one who knows his English Bible thoroughly, and keeps it at the front, whether he is in the pulpit or pew. That is why we make the Bible so prominent in all of our schools. It is not the only book taught there, but it is thoroughly studied."

"Do the parents of your scholars object to the prominence given to Bible study?"

"When I tell you that we took one hundred new students at Mount Hermon this month, and were obliged to turn away five hundred who desired to enter there, I think you will need no other answer."

A C.M.S. Farewell.

WHILE last week's Missionary Conference spoke of deepened interest in missions, the great dismissal of Tuesday evening showed the outcome of that interest in the thrusting forth of earnest souls to carry the Gospel among the heathen. The list of missionaries, new and returning, numbered ninety-seven names, of whom twelve had already started for their fields of labour. Hence the interest was great, the large hall was crowded, and the enthusiasm manifested was very encouraging. The President of the Church Missionary Society, Sir John H. Kennaway, occupied the chair.

Rev. H. E. Fox submitted a comprehensive numerical statement as to the composition of the company of outgoing missionaries. Already this year fifty had been sent out, and now ninety-seven were being commended to God. Fifty-five of these were going out for the first time, and thirty returning to fields in which they had already laboured. Of the thirty veteran missionaries, nine were clergymen, one a medical missionary, four laymen, six unmarried ladies, and ten wives of missionaries. Of the fifty-five new missionaries, sixteen were clergymen, nine medical missionaries, three were laymen, six the wives of new missionaries, two the wives of returning missionaries, and six ladies engaged to missionaries in the field. It is to be observed that the C.M.S. has never before sent so many medical missionaries at one time. Last year all the new missionaries were already provided for before they went out. This time they had nearly as good a record. Of the seventy-six already located, six were honorary, one partly so, fifty-six were supported by friends, or groups of friends, without charge upon the general funds of the Society; ten were applied for, to be supported in like manner, and only three unallotted.

An address followed by the Chairman, after which three returning missionaries spoke—Rev. T. R. Wade of work in the Punjaub, Rev. J. N. Carpenter of educational work at Allahabad, and Mr. J. A. Wray of experiences in Taveta, Eastern Africa.

Next came three new missionaries—Rev. E. H. M. Waller, representing Cambridge and specially St. John's Hall, and going to N.-W. India; Rev. W. S. Walsh (son of the Bishop of Ossory), going to South China; and Rev. C. A. Manley, going to work in Palestine.

Addresses followed by Rev. P. Webber, Dr. Sturrock, of Persia, and Bishop Ingham, who closed with a rousing call to self-surrender and devotion to the great work of foreign missions.

A Missionary Congress is announced to be held in London in connection with the Young Christians' Missionary Union, from November 13 to 17 inclusive. The meetings will take place at Devonshire-square Chapel, Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, the City Temple, and the Metropolitan Tabernacle.

South Africa Mission.—Two meetings are to be held at Exeter Hall on Friday, at 3.30 and 6.30, in connection with this mission. At the afternoon meeting, over which Mr. Albert A. Head will preside, Mrs. Penn-Lewis will speak. In the evening the speakers include Rev. E. W. Moore, Mr. Eugene Stock, Miss Constance Maynard (principal of Westfield College, Hampstead, who has lately returned from a trip to the S.A.G.M. Station in Pondoland), and Rev. C. E. Sampson. The six outgoing workers will also address the meeting.

The House of Rest —The first meeting of the session was held in the Pillar Room on Friday week. In the afternoon Rev. W. Fuller Gooch addressed a large audience on the subject of "God's Anointing." In the evening Rev. J. B. Figgis gave a searching and solemn address on the rebukes administered to the five churches of Asia as recorded in the opening chapters of Revelation. He pointed out that the besetting sin of individual Christians did much to hinder and mar their work, and insisted that these things ought not to be, need not be, and should not be, quoting promises from the Old and New Testaments to prove that sin should not have dominion over the Christian.

The Congregational Union.

THE Autumnal Assembly of the Congregational Union of England and Wales was held last week at Birmingham, being attended by 1350 accredited delegates and ministers. We gave brief particulars of the opening meetings in our last issue. On Tuesday morning, Rev. Dr. Berry delivered his presidential address on "The Churches of Christ and the Kingdom of God." He touched many questions, social, ecclesiastical, spiritual. In conclusion, he maintained that the Gospel of the grace of God must be preached with more simplicity, directness, and fulness than ever. The Christian disciple must be charged with a sense of obligation to express his piety in works, and to expend his work upon the problems of life. The Churches must be directed to face the social conditions of men, and the mutual relations of life—not as questions lying outside the Gospel, but close to the very heart of the Kingdom of God. The Churches exist to create the Kingdom.

The Union adopted without discussion a statement on sacerdotalism, prepared by Rev. W. J. Woods, secretary of the Union. The Union, while seeing no reason to suppose that the Roman Catholic communion was becoming more formidable, observed with profound sorrow that within the pale of the Church of England, which was constitutionally a Protestant body, and once regarded as the bulwark of Protestantism, there had grown up a considerable party who did not inculcate, but sought to subvert, the spiritual DOCTRINES OF THE REFORMATION.

The Assembly sternly disapproved of the adoption of Romish ritual in the Church of England, the wearing of vestments, the use of the mixed chalice, and the adoption of the eastward position, and reaffirmed its loyalty to the Protestant faith, and called upon all Christians to combat and repudiate sacerdotalism.

Mr. Gerard N. Ford (Manchester) made a statement on behalf of the Church Aid Society; and Rev. W. F. Clarkson (Southampton) ably advocated the claims of that home mission agency. Thereupon Mr. W. S. Hartley, of Liverpool, the well-known Primitive Methodist, promised a donation of £100, provided nine others would give a like amount. The challenge was taken up, and several promises made forthwith. Rev. D. B. Hooke (London) followed with a report upon the South African delegacy. During his visit to Cape Town he had the opportunity of meeting with the Chief Khama, who authorised him to give those at Birmingham the following greeting, "Say good day to them, tell them some day I hope to see them again. The water journey is so long, but now we have the railway I hope to see them again some day."

A delegation representing the Free Churches of Birmingham was introduced by Mr. George Cadbury, and an address of welcome was read by Rev. J. Jenkyn Brown (Baptist); Rev. F. L. Wiseman (Wesleyan), and Rev. W. Ewing (Presbyterian) also spoke. The Chairman announced a telegram of brotherly greeting from the Bishop of Coventry, and the clergy of the diocese in conference assembled. Delegates were also welcomed from the Congregational Unions of Scotland, Ireland, Victoria, and New Zealand. In acknowledging the deputations, the Chairman remarked upon the greeting from the Bishop of Worcester. A more gracious Christian man was not to be found in the diocese over which he presided, a true spiritual brother and a good friend to those outside as well as inside his communion. On the motion of Rev. Dr. Horton (Hampstead), seconded by Rev. A. N. Johnson, a resolution recording deep interest in the Student Volunteer Missionary Union was adopted. In the evening a public meeting discussed the National Mission of Congregationalism.

On Wednesday morning addresses were delivered as follows: "Clearer Views of Sin and its Remedy," by Rev. A. J. Palmer, of Folkestone; "Culture of the Devotional Life," by Rev. Charles New, of Hastings; and "Directness and Evangelistic Fervour in Preaching," by Rev. Stanley Rogers, of Liverpool. In the afternoon, at a conference on "Christian Economics," the agricultural problem was discussed. After addresses by Mr. W. Hazell, M.P., and Rev. Dr. Paton, a resolution was adopted recognising the great importance to the State and to the churches of the establishment of small farmers of the yeoman type on the land, and requesting the committees of the Union and of the Church Aid Society at once to consider the matter with the view of taking immediate and united action.

At the Thursday morning session the Secretary announced that he had received promises of £17,118 towards the £100,000 fund for helping forward Church Extension. A resolution was passed on the subject of labour disputes, and hoping that the President of the Board of Trade would succeed in bringing about a peaceable settlement of the dispute in the engineering trade.

On Friday, the closing day, among numerous gatherings was one in support of the University and Social Settlements and to promote the extension of the movement. Mr. Percy Alden, the warden of Mansfield House at Canning Town, declared that the old system of charity was no solution of the social problem. They must find a basis of justice upon which to build a peaceful and healthy community, and to do that it was necessary to be sympathetic and to know the real facts of the case. If, said he, they could only get a hundred earnest young men of ability and power to live in East London, they could revolutionise the place. Rev. Herbert Stead gave some particulars of the Browning Hall Settlement, Walworth. He appealed strongly for the sympathy of the rich on behalf of their less fortunate brethren, and contended that the best method of working out an improvement was for the classes to mix more closely with the masses and make their interests common. Dr. Fairbairn declared that there were spots in large cities quite as benighted as heathen countries—in fact, the poverty of London was even more miraculous than its wealth.

Winchester Conference.

A God-favoured Conference of three days' continuance has been held at the Soldiers' Home, Winchester. Among the speakers were Revs. G. and E. Thwaites, Rev. A. W. Evans, Messrs. J. Kitchin, J. M'Call, F. W. Pitt, Dep.-Surg.-Gen. W. P. Partridge, Lieut.-Col. Pringle, Mr. Russell Hurditch, Countess Schimmelmann, and other honoured servants of Christ. The subject was, "Christ as the Loving One, Living One, and Coming One."

It seemed appropriate that the first prayer was offered by a soldier. One of the many striking thoughts was from the love of Christ, shown in comparing his people, whom He calls "his love," to a company of horses in Pharaoh's chariot. As such they are:—(1) Bought regardless of cost; (2) Are well fed; (3) To be in the king's chariot; (4) To carry the king; (5) Not to be borrowed; (6) To go in company. Another speaker spoke of Christ's love as shown in the Revelation of John:—Ransoming Love: It died for us. Resurrection Love: It continues after his death. Returning Love: It cannot rest while absent. Revealing Love: It opens its secrets. Reciprocal Love: It desires a return of love.

Many other blessed truths were brought forward by God's servants. Several works of faith were represented, among them the Soldiers' Christian Association, represented by Mr. A. Wheeler; the British Syrian Schools, represented by Miss Bailey; work in Italy, conducted by Miss Carruthers; and the work among Baltic fishermen, carried on by Countess Schimmelmann.

Open-air meetings were held in the centre of the town, addressed by friends attending the Conference, and led by the Band of the Soldiers' Home.

A praise meeting was held on the Friday morning. Among appropriate words were some by Mr. Edwards, superintendent of the mission, on salvation and song, suffering and song, separation and song, sacrifice and song, service and song, satisfaction and song.

William Luff.

Mr. Herrmann Warszawiak. — It will be remembered that Mr. Warszawiak appealed to the Presbytery of New York against the decision of the Kirk Session of his church, in which he was deprived of church-membership, for frequenting gambling-houses while he was applying for ordination by the Church. At its meeting at the beginning of October, the Presbytery appointed a commission of its most prominent members to hear the appeal. A cablegram from America on Saturday states, "Session unanimously sustained by Commission."

Oxford Letter.

[From Our Own Correspondent.]

SIGNS of the approach of Term have been accumulating during the past few weeks; the inactivity of the "Long" has been shaken off, and due preparation has been made to welcome the return of the 'Varsity to its normal condition. Among other arrangements made for the undergraduates, Canon Christopher's Bible-readings on Saturday evening and Principal Chavasse's Greek Testament class on Sunday evening have commenced. This being the Freshman's Term, special interest gathers round these and other efforts made on the behalf of University members.

The winter session of the Y.M.C.A. will be opened on Friday, when Mr. and Mrs. Rankin Wilson hold a reception in the Association Building.

The Preachers' Preparation class held its first meeting of the session on Thursday, when Rev. Jas. Dann presided. The subjects to be treated week by week suggest much valuable help to those busy workers who have little time for private study.

Following the special effort of the Church Army at St. Ebbe's, Captain Warbridge, of the Labour Home, held special services in his chapel during last week. Principal Chavasse was the preacher on Sunday, and in urging prayer and work among the poor, said that while prayer taught us much, work would probably teach us more.

A special gathering was held on Thursday by the Oxford Band of Hope Union, and arrangements were made for visiting every house in the city and by a personal appeal seek new members. Much permanent good might accrue from the effort if the members thus gained are gathered into classes and thus strengthen the existing organisation.

A Frenchman lately attended the service at Cowley St. John Church, and was much astonished when told he had been to a Church of England, as he verily believed he was in his own church, i.e., the Roman Catholic. It is a cause for shame that nothing effectual can be done to stop this aping of Rome. Surely the call for plain speaking is a loud one, and the demand for careful and painstaking instruction urgent, especially in respect to the young. A gentleman relates how two boys of fourteen were recently persuaded to attend confession, and this when away from home. This would seem to savour of an undue advantage being taken.

The Growth of Religious Freedom.

The services rendered by Mr. Carvell Williams in the cause of religious freedom were acknowledged by his many friends at a meeting in the Memorial Hall on Monday evening. The hon. gentleman was presented with a cheque for £1000, and an address to the following effect:—

"During the last fifty years, one of the most remarkable features of our unprecedented national progress has been the great advance of public opinion on ecclesiastical questions, an advance due, not only to the rapid growth of Nonconformity and the increased freedom of religious thought, but also to the continuous teaching and systematic action of the Society for the Liberation of Religion from State Patronage and Control.

"The work accomplished within this period affords much ground for encouragement to yourself and your coadjutors. The more conspicuous disabilities of Dissenters have been removed, and the principle of Disestablishment, not only in our colonies, but also within part of the United Kingdom itself, has been adopted by the Imperial Parliament.

"This remarkable development of opinion has been brought about by free and pacific discussion, without passion or bitterness, and solely by appeals to reason, justice, and religious conviction."

A Trinity of Evils.—Following up the efforts made in London by the Y.M.C.A. some time ago to bear public witness against the evils of gambling, intemperance, and impurity, three meetings have been arranged by a special committee to be held in Queen's Hall, Langham-place, on December 14-16, when addresses will be given to men on these subjects. It is hoped that other meetings may be arranged for in different parts of London. Those who can help in the conduct of the meetings as singers, canvassers, or stewards are asked to communicate with the organising secretary, Mr. F. L. Porter, 275, Mare-street, London, N.E.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, October 24.

"Thus saith the Lord God: Behold, I will raise up thy lovers against thee, and I will bring them against thee on every side."—Ez. xxiii. 22.

IT is one sign of the revolution that the teaching of Jesus has made, that the imagery of this chapter is foreign to our modes of thought.

Spiritual unfaithfulness is constantly described under metaphors borrowed from the marriage relationship. If the soul wanders from God, He is depicted as the husband in whose heart the fire of jealousy burns, while the soul is compared to a truant wife. In the text quoted above, the analogy is followed still further, and the prophet asserts that it is impossible for us to be always satisfied with the lovers that we have chosen, and our chastisement for wandering will probably come through their agency.

There is no lack of practical illustration of this. If a Christian choose worldly prosperity, or his own reputation, or any earthly object apart from God, it is through this that he will suffer. The things that he has loved will be raised up against him, just as Israel, that had dallied with Babylon, was carried into captivity to Babylon. Of sinful and forbidden pleasure, God will make whips of scorpions by which to drive us back to Himself.

MONDAY, October 25.

"So I spake unto the people in the morning: and at even my wife died; and I did in the morning as I was commanded."—Ez. xxiv. 18.

It was a sudden stroke which befel the prophet's home. In the morning the desire of his eyes was present to care for him, and in the even she had passed away. It is the practice of the Eastern mourner to give vent to heart-rending cries; in his case these were forbidden. He might sigh, but not aloud (R.V.). There was to be no mourning for the dead, neither tears, nor fasting, because his work was to engross him; the needs of the people preponderated over personal anguish; and he was called to set forth in his own reticence the solemn, tearless anguish with which Israel would go into captivity.

We are reminded of the words of the Apostle in 1 Cor. vii., that those who had wives should be as though they had none, those that wept as though they wept not, because the time was short, and the fashion of the world was passing away.

In every human experience there are times when the personal must be subordinated to the national and universal. We must choke back our sobs, crush down our almost uncontrollable emotion, preserve a calm and tranquil exterior, that we may devote ourselves more earnestly and continuously to the crying need of others. There is nothing nobler than the self-restraint which anoints the head and washes the face, that it may have leisure from itself to do its life-work, and to press to its bosom those who are suffering around. There was an illustration of this in a recent railway accident, when a little girl, badly hurt, insisted on the helpers caring for others first.

TUESDAY, October 26.

"Thus saith the Lord God: Because that Moab and Seir do say, Behold, the house of Judah is like unto all the nations, therefore behold."—Ez. xxv. 8, 9.

As their enemies behold the children of God, they are apt to suppose that there is no difference between them and others. They cannot see the Divine environment within which they live, and they suppose that they can easily work their will. They say, Behold these people are like other people, we have but to stretch out our hand, and can spoil them as a boy the nests of spring. Then they discover that they have another to reckon with, and that God will arise to plead the cause of his people and to execute judgment upon their oppressors. Not in vain did He say to Abraham and through him to all that believe: "I will bless him that blesseth thee, and curse him that curseth thee:" "no weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper, and every tongue that shall rise in judgment against thee thou shalt condemn."

We must not presume on this. Strong as God is on our behalf towards our enemies, He is equally so within the circle of his household. He will not let others hurt us, but He will not spare his children. He may use others as his rod, just as at certain epochs of their national history, He used Moab or Edom. But when the work of refining is done, He will lay the instruments aside, and even punish, if there has been an excess of malice. O child of God, thy privilege and responsibility are immeasurable. Thou art not as others.

WEDNESDAY, October 27.

"Though thou be sought for, yet thou shalt never be found again, saith the Lord God."—Ez. xxvi. 21.

Tyre, to the world of her age, was what Venice was in the Middle Ages, and London to-day. She was strong in the sea; the carrying trade of the world was in her hands. Carthage, which was able to conflict with Rome, was her daughter, and the coasts of Cornwall were visited by her merchant vessels. In the days of Ezekiel she was a proud and populous city. But the prophet predicted her approaching fall. Her songs would cease, her walls would be overwhelmed in the floods of armed men, and the rocks on which she stood would be as bare as before a fisherman's hut was built on them. And as the prophet anticipates the future, he says that her site would be sought in vain, a prediction so literally fulfilled that it is only of late years that careful research has been able to pronounce where Tyre stood.

What a contrast to this are the words of Jeremiah (l. 20): "In those days the iniquity of Israel shall be sought for, and there shall be none, and the sins of Judah and they shall not be found." Refuse the love of God, and you are doomed; you will leave no enduring record. Trust in Him, and your sins will be blotted out as if they had never been, whilst you will be had in everlasting remembrance, and your name shall be engraven for evermore on the palms of God's hands.

THURSDAY, October 28.

"Thy rowers have brought thee into great waters: the east wind has broken thee in the heart of the seas."—Ez. xxvii. 26.

In this splendid chapter the prophet describes Tyre under the image of one of her own merchant vessels. We can almost hear the noise of her construction in the earlier verses, and see fine linen hoisted as her sail, whilst she is manned and piloted by her statesmen. Heavily laden with the choice merchandise of the East she sails the seas, independent of the winds of heaven, because the galley slaves toil at treble banks of oars on either side. But their rowing brings her into great waters, she encounters the east wind, which breaks her in the heart of the sea, and in one day pilots, rowers, men of war, and merchandise are lost, all brought to silence in the midst of the sea. What a powerful conception of the great ship sinking in silence with all on board! One cry, the waves meet over her, and only a floating spar tells where she sank.

So is it with many a life. The whole world is laid under contribution for its outfit. Bashan, Chittim, Egypt, bring their quota, and to all appearance, as it glides from its stocks upon the sea of life, a fair voyage awaits it, and large exchange of the wares of human industry and thought. But where Christ is not the Pilot, and his Word not the chart, the rowers bring it into great waters, and it is broken by the east wind. O mariner! see to it that Christ is on board, for He only can still the tempest and speak peace, and guide thee out of the great waters.

FRIDAY, October 29.

"Thou sealest up the sum, full of wisdom, and perfect in beauty."—Ez. xxviii. 12.

The magnificent words of this chapter cannot be applicable merely to Tyre. Behind that mighty city the prophet beheld its Prince, the anointed cherub that covereth (Ez. xxviii. 14); and on further investigation this can only be the prince of the power of the air, who, our Lord says, is also the prince of this world. When he was created he was perfect in his ways, till unrighteousness was found in him (15). But he was cast out of heaven, when his heart was lifted up (17). He said, I am God, but as he met in conflict the Son of Man, he learnt his absolute inferiority.

All through this chapter runs the contrast between the fallen cherub, the patron saint of Zidon, and Jehovah the God of Israel. In the collision between these two, the might of the devil was shown to be a shadow, and his votaries were ashamed and astonished at his impotence to defend them. For us there is blessed significance in this subject. Greater is He that is for us, than he that is against us. The second Adam hath stood in the conflict in which the first Adam fell. The accuser of the brethren is cast out, and we, standing in the risen Christ, can possess our souls in peace; he can never snatch us from our Shepherd's hand.

SATURDAY, October 30.

"I have given him the land of Egypt as his recompense for which he served, because they wrought for Me, said the Lord God."—Ez. xxix. 20 (R.V.).

The king of Babylon was sent against Tyre. The siege lasted long, and his army suffered great privations. Scorching heat above, and the heavy burdens on their shoulders, made every head bald and every shoulder peeled. For this great service he was to be recompensed with the gift of the land of Egypt, because he had wrought God's purpose. This suggests to us the thought, that though we do not merit anything of God by our service, yet He does not forget our work of faith and labour of love when it is wrought for Him. If He gave Egypt to a heathen king for his service in respect to Tyre, we may also expect Him to bestow a reward on those who have built gold, silver, and precious stones into his holy temple. The servant who has made his five talents into ten shall be rewarded with ten cities. Those who have watched and waited through the long night shall be rewarded with special honour in the bridal feast. God will give to us some guerdon for our toils, some prize for our conflict, some token of his favour, which will be all of grace and yet proportionate to the work wrought for Him.

Armenia.—A correspondent writes: "The ladies of the Armenian Work Party in Great Yarmouth have been stimulated to further effort on behalf of this oppressed country by a visit for the second time from Rev. Krikor Behesnilian. The hopeful view he takes of Armenia is most exhilarating to those who have still a yearning desire to do something towards the relief of hundreds of widows and orphans."

A Missionary Conference.

EXETER HALL, OCTOBER 13-15.

THE foreign missionary interest shown by the Y.M.C.A. of late years has been very marked. The Association has given an additional proof of its zeal in this direction by arranging the three days' Missionary Convention held at Exeter Hall last week. A comprehensive programme was prepared, embracing the best known mission centres throughout "the regions beyond"; an attender at the whole series of meetings had brought under review the complete field of worldwide operation, broadly speaking. The Conference and its conveners are to be congratulated, on the whole, upon the array of speakers provided; their utterances were the outcome of experience, greater or less, and their accounts of work, of progress achieved, and of existing needs were impressive in the extreme. Everybody must have felt the truth of the words of one missionary brother from India, who said, "It is a glorious thing to think that men and women can be gathered in this great city to study God's work in the world. It is one of the most beautiful things in English life that people so readily come to listen to the story of the Gospel spreading throughout the world."

The programme for each day was full enough to satisfy the most omnivorous appetite. There were two prayer meetings, two conference meetings, and a more public gathering in the evening; the last of the evening assemblies was specially for young men, whom it is desired to interest personally and influentially in the great cause of modern missions.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 13.

The opening meeting of the Convention at 10 this morning was presided over by Mr. J. E. Mathieson, and was mainly devoted to praise and prayer. A number of friends gave expression to the spirit of thankfulness to God for the wonders He has wrought, through the proclamation of his Gospel, during the past century. Prayer was also made for those now in the forefront of the missionary enterprise, and for the masses of heathen among whom they live and labour. A brief address on the growth of missionary interest in India and the solidarity of the work in that great empire was given by a veteran in the service, Rev. Isaac Allen, of the Baptist Missionary Society.

CENTRAL AFRICA

was the section of the field considered at the first conference meeting, at 11, under the chairmanship of Mr. T. A. Denny. Perhaps the latest born of the notable fields of missionary effort, the centre of the once "Dark Continent," has already furnished a history of Christian toil and triumph not surpassed in tragic and thrilling interest by any spot on the surface of the globe.

"THE MARVEL OF MODERN MISSIONS"

was the phrase applied to the work in Uganda by the first speaker, Rev. E. Millar, of the C.M.S., who has been at work in Mwanga's land for five years. The contrast he drew between ten years ago and now was wonderful. He attributed the change, in the first place, to the inherent power of the Bible. The French Roman Catholic missionaries were compelled to give their people portions of the Scriptures; if they had not done so the natives would have got them from the Protestants. But what they have given is a great mixture of truth and error. The devotion of the converts to Bible study in season and out of season is very remarkable. One great and encouraging feature of the Uganda work is the eagerness of the native Christians to evangelise their own people. The speaker described the recent movement in Uganda for the deepening of spiritual life, which is resulting in great extensions of the work. There are some 400 native pastors and evangelists supported by the churches in Uganda, and not by European funds. One of the most ardent helpers is the Prime Minister of the country. The devotion of the native Christians, altogether, is enough to put us English Christians to shame. Mr. Millar heartily acknowledged the great help that the C.M.S. had received from the gifts of the British and Foreign Bible Society. Notwithstanding all that has been done, ninety per cent. of the people are still heathen, and there is great need for more workers in this promising field.

Rev. E. Millar, C.M.S.

Rev. Henry Haigh, W.M.S.

LIVINGSTONE'S LAND,

or the Tanganyika region, was represented by the next speaker, Rev. W. D. Purvis, of the L.M.S. He, too, had to tell of much progress in different directions, and of some gratifying results, though his story had not the overwhelming interest of the preceding speaker's. For the first ten years the work at Tanganyika did not show much fruit, but the patient labours of the missionaries at the south end of the lake, especially in the department of industrial training, are being rewarded. As yet, however, it is the day of small things in transformed lives. Caution is used in admitting professed converts to church fellowship till good proof is shown of actual conversion. Mr. Purvis made the excellent suggestion that the best memorial to Dr. Livingstone would be the planting of a new missionary station at the great explorer's last resting-place before his remains were removed to England.

The Chairman at this point read some touching extracts from the pen of Miss Lucy Guinness with respect to the death of Livingstone. He also referred to a publication by the C.M.S., "Central Africa for Christ," which gives some striking statistics of the progress of Gospel work in Uganda.

THE MIGHTY CONGO.

Since the programme of the Convention was prepared, death has removed at least one of the proposed speakers. Some ten days before the meeting, Mr. T. W. Randall, who was to have represented the Congo-Balolo Mission, was taken away. His place was taken by Mr. Hayes, of the same mission, and a powerfully interesting story he had to tell. He excited some amused surprise by relating instances of the deep ignorance of the great Congo region that still lingers in this enlightened England. One clergyman inquired if the Congo, the second largest river in the world, was "a strip of land"! Mr. Hayes traced the rise and growth of missionary effort along the Lower Congo, past Stanley Pool, and on to the Upper since the time of Stanley's first African expedition.

In the region that he described there are some sixty millions of people, who up to that time had been in utter ignorance of Jesus Christ and his salvation. On the Lower Congo there are a number of mission stations with a membership of over 1700 converts. Many have been trained by the missionaries and sent forth as workers at the charges of the native churches. Some of them have met martyrdom, and others are willing to lay down their lives for Christ. The printing press is at work, and also the typewriter, and these are utilised by trained and capable natives. Mr. Hayes described some very saddening scenes which had occurred at Stanley Pool resulting from the importation of liquor. Through the action of the King of the Belgians, restrictions are now placed on this evil traffic. He had also some very interesting things to relate concerning the work on the Upper Congo, where the Congo-Balolo Mission operates. There have been many difficulties, but the work is being consolidated. Though an undenominational mission the Congo-Balolo work is helped by friends attached to other societies; all sectarian differences are sunk in the face of the opposing heathenism. The speaker was personally able to confirm, to some extent, the reports of official atrocities on the Congo which have been published of late. He told of cases of cruel mutilation and murder, by soldiers, of natives who were accused of not meeting the views of the traders. The people are not always able to discriminate as to the guilty parties, and so hindrances are sometimes placed in the way of the missionaries. On the Upper Congo there are some ten millions of people living in grossest cannibalism. Many are weary of the evils that obtain there, and long to know of the power that will enable them to overcome sin. Four stations on the Upper Congo have each a flourishing native church. Mr. Hayes gave some particulars as to the trials of a missionary life, in that unhealthy region, from recurring fevers, and closed a deeply impressive address by entreating prayer and help on behalf of the work o scattering Gospel light in the centre of the Dark Continent.

BIBLE DISTRIBUTION.

The closing address of the forenoon was by Rev. J. G. Watt, one of the secretaries of the Bible Society. He gave many encouraging statistics as to the growth of Bible distribution in African languages, and of the immense value of this work as an indispensable auxiliary to missionary enterprise and effort. Other societies, having a share in this good work, were mentioned. It is a portentous fact that at the present time, including the Dutch, English, and Arabic versions, there are a grand total of 101 different tongues spoken in the continent of Africa, in which the Scriptures can be read and studied, in whole or in part. The story of Bible triumphs is only beginning; who can say what it will grow to in the years to come?

THE WOMEN OF INDIA.

The usual midday prayer meeting from 1 to 2 was, for the Conference days, invested with a missionary interest. On Wednesday the condition of the women of India was the main theme for prayer and address. Mr. Henry Conder, late of Bombay, who presided, was able to testify from personal knowledge to the fidelity of missionaries in India, who faithfully and arduously toil on in a most trying climate. Among the teeming millions of India there are great numbers who are Christian believers at heart, who may not have openly confessed Him in baptism. Zenana missions in India are accomplishing blessed results among the women of the country.

A short statement followed from Hon. Gertrude Kinnaird, who recently visited India. Every society, she said, that is doing zenana work in India is taxed to the utmost. We ought, as English Christians, to strain every nerve to bring our Indian fellow-subjects under the influence of the Gospel. Open doors are increasing in all directions for the extension of educational, medical, visitation, and school work. It is of primary importance to get hold of the women in the homes; many of them are realising their power, and they are desiring a share of Western education. The benefits of medical work in the dispensaries and hospitals are unspeakable; it is a reproduction of the work on earth of Christ Himself. Miss Kinnaird referred to the special opportunity that now exists for getting Christian influence over the people by caring for the vast number of famine orphans and other sufferers through the calamities that have fallen on the country. Almost unlimited funds could be well used in these directions. The distress during the next winter will be great and widespread, so that fresh helpers and increased resources will be needed.

THE NEEDS OF INDIA

were considered more in detail at the afternoon conference, when Mr. Gurney Sheppard presided. The first to claim the sympathies of the audience was Rev. T. R. Wade, a C.M.S. missionary in the Punjaub of thirty-four years' standing. He was very emphatic on the special duty we owe to India. The earlier rulers of that country, as represented by British power, were not favourable to the spread of Christianity; but neither Companies nor Government officials can stop the flow of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Speaking particularly of the work done by the C.M.S., and the progress made, Mr. Wade said that last year's report showed 192 mission stations, 168 English missionaries, over 3000 native workers, more than 127,000 converts, and some more 54,000 scholars in the schools. Last year, on an average, there were six adults baptized every day in the year in connection with the C.M.S. missions. Despite all that has been done it is a solemn fact that the natural increase each year of heathen and Mohammedans is more than all the Christians in the land put together. God has been speaking loudly to us about India this year through famine, plague, earthquake, and war.

As to the Punjaub, Mr. Wade observed that it is a country quite unique with respect to its position, its history, and the character of its inhabitants. It is the borderland, and therefore the great battle-ground of India. Happily the governing men of the Punjaub have been enlightened Christian men, and who have liberally favoured and supported Missions. There are twenty-two large C.M.S. stations in the country, each of them a centre of active work. In the years between 1881 and 1890 in connection with all the societies at work the increase in the number of professed Christians was more than fourfold. The Punjaub is the finest field of work among Mohammedans in the whole world. There have been many baptisms, some of the cases being truly remarkable. There is an open door also for work among the Sikhs. There are the promise and pledge of a rich harvest in the future. How is it that there are so few volunteers in the army of Jesus Christ?

MEDICAL MISSIONS.

An excellent report of medical mission work was given by Miss Penny, of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, working in the sacred city of Benares, the headquarters of Hinduism. Whoever dies within a ten miles radius of the city is supposed to be certain of eternal salvation, whatever their life may have been. The city is wholly given to idolatry, having 1400 Hindu temples. The work of the Zenana Mission is threefold—the school for girls, the zenana work, and the medical work. Of these varied operations Miss Penny gave interesting and encouraging details. She quoted the saying of a patient, "Whoever comes to this hospital goes away laughing." The hospital accommodation was recently much enlarged to meet the demands on it. Some pathetic instances were recorded of the way in which the people's hearts are reached through the medical relief given.

EDUCATIONAL WORK

among Indian students was very ably represented by Rev. Isaac Allen, of the Baptist Missionary Society. Surely there could be no more important sphere of Christian effort in a land like India than getting into touch with the educated youth and impressing them with the sanctions of the Gospel. As boys they are under the influence of the zenana, but when they enter college they can be surrounded with higher and better influences, where their inmost convictions can have full scope. There are among them many modern Nicodemuses, who desire to have a quiet talk about soul matters. The great goal before these educated youths is a Government appointment, and if they fail in this they too often settle down into sedition-mongers through the native press. How vastly important that they should be influenced in right directions. They imitate Western methods and imbibe Western ideas; the only way to preserve them from the contaminations of scepticism is to lead them to the feet of Jesus.

WORK IN TRAVANCORE.

One of the most attractive and telling addresses of the first day's conference was that by Rev. I. H. Hacker, of the L.M.S., who has worked for twenty years in Travancore, the native State in Southern India. Mission work was begun there in 1809, and nine years afterwards the first missionary left, reporting the existence of a few Christians whom he described as "a ragged lot." Now, two-thirds of the whole State as embraced in the operations of large stations with 324 churches, 60,000 native Christians, besides many schools and colleges medical mission, zenana mission, etc. The little "ragged lot" has become a great power in the land. Some convincing proofs were given by the speaker on the influence of the Christians on the population around. The poorer classes have been elevated and brought to know that in Christ they are as important as the wealthier members of society. Mr. Hacker told of a low caste boy of much ability who passed with distinction through a college career and was appointed a sub-judge. As a magistrate he had the power of sentencing any high-caste Brahmin who broke the law. The growing influence of Christian sentiment brought about a change in the social arrangements which closed the courts on the Sabbath and so released many from work on the Day of Rest. As to the power of the Gospel in individual cases, some delightful examples were given by the speaker, whose recital on the whole was deeply encouraging.

INDIAN LEPERS.

The cause of these afflicted outcasts, of whom there are many in India, was ably pleaded by Mr. John Jackson. He spoke of the wide extent of the field, of the greatness of the need, of the help rendered by the Mission to Lepers both physically and spiritually. No class needs more the consolations of the Gospel message, and they receive it readily. There have been many baptisms—there were over 140 in one day in July of this year. Mr. Jackson earnestly appealed for larger support for this work, which is carried on in connection with different societies, as well as by the mission independently.

The remaining addresses of the afternoon were by Rev. S. W. Organe, working in India on behalf of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and Mr.

W. R. Arbuthnot, of Madras, on the Student Volunteer Movement. The former had a most gratifying account to give of the increase of the Bible work in India, and the priceless service thus rendered to all the Missions. The latter went over what is now somewhat familiar ground, in describing the remarkable results of Mr. Mott's visit to India in the beginning of last year, and the conferences held among students in the larger cities. The work has gone on during the present year, and there is now a college department in connection with the work of the Y.M.C.A.

EVENING MEETING.

The attendances during the day and in the evening were not so large as might reasonably have been expected from the importance of the subject. This may be accounted for partly by the absence of many friends from town at this season, and partly from the fact that autumn conferences with a missionary bearing are now numerous throughout the country. On Tuesday evening Col. R. Williams, M.P., presided, and briefly urged that it was the bounden duty of every Christian to be a missionary either at home or abroad.

GOSPEL TRIUMPHS.

An address by Dr. T. Bowman Stephenson gave some vivid glimpses of missionary work as he had seen it when visiting different parts of the world. He warmly combated the surmises and suspicions sometimes expressed, even in Christian circles, as to the character of missionary work. He regarded these views as entirely groundless, and contended that in the matter of ability, devotion and zeal, missionaries, as a whole, are quite equal to brethren at home; in many cases they are men of even greater devotion, because in the nature of the case they have to make larger sacrifices and to wage a fiercer war than we have in professedly Christian lands. As one instance of the power of the Gospel, Dr. Stephenson told of a good work he had witnessed going on among South Africans in a native congregation at Port Elizabeth, to whom he spoke by interpretation. Some of those attending the church come from far distant inland parts, and these are ever and anon returning to their own homes to communicate the blessing they have received. Another instance of the power of the Gospel to uplift and to redeem was drawn from the history of an Indian tribe in North America. At one time the whole of the people had been Roman Catholic. In an evil hour for them, however, they sent a son of the chief to Montreal to be educated. There he learned to know and study the New Testament in the Greek. This opened his eyes to the nature of the Roman Catholic teaching. He went back to his tribe not to be a Romish priest, as was intended, but to preach the simple Gospel to his countrymen, which he did with great success. Thus the Gospel of Jesus Christ wins its way where it has free course, and triumphs over all kinds of error, superstition, and heathenism.

A TRAVELLER'S PLEA.

The second and closing address of the evening was by the illustrious traveller, Mrs. Bishop. She was allotted some forty minutes, and not a moment of it was wasted. Her powerful presentation of the facts drawn from her own experience in different parts of the heathen world was, of course, largely a repetition of what she has said on former occasions during the present year. To those who heard it for the first time nothing could have been more impressive and thrilling. For seven and a-half years, she said, she had travelled in Asia, and for the last three years and a-half in far Eastern Asia, including China, Korea, Siberia, and Japan. In all these lands she had seen false religions holding sway over men and women, but the good things she started to look for she never found. Everywhere the people were living in a darkness that might be felt, with one or two here and there groping their way towards the light. Like the preceding speaker, Mrs. Bishop paid an earnest tribute to the great and noble work that missionary workers are doing in these dark lands. She drew special attention to the wholesome and uplifting influences that come from the Christian home life of these workers, an aspect of things not often referred to in missionary reports. The marvellous contrast between the missionary's treatment of the natives and that which is shown by their own people greatly impresses them. The gloom and misery of these Christless heathen communities, as sketched by the speaker, formed a very sad and depressing picture. The terrible degradation and suffering of women was one specially black element in it. There is no ray of hope for the world except through the reception of Christ's Gospel. When we look on the awful area of the dense darkness, we get some perception of the vastness of the need for missionary work. It is estimated that eight hundred millions of the human race are still sunk in the deepest darkness and degradation. The spiritual condition of the great Mohammedan world was referred to as showing the tremendous responsibilities for their evangelisation that rest on the Church of Christ. The contrast between the light in which we live and the darkness that surrounds them is an unanswerable plea for missionary effort.

Mrs. Bishop addressed to the young men of the Y.M.C.A. some pathetic messages as to the privilege of devoting their lives to this grand work of world-wide evangelisation. She maintained that those who would hope to be successful as missionaries must be moved not merely by love to Christ, but with enthusiasm for poor, blighted, suffering humanity. The blessed work of the medical missionary in physical healing as well as in ministering special consolation was impressively descanted upon. It is most needful that fresh workers should go forth, not merely in ones and twos, but in groups. Surely the heroic ages of the Christian faith have not passed away. In her closing words Mrs. Bishop repeated her solemn protest against the increased luxury and self-pleasing which, in her view, have been pervading the lives even of Christian people since she went on her last extended tour. She pathetically pleaded for a revision and readjustment of individual, family, and social expenditure in the face of the overwhelming spiritual and physical necessities of the perishing heathen world.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 14.

The early meeting, presided over by Colonel MacGregor, C.B., was devoted to praise and prayer for the committees and officers of missionary societies, those engaged in the training of students for the mission field, also for candidates in training, missionaries on furlough, and the families of missionaries. The attendance was small, but a spirit of earnest petition was given. The latter part of the meeting was devoted to an address by Rev. F. B. Meyer on the positive force which prayer exercises in the world. Taking James v. 14 as a text, he remarked that we are apt to look too much upon prayer as being a request from God, without realising sufficiently that prayer exercises upon the nature of God, and, through God, upon the whole world. Evil spirits are behind the darkness and wickedness of earth; and nothing but spiritual forces can cope with them. Consequently, quite as much may be done by spiritual men prevailing with God in prayer as could be done by an exposure of the sophistry of evil, or holding controversy by reason with the powers of darkness. Spiritual force will win the world for God; hence missionaries must be spiritual men, and those who train and send them forth must be the same. There is, therefore, a deep necessity to stir up the spirit of prayer everywhere, so that the equipoise between good and evil may be broken by the great exercise of power by God. By the earnest prayer of a bedridden soul, the scale may be turned, the battle turned at the gate, and missionaries may be cheered to see great results of their endeavours. "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much in its working." The force generated in one holy soul in communion with God may be transmuted through God into great success attending the preaching of the Gospel in distant parts of the earth.

THE POTENT FORCE

CHINA AND JAPAN.

The morning session was concerned with the progress of the Gospel in China and Japan. The chair was occupied by Mr. Robert Scott, who read a portion of Isa. xlix., emphasising the expressions used in prophetic description of Christ. The first speaker was Archdeacon Warren, of the Church Missionary Society, who spoke with much vigour and interest of work in Japan. He held that the present condition of things in the Island Empire of the East is a distinct answer to prayer, and looked forward with much hopefulness to future developments. He had no doubt that in the course of two years Japan will be on the same footing as Britain in the matter of freedom, so that we shall have the same liberty there as the Japanese may use in this country. Outlining the story of the mission from Mr. Ensor's landing at Nagasaki in 1869, when edicts against Christianity were still displayed on the notice boards, the speaker alluded to early efforts, of necessity confined to the treaty ports, and dwelt upon the great advance made during the episcopate of Dr. Bickersteth, whose death, quite recently, is still being mourned. When the Bishop entered upon the work there were twenty-five European workers, twelve of them women; now there are ninety workers, fifty-nine of them women, including the wives of missionaries. The extension that has attended the increase of labourers has led to the occupation of twenty stations in the place of four, the new stations being in the interior.

Though indisposed to overlook the work of other societies in the empire, the Archdeacon confined himself to the expansion of the C.M.S., mentioning among the distinctive efforts of the Society that among the Ainus of Hokkaido. Another feature of the Society's work is the employment on a considerable scale of lady missionaries. Passing on to consider the importance of native agency, the Archdeacon remarked that the foreign missionary can only be expected to begin the work, leaving its continuance to Christ-loving hearts gathered out from among the people. Eleven years ago the Mission in Japan had about sixteen native workers—fourteen men and two women; to-day there are about 150, of whom ten have been ordained to ministerial work. Though in many cases the first impulse towards Christianity was intellectual, these men have found the personal Christ, and of Him they talk at their conferences, and for Him they work day by day, in private as well as in public, among young and old of all classes of society. With abounding opportunities, however, there are many adversaries, who meet the work at many points and in various forms. In conclusion, the speaker referred to the recent testing-time, resulting from the introduction of false teaching followed by the war fever. The churches have been sifted, but God is doing a great work in the Empire.

PREACHING IN HANKOW.

Rev. Arnold Foster, of Hankow, the well-known worker in connection with the London Missionary Society, followed with a forcible and deeply interesting account of Christian methods and Gospel successes in Mid-China. After depicting life in populous centres of the Flowery Land, he dwelt upon the work in which he is personally engaged, in conjunction with Dr. Griffith John, and in fellowship with the agents of other societies in Hankow. First of all, he endeavoured to realise the meaning of the words "mission work," showing them to imply a great round of endeavour—evangelistic and educational, medical and social. Proceeding, he confined himself to the work of preaching, which can take no second place in relation to any effort, but may be regarded as in front of them all, with the exception, perhaps, of the work of translating the Sacred Scriptures.

Speaking first of "How we preach," Mr. Arnold Foster explained that it is in a simple manner, sometimes in the open air or market place, but daily in a chapel, which is thronged throughout the day. One set of hearers constantly succeeds another from among the thousands who, from all parts, visit the city for the purposes of trade, as well as from residents as they pass to and from their work. For hours together the preaching goes on and the people listen. Hankow has a population of about 800,000; it is in the centre of the empire, and 600 miles from Shanghai. The preaching is in a dialect which is understood by about four-fifths of the Chinese people. The native evangelists who engage in the work are some of them the finest men he had ever met. One of them, after rendering good service while engaged in his ordinary business, was made a colporteur, and afterwards a preacher. About a year-and-a-half ago he had the offer of a censorship in Pekin, a post which would assure him a lawful income ten or twelve times as large as he was receiving as a preacher, to say nothing of the possibility of doubling the same by unlawful means. He declined the offer, and in explanation said; "I read that Matthew left the customs to follow Jesus; I am not going to leave Jesus to follow the customs."

Proceeding, Mr. Arnold Foster answered the question, "What do we preach?" The Apostle reminded the Thessalonians that they turned from dead idols to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son. So the missionary in China preaches a living God and a judgment to come—salvation by Jesus Christ, our Saviour and our Judge. This preaching has to be presented in many forms, and the worker rejoices in its power to awaken the consciences of men. Speaking of the many moral and religious questions that have to be dealt with, the speaker said that among the Chinese one expression characterises all vices. If they want to say that a man has gone utterly to the bad, they say, "licentiousness, gambling, and opium." If they would imply that he has "gone to the devil," it is that the man has become an opium-smoker. On the experience of many years, he declared opium to be one of the greatest curses that China has to deal with. Concluding with some words on "The Results of Preaching," the speaker ranged them under two heads—gathering converts into church life and work, and educating the people in the highest things.

THE RULING CLASSES OF CHINA.

Rev. W. T. A. Barber, of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, spoke of the place and influence of the Chinese ruling classes. For ages the men who can write the best essays on the doctrines of Confucius have had ruling power and influence in China. The mandarins are the men who know most of the sacred books. These books constitute a moral system, and set forth the duty of man to man, subject to emperor, husband to wife, etc. The men who know the books are convinced that they know everything that is worth knowing in the world. The mandarin is a perfect type of the Pharisee; and as Confucius takes no account of a future life, the Chinese literary man also represents the spirit of the Sadducee in the days of Christ. The "barbarian" foreigner can neither supplement nor correct the Confucian system, and the mandarin looks upon him with scorn. It is the rule for such men to make dishonest gain; hence it is impossible for them to become Christians, not to mention that acts incompatible with a Christian profession are imposed upon him. The speaker mentioned the revolt of the literary men of China against the introduction of Western progress; also their wicked caricatures of Christ, and travesty of the Gospel. Yet there are movements for reform among these men, and as Western ideas are entertained a great change may be looked for. Individually cases have been known of mandarins giving up position and rank for the sake of Christ. There never was a time when Chinese missionaries were so full of hope regarding work at the inmost citadel of the Chinese system.

PROGRESS IN CHINA.

Rev. E. C. Smyth, of the Baptist Missionary Society, who for nine years has laboured in North China, with Choup'ing as a centre, was able to report encouraging progress, after much prayer and toil, and many tears. At the present time there are 180 stations, and nearly 2000 baptized converts. The people are taught orally and by books; a catechism being used to instil the elements of Christian truth into their minds. Not all who can repeat Scripture texts are received; character is required on the part of those who are accepted as Christian disciples. The speaker described a visit to a neighbouring village to inquire regarding a candidate for baptism. As is the way in China, all manner of topics are discussed, and then in the most informal way "just one other little matter" is mentioned. "Yes," is the reply, "he is reading the Jesus doctrine; he hums something as he goes about his business (singing); he falls on his knees sometimes, and with his eyes closed, mutters something (praying); we think he is not quite right in his head." "Does he smoke opium?" "No." "He used to beat his wife; how does he behave at home now?" "Oh, he is kind to his wife, and his children are fond of him." Further inquiries disclose that the man's friends "lead him a bad time"; but he is meek and gentle. Such men are baptized, and they stand fire and water in the way of persecution.

In illustrating this, Mr. Smyth told the story of a man who, because he would not subscribe his pence towards the maintenance of heathen worship, was lashed to a tree and beaten until the blood flowed; of another man, whose house was set on fire and his goods destroyed, his name being then removed from the ancestral tablets, and himself boycotted by his relatives and friends. If we had more persecution at home, we should have more character. The poor Buddhists in China would not recognise their system in "The Light of Asia." Buddhism is extinction, annihilation, loss of personal consciousness. Confucianism is morality, ancestral worship—a message for this world, but not for the world to come. Mohammedanism, like both of them, lacks a Saviour. Confucianism is the worship of a code of morals; Buddhism is a philosophy; Christianity is belief in a personal Saviour. Him the missionaries preach, and with the help of God the Chinese will receive Him.

MR. C. T. STUDD, of the China Inland Mission, told of a Chinese convert who "being reviled, reviled not again." Thereupon he overheard his mother tell his wife that it was they (not the man) who were bad, for all the bad words came from their mouths! Both women were so impressed that they placed themselves under instruction and became true Christians. Having emphasised the urgency of Christian workers fighting the devil and not each other, the speaker dwelt on the need of the power of the Spirit in work for Christ. Only by thus laying ourselves out shall we succeed. In illustration, Mr. Studd told the story of a soldier who inquired of a general the secret of promotion. The answer was—"Try and get yourself killed on every possible occasion, and then you will be promoted one way or the other."

MR. B. BROOMHALL

followed with two facts on the opium evil* in China. (1) During every hour of the sixty years of the Queen's reign, reckoning day and night, an average of half a ton of opium has been exported from India, most of it going to China. What that means of sorrow and desolation no living man can describe. (2) The money derived from that export during fifty-eight years (the returns of the last two are not yet made up) amounted to £254,000,000—more than one-third of the National Debt. That money is the price of blood. China does not need an ounce of India's opium; sad fact, she grows too much herself. It is time for the Christian people of England to speak out that the export shall stop, so that we shall no longer promote the demoralisation of the millions of China.

At the afternoon prayer-meeting, Miss Mary Bailey, hon. sec. of the British Syrian Mission gave an account of work in the Lebanon region, During recent years the Mission has expanded greatly, especially in the villages, the population of which are in great spiritual darkness.

NORTH AMERICAN INDIANS.

In the afternoon the chair was occupied by Mr. Henry Morris, who, in the course of a thoughtful address, justified controversy in dealing with Roman Catholics and others, but maintained that it should be carried on, not to score a victory, but in a spirit of love and gentleness. The first missionary speaker was Rev. F. Swainson, who has been labouring for eight years among the Red Indians of North-west America. It was a painful tale. The red men in their millions have fallen victims of scrofula, small-pox, whisky, and the gun, introduced by the white man. Whereas 250 years ago the land teemed with a red population, now there are less than a million of these interesting people left. Having fallen before the curses of civilisation, they have a strong claim upon us for its blessings along with the Gospel of Christ.

Rev. J. H. Edwards, of the Moravian Missions, alluded to interesting work in Greenland, Labrador, and Alaska, and dwelt in some detail upon the work on

THE MOSQUITO COAST.

As this region of Central America has lately passed under the rule of the Roman Catholic Republic of Nicaragua, there is considerable difficulty attending operations at the present time.

THE "NEGLECTED CONTINENT."

Mr. W. Case Morris, of the South American Missionary Society, spoke of the forward movement in which he hopes soon to engage among Roman Catholics of "the Neglected Continent." The way is open as never before for Gospel preaching, pursued with tact and judgment. More than that, in some of the republics facilities are given for the distribution of the Scriptures, and there is an inquiring spirit abroad among the people. Whereas Rome has taught that God hates his creatures, the Mission will preach the Gospel of God's love in Christ. As the Jesuitical power is being broken, the opportunity is very great.

INDIANS OF SOUTH AMERICA.

Mr. Andrew Pride, who for eight years has laboured in the Paraguayan Chaco, under the auspices of the South American Missionary Society, described pioneer work among the Indians of that region. They number about two millions, and live a nomadic life of great simplicity, having so far been quite untouched by civilising influences. The Gospel is steadily making an impression upon the people.

JEWS AND THE GOSPEL.

Rev. S. T. Bachert, of the London Jews Society, in the course of an earnest address, deplored the religious ignorance of the bulk of the Jewish people, particularly the women, who have been sadly neglected. Replying to the insinuation that Jews are not really converted to Christianity, the speaker did not confine himself to the statement that Christianity arose in the bosom of Judaism, and that the Apostles, who were of the same race, witnessed unto blood. He told the story of a high-born youth of Hamburg, who confessed Christ at the terrible cost of being abandoned by his parents and driven to an early grave.

Mr. Henry Riddings, who for many years has lived in Chili, and travelled in all parts of South Africa, related in few words the story of Emilio Olsson and his Christian Alliance enterprise in the "Neglected Continent."

The evening meeting was presided over by Mr. F. W. Lawrence. Three addresses, all of them instructive and stimulating, were delivered. The first was by Rev. H. E. Fox, hon. sec. of the C.M.S., whose points,

AXIOMATIC TRUTHS OF THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION, were: (1) The stupendous possibilities of a single human soul; (2) the power of the Gospel; (3) the demand of the love of Christ, "If ye love Me, keep My commandments." Here emphasis was laid on the injunction to "preach the Gospel to every creature."

The second speaker was Rev. Henry Haigh, of the Wesleyan Mission, Mysore, who presented India's appeal to Christians by outlining the threefold tyranny under which the millions groan. There is the tyranny of creed, a pantheism in which men are the helpless victims of inexorable Fate. Then, there is the tyranny of caste, which so binds the people that freedom of act and movement, and even life itself, is sacrificed so long as the regulations of the hoary system are not infringed. Thirdly, there is the tyranny of custom, which perpetuates the child-marriage and other tragic practices.

The concluding address was by Dr. Grattan Guinness, who has recently come off a missionary VOYAGE ROUND THE WORLD.

Having outlined his course through Europe, and in India, Burmah, China, Japan, and North America, he gave some of his impressions of India. A visit to Benares was strikingly described, and the washing of the multitude in the waters of the Ganges was viewed as a great evidence of a sense of sin. A scene or two in Burmah gave variety to the story, the power of the Gospel among the Karens being mentioned with peculiar pleasure. In conclusion, Dr. Guinness spoke of the wide open doors: India is open from end to end; China also is practically open; Burmah is our own; and Japan is pretty much as civilised as England; all are open to the Gospel. In several of these lands Dr. Guinness was privileged to preach and deliver addresses to students and other congregations.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 15.

The closing day was devoted to Africa, Polynesia, and other isles of the sea. At the morning prayer meeting Mr. W. H. Seagram presided. After a season of earnest petition,

Rev. R. C. Joynt, of Christ Church, Gipsy Hill, read the story of the four lepers, as recorded in 2 Kings vii., and showed how closely it bears on the whole question of missions, going to the very root of the subject. There is a famine, and a grievous famine, in the besieged city; two words sum up the condition of things—famine and bondage, and these two words picture the state of the heathen. There is no famine like the heart famine of those who can find no satisfaction for the intense yearning after something real and abiding. Think of the hunger for pardon, for peace, for certainty as to the future, for satisfaction as to how we can stand before a holy God. Think again of the bondage of sin, the awful cruel bondage of the heart enslaved by the devil. But while all this is so—notice there is abundance just at hand to satisfy the need of the perishing people. They are dying, and there is plenty outside the gate—only they know it not.

of the present state of things among the heathen. They die of soul hunger, yet there is fulness in Christ for all, and they know it not. Yet there are sufficient Christians in this favoured isle to spread the news to all people within a year. It is not a question of means, but of obedience. Talk of income, why the income of the greatest of the missionary societies is only some quarter of a million, while the nation saves 200 millions per annum and spends 140 millions on strong drink.

At the morning meeting, Mr. H. M. Matheson, who presided, spoke as one who for fifty years had had some share in the management of missions. While thankfulness must be felt for the good things heard in these days of Conference, it must be confessed that the churches are not yet really awake to the realities of their responsibilities as regards missions. True we cannot bring the world to Christ, but we can bring Christ to the world; and to that evangelisation we are called. We believe in the power of the Gospel to save, and when the Spirit works there are conversions. Thus in the story of missions in Polynesia, Madagascar, and Malaysia, we see marvellous testimony to the mighty power of God in blessing his word, even among the most sunken races.

TROUBLES IN MADAGASCAR.

Miss Amy Brockway, who, as the daughter of devoted missionaries, has given her whole life, from four years of age, for Madagascar, told of God's work, and of the present disorganised and unhappy state of affairs. Absorbed in her love for the people amongst whom she has spent her life, it is not to be marvelled at that at times she seemed well-nigh swept away by indignation against the treacherous and vindictive practices of the Jesuits. Her work had lain among the Betsileo tribes who, thirty years ago, were a rude, superstitious, ignorant people, oppressed and downtrodden by the Hovas. When the missionaries at first began to talk of the Gospel, of sin and salvation, these people did not know what they were talking about—the words conveyed absolutely no idea to them. Idols, as is generally known, had been forbidden by the Hova Government, but the Betsileo had great faith in charms which very much became as idols to them. One now in our sister's possession is merely two sticks with a little bag full of ashes and grease, and this miserable object was given up by a man who confessed he had long worshipped it. Their customs in sickness were also most barbarous, and in short the early missionaries had to encounter the most serious difficulties by reason of dense ignorance and gross superstitions.

Now, in the midst of such a people, they had to depend largely on individual dealing from house to house, talking and explaining the way of life. Under such circumstances the education of the children became most important. Hence schools were opened, and while difficulties arose at first, these have gained ground, and have done a marvellous work. Thus suppose one now stands up to speak in a Betsileo village, about the half of his audience will probably have been trained in the missionary schools, and have Bibles of their own. Thus we have come to the reaping time, and in many places we have reaped wonderfully among the bigger boys and girls who have passed through the schools. But, strange to say, as the reaping time came, on the whole work. The French have come in; the Jesuits have established their disastrous rule; our chapels have been taken from us—nominally restored, it is true, by orders in Paris, but by no means really restored in Madagascar. Faithful pastors are remorselessly sent from their posts, or flung into prison to endure the utmost horrors of these dungeons. Thus the reaping time has brought the winnowing time; but thank God many of these people have stood firm, and not a few have proved ready to die rather than abandon their Saviour. Much of the chaff has been winnowed, some of the light wheat has been blown off, but the good grain abides, and is standing the test.

A HEAVY BLOW HAS FALLEN

THE GOSPEL IN SAMOA.

Rev. J. W. Hills, L.M.S., spoke of the wonderful triumphs of the Gospel in the Southern Seas. More than a hundred years ago the Gospel was carried to Tahiti, whence it has spread to Raratonga, and by-and-by to Samoa, and through the scattered isles of the Pacific. The aim of the missionaries has been to build up a self-supporting native Church; and now (speaking of Samoa) we have in every village an earnest native pastor supported by the villagers. The Samoans cannot be said to be all true believers, but it can be said they are evangelised, that all have heard the Gospel. Of course, there are drawbacks—the very fertility of the land induces laxity and selfish ease. Then communism—while it is good to see the people helping one another—produces a class of men who are quite content to live on others without any pretence of labour. Troubles of one kind and another have crept in; but in a wonderful way a cure has been found in missions. The best way to revive the Samoan churches, as the churches at home, has proved to be to stir them with regard to the heathen in adjacent isles. The response has been cheering, and very many Samoans have laid down their lives for the sake of the Gospel. They have been pioneers in New Guinea, New Hebrides, the Loyalty group, and many other islands in Polynesia.

MALAGASY MISSIONS.

Mr. H. E. Clark, of the Friends' Foreign Missions, led the thoughts of his hearers right back to Madagascar, beginning twenty-six years ago, when Miss Brockway, who had spoken so well, went, a child of four, with the missionary party to Madagascar. Passing on to the recent crisis in the island, he said that during the bombardment of Antananarivo, on September 30, 1895, the missionaries felt that while they were servants of Christ and men of peace their place was by the side of the poor native Christians. Hence they shared the dangers and difficulties of the Malagasy. The speaker described the sad results of the capture of the capital by the French, and the destruction of the native Government ere yet a fresh authority had been established. The natural consequence was an immediate outburst of rowdyism and violence, which cost the lives of many faithful men, and culminated in the barbarous murder of the devoted Mr. and Mrs. Johnson and their child. In passing, the speaker referred in the warmest terms to the high Christian character of the Queen of Madagascar—now imprisoned in the Isle of Bourbon. He also added delightful testimony to the genuine spirit of unity which animates the representatives of the L.M.S. and of the Friends in Madagascar. In this cordial fellowship and amity may be discerned one secret of their success.

MORAVIAN MISSIONS.

Mr. C. J. Klesel, representing the Moravians, narrated the sending out of a party in June, 1891, to Batavia River, North Queensland, the Federated Church of Australia finding the means and the Moravians the men. The leader was the devoted James Ward. The aborigines were cruel, treacherous cannibals; but Mr. Ward proved the right man to deal with them. His early difficulties, by reason of the rude barbarities and superstitious customs of these wanderers, were of the most formidable character. Yet he soon began to win their confidence and respect in a remarkable way. At length his strength failed; he was laid on his death-bed, and dark clouds rested on his soul. He seemed almost to despair of the results of his labour among these people. On the last evening of his life his spirit rallied, his full consciousness was restored; the blacks were called in, and they came in troops. He spoke to them with intense yearning of sin and salvation; then fell back exhausted and passed to be with Christ. Was his life in vain? No; the seed sown has sprung up, and a harvest is now being reaped by the Moravian labourers who are to carry on his work. Not long ago the Ward Memorial Church was opened with deep interest and amidst a great concourse of blacks, numbers of whom are now ready to accept Christ.

Capt. Carey-Brenton spoke of the West Coast of Mexico, a coast extending 3000 miles, without a single European or American missionary, with no Gospel, no Bible, no knowledge of God, and yet with perfect freedom for missionaries. Since he spent five years on that coast on naval business, he has had the country laid on his heart, and now he hopes to start in January with a small party of devoted men and women, who go forth in faith to witness for Christ in a land where his name is unknown.

MEDICAL MISSIONS.

The prayer meeting from one to two o'clock was devoted to medical missions. Mr. Eugene Stock, who presided, read 2 Cor. x., and briefly introduced the subject by showing the importance attached to medical missions by the C.M.S.

Dr. J. L. Maxwell urged the Scriptural character of Medical Missions, and dwelt with thankfulness on the recent growth of this form of missionary effort, and of the many ladies who have entered on this service. Now medical missions are effective in evangelistic effort among Jews, Mohammedans, and heathen, yet one of the most successful of medical missions is among Roman Catholics. The need for medical missions is pretty generally admitted. Undoubtedly the appalling lack of skilled treatment in sickness among natives of India, China, Africa, and other lands calls for medical help; but the need for medical missions is not merely physical—this agency is needful by reason of the dense darkness of the people. The healing art, exercised by a Christian physician, sets forth the intense compassion of the Gospel, and illustrates its mighty power. Hence among the bigoted Mohammedans of North India, and the intensely self-righteous literati and upper classes of China, medical missionaries have proved singularly effective. The results have been marvellous. Men and women coming to some central city from distant villages for healing, hear the strange story of God's love, and carry it back to their own homes, and thence in remote corners, unvisited by missionary or catechist, little companies of untaught but true believers may be found as the fruit of medical missions. This form of effort is therefore not merely a handmaid and pioneer of the Gospel, but is itself a very effective Gospel agency.

THE DARK CONTINENT.

The afternoon meeting was largely devoted to Africa—North, South, West, and East. Mr. M. H. Hodder presided, and the first speaker was Rev. D. Burford Hooke, secretary of the Colonial Missionary Society, who gave an account of his recent tour in South Africa, showing the state of the vast wide lands and teeming populations without the Gospel. During his travels he had visited Betheldorp, near Algoa Bay, where over a hundred years ago the consecrated Van der Kemp first began his labours among the Hottentots, obtaining with the greatest difficulty from the Governor a place at which he might "train his monkeys," as the natives were at that time contemptuously regarded. Particulars followed of the work of the Congregational churches in the South African colonies, and it was stated that some 70,000 natives are now consistent members of churches which owe their existence more or less directly to Van der Kemp's primitive efforts at Betheldorp.

Rev. F. Hastings followed, with special reference to work among the aborigines of Australia—a wandering and despised people, nota few of whom have, nevertheless, been won to the Saviour.

WEST AFRICAN MISSIONS.

Rev. Dennis Kemp came next with a very animated account of Wesleyan Missions on the Gold Coast. Recent statistics on which he had been engaged had shown a very remarkable numerical growth, and indeed the progress has been beyond all expectation. Referring to a remark made by Mr. Hooke, that Roman Catholics are making little headway in the South, the speaker stated that his own experience on the West Coast was exactly similar. The natives who have accepted the Gospel are slow to abandon it for the ceremonials of Rome. But, while great blessing had been granted, it must not be presumed that all is rosy. Far from it, the heart of man is at enmity with God there as elsewhere, and many difficulties have arisen. Yet there is no part of the world he would rather work in, for he had learned to love the people. Some time ago he was speaking at an anniversary of the Lutheran Mission on the Gold Coast. As he saw the great congregations, heard the vigorous singing, beheld forty young men whose hearts God had touched on behalf of their heathen fellows, he recalled what he had read of the appalling cruelties in Coomassie, and realised as he had never done before what the Apostle Paul meant when, referring to the state of the sinner, he added "and such were some of you." The earnest men who were giving their lives for the Gospel were not so long ago such as these blinded natives of Coomassie. This, said the speaker, will help Christians at home to realise more fully what the Gospel has done on the Gold Coast.

SOUTH AFRICAN MISSIONS.

Mr. H. W. Maynard had to tell of the Lord's dealing in connection with the South African General Mission. His own visits to South Africa, and his business connections therewith, had given him a deep interest in these lands. His sister, Miss Constance Maynard, had just returned from Pondoland, where she had been greatly impressed with the state of the people and the appalling need of the Gospel. True, they are by no means like the natives of Uganda, who from the accounts we have heard, seem eager for the light of the truth. The people of the South are, on the other hand, largely indifferent to any such thing, and appear to have little or no conception of sin. Hence we have to begin by appeals to their conscience and to aim at arousing some sense of the need of pardon. With reference to candidates it is one of the most responsible tasks to consider the fitness of those who apply. We need workers, but we can only send those who seem called to the work by God, filled with burning zeal, and ready to go forward by faith and in simple reliance on God.

AMONGST MOHAMMEDANS.

Mr. W. Summers, of the North Africa Mission, spoke of work among Mohammedans, and particularly in the Barbary States on the northern coast of Africa. Having laboured in Morocco and Egypt, as well as preached the Gospel in Palestine and Syria, he had seen much of the arduous conditions under which missionary work in such lands is carried on. The intense hatred of the Mohammedans to the recognition of Christ as the Son of God and Saviour of men raises a barrier to the Gospel which is peculiarly hard to overcome. The N.A.M. had its origin in the burden laid on the heart of Mr. George Pearse for the Kabyles. Then there were no missionaries in these lands (save three to Jews); now there are some 150 belonging to different missions—though many of these cannot yet speak freely to the natives in their own tongue. Already there are about a hundred converts—not including those who are lately said to have come out in a great work of grace at the foot of the Atlas Mountains.

Turning to Egypt, where he had lately been labouring, Mr. Summers spoke of the beneficent results of the English occupation, and told of his experiences in Alexandria, where medical missions and mission schools have proved among the most effective agencies. Large numbers of the self-satisfied, self-righteous Moslems may be found listening to the Gospel, and many have really, it is believed, accepted the Saviour.

IN YORUBA COUNTRY.

Rev. T. Jays, C.M.S., spoke of God's work in the Yoruba country, that is, the hinterland of the Lagos country. There Mr. Townsend began work some fifty years ago, but a revolution broke out and the missionaries were scattered. However they resumed further on, and now in Abeokuta and many towns and villages there have grown up numerous and well-nigh self-supporting churches, that is among a people who fifty years ago had never heard the name of Christ. Moreover, they were spreading out, starting in fresh places, and seeking to evangelise other tribes. The Yoruba Christians have themselves undertaken the work in Lagos, while the missionaries have pushed further on. Illustrations followed of difficulties and of the unhealthy character of the region. The speaker made an urgent plea for more missionaries. Alas, many are afraid to go out because of the dangerous character of the climate. Those who are on the spot are overburdened. Places formerly occupied are now empty for lack of workers, while beyond there extends the great populous Central Soudan—without the Gospel: millions on millions who know not Christ, and have never had a chance of hearing of his salvation. We need men, yet in spite of the lack of men and of means God is blessing wonderfully the feeble efforts of those who are witnessing to his name in the Lagos hinterland.

THE YOUNG MEN'S MEETING.

In the evening a considerable number of young men were amongst the audience. Sir George Williams presided, and opened the proceedings with a few enthusiastic words on the importance of missions, expressing his ardent hope that many members of the Y.M.C.A. may be called of God to witness for Him among the heathen, even as many have already been sent forth.

Rev. E. A. Stuart gave a practical exposition of the story of Micah the Ephraimite, in Judges xvii. The story may seem very slight, but it has its deep lessons. Strange, doubtless, it appears that men should thus bow down to what their own hands have made: yet it is what the Hindu, the Chinaman, the African does to-day. Surely it is the despair of a world which is forced to confess it cannot of itself find God. And mistaken as we know these idolaters to be, their very intensity and eagerness are often a sore rebuke to the easy-going indifference of many so-called Christians. Now in our educational efforts in India and our civilisation in Africa, we are, however unwittingly, shaking the faith of the people in their idols; and may they not say to us, as did Micah of old, "Ye have taken away my gods, and what have I more?" Hence our overwhelming responsibility to give them the true living God in place of the miserable refuges in which they have hitherto found shelter. Moreover, the tremendous changes taking place in the world are opening before us opportunities such as never existed at any previous period; but while doors lie open everywhere we have to ask what we are doing to enter in with the Gospel.

WHO WILL FILL THE GAP?

Rev. F. B. Meyer opened with pathetic reference to the sudden calling home of Mr. T. W. Randall—a devoted young Congo missionary, who was to have spoken at the Conference, and went on to appeal in telling terms for some one to fill the gap, or in the primitive phrase to be "baptized for the dead." Proceeding, he sought to press three considerations on the attention of his hearers. First, the possibility of their lives influencing the entire world for good or ill. Second, let them consider the opportunity of influencing men as a missionary. Third, let each regard the present position as probably a preparation for foreign missionary work. On these lines Mr. Meyer spoke with great power and with intense feeling, moving, it was evident, very deeply the hearts of the young men before him.

Mr. D. M. Thornton, of the Student Volunteer Missionary Union, said that we had heard of the need for workers that every creature might hear the Gospel, and of the qualifications of the men wanted; but now he wanted to raise the question, How soon is this to be done? Does the Lord Jesus Christ expect that the Gospel should be preached to every creature of every generation until He come? His words seem to indicate that this responsibility rests upon us. Is it to be done? Surely each one ought to ask the Master the exact meaning of his command and the precise part He expects us to perform. Now the aim of the S.V.M.U. is the evangelisation of the world in this generation, and its motto is "Make Jesus King." The Union wants to make every Christian young man in this land understand that this must be done—the world must be evangelised, and we must do it. The same note of missionary responsibility was sounded last week by Dr. Horton when he called on the Missionary Board to retract the decision they had come to, to call a halt in the forward movement in missionary work. Surely in all these respects we see cheering tokens that God is working, that the time is ripe, and that He is specially calling the young men of this age to a grand world-wide evangelisation.

THE CALLS OF CHRIST.

Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor said that we had been reminded of the great importance of having a definite aim. Now for his own part he had a definite aim, for he was very definitely in search for some one to go out as a missionary. When he offered himself as a missionary and was refused on medical grounds, he resolved that he would never speak without seeking to stir someone to go, as it were, as his substitute. Already he believed many had thus been constrained to go, and many will yet, he trusted, be called out in this way. Men ask constantly, Why should I go? Is there any definite call to me? Should the question not rather be, Why should I stay at home? Now consider that Christianity is the great humanity of the world. One thinks of the hideous cruelty and awful suffering of the heathen, and feels that even from this point of view the call to young men to carry the humanity of the Gospel to these people is imperative. Think of the dense ignorance, of the insecurity of life, of the daily terror in which the people live, and you will feel that even apart from the question of spiritual enlightenment mere philanthropy demands we should go to these heathen. Thus we have the call of humanity, and then we have the call of ambition. We want to make the most of our lives, and how can we do so in any nobler and grander enterprise than the publication of the Gospel? There is no enterprise on the face of the earth so astonishingly successful and so glorious as that of the Gospel. Then consider the marvellous and providential openings of doors in all lands. Is not this the call of Providence to go forward? Yet again, there is the call of conscience. We are servants, our Master's command is clear. "Go . . . to every creature." Are we not verily guilty if we do not go? It is the simple duty of those to whom the Gospel has been given to make it known to the ends of the earth.

But beyond all this there is a deeper call still, in the personal call of Jesus Christ to our hearts. We need Christ, if we are to be saved, but, on the other hand, Christ needs us in order that the world should be saved. He does this by instruments, He has chosen the instrumentality of his people, and He calls to us—"Will you not go and do this thing which is so near my heart?" Moreover, Christ constrains us to this work by the hope of his glorious appearing. He pleads by his Cross, his passion, and his coming again, and yet more by his life lived out in us. It is the irresistible overflowing of the life within. The true missionary is one who cannot help it. He is constrained, compelled by the love of Christ. Who then will calmly, prayerfully settle the question with his Master, "Lord, wilt Thou have me to go?"

The speaker concluded with earnest prayer, in which he sought to bring every hearer to personal decision, as in the presence of God, as to whether or not he were called of God. He asked those who were ready to hold their lives at the will of God in the matter of missionary service to rise. In response a large number of young men stood up to signify that they were willing, if God should open the way, to devote their lives to missions. Thus closed, in much solemnity, this latest of Missionary Conferences.

A Palestine Exhibition is being held in the Oriental Gallery, Brighton, under the direction of Rev. James Neil, who has already done so much in this way to illustrate Bible references to Eastern life and character.

"Paul's voyage and shipwreck."—Acts xxvii., 13-26.

Golden Text:—"Be of good cheer: for I believe God, that it shall be even as was told me."

WHEN a band of prisoners was ready to go to Rome, Paul was sent with it. Many of their number were probably malefactors who had been condemned for some crime in Palestine, and were being sent to take part in the brutal shows of the arena in the amphitheatre. Paul was a Roman and uncondemned, and it is evident that the centurion in charge paid him more attention. He was permitted to visit his friends when the vessel touched at Sidon, and the fact that his advice was asked (21) shows that he was regarded with respect. Luke and Aristarchus were with him. The wind which was favourable in bringing Paul to Palestine would be contrary in going back to Rome. Starting from Cæsarea they kept along the coast to Sidon, from thence round the North of Cyprus to Myra—then, still near to the coast, North of Rhodes and down to Fair Havens in Crete. Paul advised them not to leave Crete (Fair Havens), but the majority wished to push on, and so they started. When the south wind blew softly (13) no doubt they had a good natured laugh at Paul's apparent mistake, but they had not gone far when a storm arose. The teacher should follow the journey on the map.

Note I. The Storm.—Euroclydon means a N.E. wind. Point out that storms come alike to good and bad. Some think that after conversion they ought to be exempt from trouble, but "many are the afflictions of the righteous." There is a sense in which good men escape trouble. "The way of transgressors is hard." That hard way the righteous man avoids. But trouble comes to all. The disciples on the sea of Galilee actually obeying their Master's command were whelmed in a boisterous gale. The difference between the Christian and the sinner is to be seen in the way they go through the storm. The latter rebellious and desponding, the former hopeful and patient, believing that "all things work together for good." Christ had burdens to bear as all men have, but He bore them easily because He used the yoke of meekness and lowliness of heart. God delivers his people out of not from the storms. "Many are the afflictions of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth him out of them all."

II. Means of saving the vessel.—They hauled round the boat which was towed after the ship (16). They "undergirded"—passed ropes round under the ship and made them fast across the deck to keep the straining timbers together (17). They hauled down the sail (17). They lightened the ship by throwing overboard useless furniture (tackling) and some of the cargo of wheat (18, 19).

Emphasise the truth that we are always to try and extricate ourselves from the storm. God blesses the means we use, not our indolence and neglect. God helps those who help themselves. We must pass round our hearts in times of trouble and temptation the ropes of God's promises. We must throw overboard all pet schemes, all luxuries, all friends, if these endanger our eternal welfare. Better to lose all our cargo and get safe to heaven than go to the bottom with all the cargo on board. "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

III. Paul's encouragement.—They had all been so busy helping that there had been no time to eat (21). Paul reminds them of his wise advice which they had refused to act upon, in order to give weight to what he now had to say (22). Paul's dream brought hope to him and to all the crew. He believed in his mission. He must go before Cæsar. It was part of God's plan for him, and no waves could overwhelm him until that plan had been completely carried out. Paul was not at all ashamed to confess his God, "Whose I am and whom I serve," though few there cared anything about God. Point out that through Paul 276 lives were saved (24), so that while the good suffer with the bad, the bad enjoy the blessings of the good. A firm faith in God sees through the clouds of the storm and knows that beyond the tempest there is a calm only to be won by passing through that tempest.

A Little Chinese Girl.

TOTSI (the Chinese word for beans) is the name of a little girl in Central China. She is thirteen years old and her mother is dead, and her father lives near the Home, where all who go to that part of the empire stay for some months while beginning to study the language.

A school for Chinese girls had been opened near Totsi's home, and the teacher asked Totsi to come, but at first she would not go. The teacher of the school was kept busy, that she could not study much at the language, so she wanted someone to come and help her and learn to read in the school. Totsi, hearing of it, came and asked if she might not come and work for her. It did not seem as if she were large enough to help much; but she was told that she might try if she would obey and come to school every day.

The Chinese houses of the poorer people have mud walls with a floor of earth, and only a few benches and boards for a bed, as furniture, and the little girl had to learn how to sweep and dust and keep a room clean and tidy. She soon knew how to do many things very nicely, and would look after the smaller girls.

After she had been in school a few weeks she came and told her teacher that she believed in Jesus. And when their New Year came, when everybody worships idols, she said they did not have any in their home now, and her father told those who came to see them that it was because they believed in the true God.

She did not like to study, but when told that she would not know how to serve God unless she could read her Bible, she did much better.

One morning she asked her teacher to go to her home with her that afternoon and tell some of the women the "doctrine," as they call the teaching about God, and said she would tell them anything they could not understand. Several women and children were gathered in one of the homes, and she explained what was said until they learned the speaker's words and way of telling things. At another time she went with her to see the sick mother of one of the other scholars, and while there someone prayed earnestly that God would heal her. The next day the teacher was saying that she had not heard how she was, when Totsi said she was better, and when asked who told her, they found that no one had, but because they had prayed she felt sure that God had made her well again.

Will not the boys and girls who have been taught so much about Jesus pray that the Gospel may soon be preached to all the children of heathen lands?

Part of the Concern.

A CLERGYMAN on his way to a missionary meeting overtook a boy, and asked him about the road, and where he was going.

"Oh!" he said, "I am going to the meeting to hear about the missionaries."

"Missionaries," said the minister. "What do you know about missionaries?"

"Why," said the boy, "I'm part of the concern. I've got a missionary box, and I always go to the missionary meeting."

Every child should feel that he is part of the "concern," and that his work is just as important as that of anyone else. Linchpins are little things; but if they drop out, the wagon is very likely to come to a standstill. Every pin and screw should be able to say, "I always go to missionary meetings. Why, I am part of the concern!"

Children Who Worship Idols.

ONCE again, dear Lord, we pray
For the children far away,
Who have never even heard
Jesus' name, our sweetest word.
Little lips that Thou hast made,
'Neath the far-off temple's shade,
Give to gods of wood and stone
Praise that should be all thine own.
Little hands whose wondrous skill
Thou hast given to do thy will,
Offerings bring and serve with fear
Gods that cannot see nor hear.
Teach them, O, thou heavenly King,
All their gifts and praise to bring
To thy Son, who died to prove
Thy forgiving, saving love! Selected.

Seventh Prize Competition.

THE Competition Papers this time have on the whole been the best sent in as yet! I wish you could all get prizes, and am sorry for those who do not.

Each quarter has shown improvement upon the last, and it is very encouraging to me as well as to my helpers to find that the interest in the "Young People's Page" increases.

Now that long evenings are settled in, I shall hope to enrol a lot of new members. Will each of you help me to do this?

PERSONAL REMARKS.

Many who belong to the Foreign List ask if they are eligible for the Prize Competitions. Certainly, if their names have appeared in the lists nine times during the quarter. They must keep count of this, which will be compared with my own record. But the papers must be done very much more fully than an ordinary "Searcher," and great pains must be taken with writing and general appearance.

Some do their weekly Searcher very neatly, but to others who are not so successful I would give them a hint or two. (1) Always remember to put on the top of the first page the No. of the Bible Searcher, your NAME, AGE, and ADDRESS. (2) Rule a margin on the left-hand of the paper, in which you put the number of the answer, and leave a space between each answer.

Personal.

I thank those parents who have written me regarding some Bible Searcher questions which they consider too difficult. Perhaps they are sometimes, but will friends please remember it is always permissible for them to explain the meaning of questions, though, of course, not to suggest the answer. This will generally meet the case.

GRACIE AND LOUIE FINCH.—Your papers were too late for correction. No. 92 was the Searcher to answer this last week. ALICE COOKSEY, RUBY CARPENTER, and EVELYN PRIMROSE PECHEY.—Your papers arrived too late. They must reach me Thursday morning at latest. DOROTHEA READER HARRIS.—Am glad you are starting to do the Searcher. It is only those who have been correct nine times during the previous quarter that can try for the Prize Competition. CISSY NICHOLSON.—An asterisk is given for extra care and neatness. REGINALD FINDLAY.—Don't you think you could send in your paper rather better written? I don't fancy you put your best writing last week. EDITH PLEDGER.—Glad you are interested in the Searcher. DOROTHY GROVE.—Accept my sincerest sympathy.

UNCLE TOM.

Scottish Notes.

Last Friday, at the annual meeting of the Dundee Children's Free Breakfast Mission, Dr. Patrick earnestly called attention to the fact that juvenile crime is on the increase.

Rev. John McNeill is working this week in Dunfermline. This visit was the subject of much prayer beforehand, and the Christian workers of the town have banded themselves together for a great united effort.

The Free Presbytery of Dundee has received a most satisfactory report from the committee which took charge of the open-air services held during the summer months, on Sabbath evenings, at Magdalen Green and Barrack Park. The attendances were large, and the outcome encouraging to the workers.

Mr. W. Quarrier, of the Orphan Homes of Scotland, Bridge of Weir, writes to the Glasgow Daily Mail making an earnest appeal for the means to build a dispensary, and also a second consumptive hospital for male sufferers. The need for both these remedial agencies he declares to be very pressing.

An interesting service was held last Sunday evening in Warrender Park Free Church, Edinburgh, when four young Germans, who have been connected with the congregation for some time, gave farewell addresses previous to proceeding to India and China as missionaries. The congregation is one that has already sent forth not a few from its midst into the mission field.

The same evening, in the Morningside Congregational Church, Dr. Willis was recognised as medical missionary to China in connection with the L.M.S. This church is one of the youngest in Scotland, but it has over a dozen representatives in the mission field.

The E.T.M.C.A. "Helpers' Together Band" is in connection with the Edinburgh Telegraph Messengers' Christian Association, a Bible-class for lads and young men. God has blessed the class since its commencement, so that nearly all its members know Jesus as Saviour. In a few weeks seven of the lads will leave for the training institute of the International Missionary Alliance, New York, and one will go to Mr. Moody's Institute, Chicago, for a few months' necessary training, eventually going to the fields God has called them to labour in.

The Bishop of Glasgow opened last week, at the Representative Council of the Scottish Episcopal Church meeting in Glasgow, an important discussion on the call to mission work in great cities. The proposal had come originally from the Dean of Edinburgh, and Rev. Dr. Ridgeway (St. Peter's, Cranley-gardens, London) was among the earnest advocates of a forward movement. A special effort is to be made to retain a hold of the large number of persons, belonging to the Episcopalian communion, who flock into the cities, many of whom lapse from church connection.

The village of Stewartfield, in the parish of Old Deer, Aberdeenshire, has been the scene of a harmonious union of two congregations belonging to different denominations. The population of the parish has declined greatly, and it has been felt for some years that the district was over-churched. The resignation of Rev. Hugh Glen, minister of the United Presbyterian congregation, presented an opportunity for action of which advantage was at once taken, and negotiations have been completed by which his former flock have joined the Free Church congregation—of which Rev. John M. Skinner is minister.

At Inverness and Kilmarnock respectively the Young Men's Guilds of the Church of Scotland and the Free Church have been in session. At the first-named gathering much interest centred round the discussion of a paper by Rev. Dr. Robertson (convener of the Church's Committee on Life and Work) on "The testimony of experience as to the varied methods of working Guild branches so as to suit the requirements of different parishes." The membership was reported to be 26,269, an increase of 500 over last year. The contributions for the support of the Guild's mission at Kalimpong, on the borders of Tibet, have amounted to £1100. It was intimated that the Hon. Robert Scott, of St. Boswells, had volunteered to act as the home organiser of the Guild.

The report of the Free Church Guild showed a total of 500 branches. Among the subjects dealt with were: "A Word to the Heirs of a Great Century, or Problems and Possibilities for Scottish Youth," introduced by Mrs. Robertson, Portobello; "Home Mission Work for Young Men," by Mr. B. L. Nairn, Dundee; "Loyalty to Christ," by Principal Rainy; "Loyalty to One's Church," by Mr. R. L. Orr, Edinburgh; "The Claims of Missions," by Mr. A. H. L. Fraser, C.S.I.; and "Self-Education of Youth, or the Use of Literature," by Professor Salmond.

Irish Notes.

Last Sunday was observed as a day of special intercession in most of the Irish churches on behalf of children and young people.

Evangelistic services have been held in Wellington-street Church, Ballymena, by Mr. Jno. Anderson, Assembly's evanglist, whose impressive addresses were listened to with profit by large audiences.

The Irish Presbyterian Church has now forty-four colporteurs in the field. Dr. Greig, Irish Presbyterian missionary, whose life was attempted to be taken a few years ago by fanatical Chinese, is home on furlough at present. Addressing the Missionary Board in Dublin a few days ago, he said matters are now looking brighter in Kirin than ever before, and opposition to missionaries is gradually dying out.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. J. J. Sims has concluded a very successful three weeks' mission at the Philharmonic Hall, Southampton. The result has been great blessing to God's children, as well as to the unsaved. Many came in for miles from the outlying districts to the meetings. The afternoon addresses were principally to Christians; at the evening meetings many gave decision for Christ, while backsliders found the restoring grace of God. The hall, which holds 1000 persons, was completely packed at the closing services. One marked feature of the mission was that Christians from the various churches and chapels in the district displayed hearty and sympathetic feeling in the work. G. S. Bush.

Mr. Richard Coad has been conducting a nine days' mission in the Temperance Hall, Croydon, with very encouraging results. The meetings have been well attended and enthusiastic, and over seventy pledges have been taken. As a temperance speaker, Mr. Coad's quaint sayings and pointed home-thrusts will not soon be forgotten, while his earnestness and fervency of spirit deeply impressed all who heard him, filling many with an ardent desire for fuller consecration of heart and life to the service of Christ. R. E. K.

The street preaching which began in Galway in August, 1894, has been carried on uninterruptedly almost every week since. It is most encouraging to see the large numbers of quiet, attentive people who gather together every Lord's Day to hear the singing and the reading of the Scriptures and the preaching. In Sligo, where so much opposition was given to the preaching in the streets, the work continues to be carried on by the Open-Air Mission for Ireland; meetings are held at intervals on week-days in George-street. The meetings here are quiet now. Meetings are also held regularly every Lord's Day in Athlone, also on fair days, when large numbers listen to the proclamation of the Gospel. The work in Cork still goes on, not without blessing. New work has been opened in Enniscorthy, Waterford, and Maryboro'. R. M.

Mr. W. R. Lane has concluded a week's mission in Manchester at the Y.M.C.A. At the daily prayer meeting beforehand much prayer was offered, and every day during the mission the addresses were most solemn and heart-searching, so that each night some young men decided for Christ. Mr. Downham, the Irish singer, helped the mission with his sweet voice, and the Y.M.C.A. Evangelistic Choir rendered valuable aid. We now have Mr. Isaac Selby, formerly a celebrated Freethought lecturer, but now a minister of the Gospel, to follow with an anti-infidel crusade in our hall, and much prayer is asked for the same. W. H. N.

Mr. William Hill has conducted a ten days' mission in the Baptist Church, East London, South Africa. The attendance all through the mission, both at the evangelistic meetings and the Bible readings, was very good. Opportunities were given for testimony towards the close of the mission, and it was found that sinners had been converted and God's people had been more fully blessed. We are full of praise to God for his goodness to us. Mr. Hill left East London for special meetings at the Railway Mission at Capetown. A. C.

Mr. Charles Inglis is devoting the whole of the present month to evangelistic work in the City of Liverpool. He has visited our city before, but perhaps has never been so used of God in the salvation of the lost as in the mission just concluded on the south side. Last Sunday evening's meetings will hardly ever be effaced from the memories of those who were present. The large building was packed to the doors before the time to begin. Many were under deep conviction, and when the opportunity was offered to those who wished to be saved to stand, scores of people rose to their feet, many of whom found their way to the inquiry room, and decided for the Lord Jesus. One remarkable feature was the number who were saved during the preaching. The Lord seems to have signally owned the Bible-readings which have been given. Many of God's people who have attended are testifying to the deepening of their spiritual life. Mr. Inglis is now conducting his second mission, which is on the north side of the city, and is in connection with the Methodist forward movement in Wesley Hall, where they are doing a noble work in the very heart of Popery and poverty in Liverpool. J. Bennett Anderson.

Ballinasloe is noted for its large annual fair, believed to be the largest in the world. It begins on the first Monday of October, not unfrequently Sundays, and continues all the week. For many years the spiritual need of the fair-goers has been laid on the hearts of Mr. and Mrs. Talbot-Crosbie, of Roscommon. This is the third season the Lord has enabled them to carry out their hearts' desire in having the glad tidings of grace told out to the people. Every night during the fair the large hall was comfortably filled with men, young and old, who listened to the story of redeeming love. The hearts of the workers were greatly cheered by the spontaneous testimonies that came from some of them. Mr. Lloyd, from Dalkey, spoke at each meeting and was manifestly helped in holding the people's attention. T. M. Carleton.

Major Cole has held an eighty days' mission in Minden, Neb. All manner of meetings were devised to reach various classes, such as street meetings and prayer meetings in homes, stores, hotels, blacksmith shops, until gradually the meetings began to get hold of the solid, thinking people of the town. Meetings were also held every week in the country school houses and churches in different parts of the county. Conversions have been made among children, young people, tramps, drunkards, gamblers, farmers, merchants, mechanics, lawyers, doctors, and politicians. The meetings have gradually grown in interest until they possess the town, and for the past few weeks they have been held in the Opera House, as no church was large enough to accommodate the audiences.

The Brothers Weaver, having concluded a good mission at Ayr, have now started work in Aberdeen.

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh has conducted an eight days' mission in Porth, Glamorganshire. The Town Hall has been full every night. Infidelity has been thoroughly exposed during this mission, more especially in a debate on the morality of the Bible and secularism between Mr. Bradlaugh and Mr. J. W. Cox, of the Pontypridd branch of the National Secular Society. The churches have been quickened and drawn more closely together, as the result of the missioner's earnest and faithful service.

A six days' mission has been conducted by Mr. Newton Jones at Ebenezer Baptist Chapel, New Cross-street, Margate, which has been attended with blessing to both old and young. The children's services were altogether unique. The Bible readings and Gospel services for adults, with illustrative diagrams, were no less effective and fruitful. The workers have to thank God for this impetus to their winter's work.

A five days' mission was conducted at the Y.W.C.A., Brentwood, by Miss H. M. E. Hull, of Eastbourne, assisted by local friends. There were several open meetings. The attendances throughout were most encouraging, increasing steadily in interest and power to the end. Gracious influences were manifest, and the Association has been strengthened by the addition of several members.

Obituary.

REV. W. CROOK, D.D., GALWAY.

A wide circle of friends in Ireland are mourning the death of Rev. Wm. Crook, D.D., of Galway, Methodist minister, who passed away suddenly on October 13. He was in his fiftieth year in the ministry, and was in his usual good health until a few days previously. He was a scholarly man, an earnest student of the Bible, and an able preacher, expositor, and lecturer. For several years he acted as editor of the Irish Evangelist, and he was the author of several pamphlets and books, all of which have had a wide circulation.

DEAN VAUGHAN.

The Master of the Temple, who for some two years has been laid aside, passed away on Friday afternoon at the Deanery, Llandaff. Charles John Vaughan was born in 1815, his father being the vicar of St. Martin's, Leicester. Educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, the son entered on the charge his father had held. In 1844 he was appointed Head Master of Harrow. In 1860 he was appointed to the vicarage of Doncaster. He at once addressed himself to every department of pastoral duty, and his influence was felt far beyond the limits of his parochial charge. At Doncaster he began the practice of supervising the preparation of young men for ordination, and some of the most efficient of the English clergy are able to look back with gratitude to the counsel and example of Dr. Vaughan at a critical period of their lives.

In 1861, when preaching before the University of Cambridge, he took for his subject "The Choice of Professions," and in the course of his remarks said: "Where is the experienced pastor who would not gladly take under his general direction from time to time three or four candidates for holy orders? Great joy would it carry to the heart of one parochial clergyman—for him I can answer—to receive applications of such a nature, to find that there were men of blameless character, of steady purpose, of open mind, and of true devotion, who were willing to take up their abode in his parish before ordination to see what he could show them, and to render him such services in his schools and amongst his poor as Church order may permit and mutual convenience allow." To this beautiful appeal there was an immediate response.

A small band of earnest graduates came to Dr. Vaughan that very year; and the good work went on continuously—first at Doncaster, then at the Temple, and latterly at Llandaff. It was in the fullest sense a labour of love with Dr. Vaughan—"the joy of his life," to quote a letter from a vicar who has participated in it. Triennial gatherings were held of the men who thus passed under the care of the Dean. Since the invitation he gave in 1861, from four to five hundred men passed through his hands before ordination, and all of them felt drawn to "the Master," as they lovingly called him, by ties of personal affection. He married in 1850 Catherine Maria, daughter of Bishop Stanley of Norwich, and sister of his life-long friend the late Dean of Westminster.

In 1869 Dr. Vaughan was appointed, by Mr. Gladstone, Master of the Temple, and in his opening sermon struck a high keynote for his ministerial attitude. As a member of the New Testament Revision Committee, and as an expositor of the Epistles, he made valuable contributions to Biblical scholarship, but the whole bent of his mind was towards the spiritual side of his calling. His attitude precluded him from taking any noteworthy share in the organic life and development of the Church. He seldom appeared on a public platform, and he had no concern with the strife and vicissitudes of parties. He was a minister of the Gospel, not an ecclesiastic. Nobody knows how often he was asked to accept a bishopric, but it is a matter of common information that he was twice offered a mitre by Lord Palmerston between 1855 and 1865.

Dr. Vaughan's works include "Memorials of Harrow Sundays," "Temple Sermons," "University Sermons," "Lectures on the Revelation of St. John," "Lectures on the Epistle to the Philippians," "Epistle to the Romans," "Heroes of Faith," "The Church of the First Days," "Epistle to the Philippians," "Epistle to the Hebrews," "Christ Satisfying the Instincts of Humanity," and a long series of other works.

THE BOOK WORLD.

A CHRISTIAN EPIC.

Some few years ago Dr. William Cleaver Wilkinson, of Chicago University, published his "Epic of Saul," which met with universal approval. That poem dealt with the life of Saul of Tarsus up to the time of his conversion. At the close of it the author promised a further work, in the following lines:—

Saul heard, and in his heart of hearts obeyed;
And his whole life thenceforth obedience was—
Whereof the greater song remains to sing,
If so be God vouchsafe such grace to me.

This ambition has now found fruition, and we have The Epic of Paul, which continues the story up to the death of the great Christian missionary. Having been so absorbed in the writings of Paul, we have not yet drawn the inspiration we might from the splendid heroism of the man himself. This book does much to aid us in catching the nobility of character, the sacrificing spirit, and the whole-hearted devotion to Christ, which enabled the Apostle to write and live as he did.

Written in ten-syllable blank verse, this poem realises a great aim and purpose. It comprises over 15,000 lines, and is remarkably suggestive and stimulating as a delineation of a great man and his work. With a lofty ideal, Dr. Wilkinson combines a sanctified imagination and a peculiar facility of picturesque expression. Some of the passages are of great power and beauty. In the closing chapter, Luke, as enjoined by Paul, gives to his kindred and friends in Palestine an account of the martyr's death, of which he was an eye-witness:—

With such a gentle cadence to his tale,
Luke ended; and those satin silence long,
Remembering with sweet heartache what had been;
Then, having knelt together first in prayer,
And having lifted a pathetical
High hymn of triumph over death, they rose
Calm and addressed themselves anew to life:
A little patience and the Lord would come.

Richly produced, this stately volume is eminently suited for purposes of presentation. (8s. Funk & Wagnalls Co.)

MISSIONARY LITERATURE.

The Story of John G. Paton: Told for Young Folks; or, Thirty Years among South Sea Cannibals. Rearranged and edited by Rev. James Paton, B.A. (1s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) This singularly interesting record has reached its twenty-third thousand, and the present issue, though remarkably cheap, has a good portrait of the veteran missionary and other excellent illustrations. We trust the book will be increasingly influential in promoting missionary enthusiasm, and advancing the work of God among the population of the New Hebrides.

Pioneering in Tibet. By Miss A. R. Taylor. (1s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.) This is not a bulky volume, but as a record of brave pioneering Christian effort, sustained in very trying circumstances, it has a deep and genuine interest to all friends of missions. One cannot but admire and thank God for the heroic persistence and endurance that have characterised Miss Taylor's attempts to unlock Tibet to the Gospel. Many readers will wish and pray that life and strength may be spared for the successful achievement of her purpose. Reproduced photographs of Miss Taylor, her attendants, and various Tibetan scenes, enliven the pages.

The Gist of Japan. By R. B. Peery. (5s. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.) This well-printed and well-illustrated book about Japan, its people, and its missions, is a valuable addition to the missionary literature of the time. Dr. Peery writes from intimate knowledge of his subject, and he treats it with much wisdom and breadth of view. No one who masters this book can fail to have a full and intelligent acquaintance with this remarkable people, the conditions of their modern progress, and the need of carrying to them the benefits of Gospel teaching. The chapter on the private life of the missionary is specially interesting and suggestive.

Africa Waiting. By D. M. Thornton. (2s. 6d. S.V.M.U., 93, Aldersgate-street, E.C.) This handbook of the African continent, compiled from the missionary standpoint, cannot be too highly commended to the notice of all friends of African evangelisation, and especially all intending missionaries. The information, drawn from many and reliable sources, seems to be encyclopædic in its variety and completeness. A bird's-eye view is afforded of the continent, its geography, its races, its spiritual necessities, the missionary efforts up to date; and there is much other valuable material, including a bibliography of works on Africa, several excellent appendices, and a splendid map.

Poppy. By Mrs. Isla Sitwell. (3s. 6d. Nelson.) A well-written girls' story of strange misunderstandings and patient endurance. It is sure to interest and please the young people, though the dénouement is scarcely what might be expected.

Young Chris. By L. E. Tiddeman. (1s. Gardner, Darton, & Co.) The story of a brave young boy, which blossoms into a noble life through the sorrows of early days. An admirable book to put in the hands of young boys.

The Queen's Resolve and Doubly Royal Reign. By Rev. Charles Bullock. (1s. 6d. Home Words Office.) This is a new edition of a popular work, with additional chapters describing the memorable events of the Diamond Jubilee. The illustrations are many, and good for the most part.

Sister: A Chronicle of Fair Haven. By E. Everett Green. (5s. Nelson.) This gifted writer has penned many admirable stories, but few of them have excelled her latest effort. It is a finely conceived and beautifully written narrative of girl-life, sweet patience, and a great wrong righted at last. The tone and spirit command attention. We warmly commend the book, which is handsomely illustrated, as a most acceptable gift-book.

The Message of Reconciliation. By Cheyne Brady. (1s. and 1s. 6d. Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling.) This volume presents the great Message in many forms, its incidents and conversations being grouped under four headings: the Necessity for Reconciliation; the Message; How the Message is Carried; and the Acceptance of the Message. The points and illustrative stories will be of service to preachers. All who have read the author's many useful writings will welcome the excellent portrait that appears as a frontispiece to this book.

Through the kindness of the Swedish pastor we have the use of the Scandinavian Church, with reading-room attached, situated close to the principal dock, and convenient for the sailors. We require £60 for initial expenses. Donations will be gratefully received by Mrs. Stewart Mackenzie, Sailors' Rest, Dunkerque, France.

THE MISSIONS TO SEAMEN.
Patron:—
Admiral of the Fleet H.R.H. the Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, K.G.
THE MISSIONS TO SEAMEN is unable to respond to several urgent appeals received from important ports abroad, where numerous British crews greatly need spiritual and physical help. The rejoicings of the Diamond Jubilee of our beloved Queen's glorious reign have, unhappily, diverted necessary funds from the maintenance of the existing work of the Missions to Seamen at home and abroad, afloat and ashore.
The Society has to maintain one hundred and sixty-eight Chaplains, Readers, Boatmen, &c., working amongst the shipping and fishing vessels in sixty-seven seaports in every part of the world.
Sixty-nine Mission Vessels and Boats and Eighty-seven Seamen's Churches and Institutes, are in daily use, winter and summer.
INCOME in 1896, £38,291.
Increased Contributions, Offertories, Drawing-room Meetings, Collections, &c., are urgently needed to maintain the existing work and to extend it to other Ports. They should be sent to COMMANDER W. DAWSON, R.N., The Missions to Seamen, 11, Buckingham-street, Strand, London, W.C.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

The Bishop of Marlborough (Dr. Earle) has accepted the post of chaplain to the new Lord Mayor of London.

Rev. Sholto D. C. Douglas will preach at his old church, All Souls', Langham-place, W., on Sunday next at 11 and 7.

The nineteenth annual conference of the members of the Evangelical Protestant Union was held last week at Manchester.

Rev. Hugh S. Hamilton, who was appointed to Manston in 1847, will on November 4 celebrate both his own jubilee and that of the church.

It is rumoured that the mastership of the Charterhouse, vacant by the death of Canon Elwyn, will be offered to Canon Haig Brown, the present head master of the Charterhouse School.

Rev. A. H. Ford, of Staindrop, who has been appointed to the important charge of Middleton, Teesdale, is the son of a well-known clergyman, and was a student under the late Bishop Lightfoot.

The Bishop of London has appointed May 1, 1898, to be observed as Temperance Sunday in the diocese, on which day sermons will be preached and collections made on behalf of the Church of England Temperance Society.

A conference of Home Missioners has been held in the parish-room, Kensington, the Bishop of Lichfield presiding. About seventy clergymen attended. Missions in country parishes and the supply and training of missioners were the special subjects considered.

Portman Chapel will be reopened on Sunday next, Oct. 24, having been closed for a year for renovation after fire. The reopening services will be continued during the week, with special preachers each evening, and a Bible-reading on Tuesday afternoon, Oct. 26, by Preb. Webb-Peploe.

Principal Chavasse, of Wycliffe Hall, preached the Harvest Festival sermon in the chapel of the Church Army Labour Home for the Outcast, at Oxford, on Sunday last. An anonymous donation of £500 has been sent to the hon. chief sec. in aid of the society's labour homes for the outcast.

Sir Redvers Buller laid the foundation-stone of a new church near Exeter, on Tuesday. Sir Redvers gave the site for the church, which will meet the needs of a growing district. The General said that in this world a Christian life was what all must aim at. They might think that a soldier did not know much about that, but nevertheless those in the Army saw a good deal of the character and the training of the youths of England, and what they had learnt was this, that the best men were those who were actuated by the best motives.

Congregational.

Rev. A. Hamilton has been recognised as pastor at Leek.

A new mission-hall has been started in Toker's Green, Caversham.

Rev. H. Coley has been recognised as pastor at Ryde Church, Isle of Wight.

Mr. A. T. James has been ordained to the pastorate at Mold-green, Huddersfield.

Mr. Stephen Massey, of Manchester, is about to start on a visit to L.M.S. stations in India.

Rev. John Whitehead has arrived from the Upper Congo River, where he has been labouring for the last three years and a-half.

Rev. R. A. Good, of Exmouth, has met with an accident, sustaining damage to the knee and ankle. He had been looking forward to marriage within a fortnight.

Rev. C. H. Ryall, who formerly held the pastorate at Pole-street, Preston, has sailed with his family for the Cape.

The pastor and people at Abbey-street, Bermondsey, have started a P.S.A. service, in order to reach working men. The Perseverance Evangelistic Brass Band, which is willing to help in Gospel service, lent effective aid. Prayer is desired that this special effort may be much blessed among the riverside workers of the district.

The church at Brockley (Rev. John Lewis, pastor), may well not forget the late Mr. J. B. Mead, who was interested in all good work, and a princely benefactor of many important undertakings. A tablet to commemorate his name and worth has recently been placed in the church, where he served in many capacities for a long period of years.

In connection with the chapel anniversary at Wellington-street, Stockton-on-Tees, Rev. T. L. Edwards (of Southport) preached to overflowing congregations on Sunday, Oct. 10, and on the 12th a public meeting was held under the presidency of the treasurer of the church, Mr. Reay, at which addresses were given by Revs. F. J. Feltham (pastor), T. L. Edwards, and W. M. Hudson.

Rev. L. Ton Evans, of Cadoxton, Barry, South Wales, has for some years been labouring in this rising port with great success, attracting outsiders and building up a vigorous church. The population, however, is so rapidly growing that thousands are out of touch with the means of grace. To go after these, this earnest minister wishes to engage a Bible-woman, provided some friends will help towards her support. He is also making strenuous efforts to put up a new mission chapel in a new district outside Cadoxton.

New chapels are being built at Preston, Brighton; South Kirkby; St. Alban's-road, Watford; Albany-road, Cardiff; and Bradfield.

Mr. J. Weedon has held a series of missions in connection with the Free Church Federation. He is now labouring in Durham.

Centenary celebrations are being held by the "New Connexionists" in Staffordshire, Manchester, and other places.

The Gospel Mission Church, Radford, has united with the Wesleyan Reform Union.

The President of the Wesleyan Conference, preaching last week, in Leeds, on David's storing up for the building of the Temple, made a ringing appeal for more intense personal service and more consecrated giving.

Another death is reported among foreign missionaries. Rev. Thomas Halliwell, of Bocas-del-Toro, has died of yellow fever. He entered the ministry in 1890, and only left England for Central America in January of last year.

The annual report of the Young People's Committee of the United Methodist Free Churches contains the following statistics:—Number of Sunday-schools, 1213; teachers, 24,474; scholars, 192,122; Christian Endeavour Societies, 363, with a membership of 9884; junior society classes 122, with a membership of 3266; Christian bands 42, with a membership of 1892.

Revs. Principal Dykes and J. G. Train have been taking part in anniversary services at Lewes.

The last week of November is to be observed in the Presbyterian churches as missionary week.

Rev. Penywern Jones, who has been labouring in India for nine years, is coming home for a year's rest.

We hear that Rev. John Conway, the new minister at Hammersmith, is meeting with much success, and there is already some talk of enlarging the church in consequence of the rapid growth of the congregation.

A meeting was held in Clapham Church on Tuesday afternoon to take leave of several ladies who sail for the mission field. The ladies are Miss Noltemius, of Sefton-park; Miss Ross, of Jesmond; Miss Laidler, of Laygate; Miss Barnett; Miss Falconer; and Miss Lecky. The first three are going out for the first time. Miss Laidler hopes to sail with Rev. H. L. Mackenzie, Moderator of Synod, a fortnight later. Dr. Howie is returning to China, having benefited by a sojourn in San Francisco.

The English Presbyterian Church has set about carrying out the decision of the last Synod that an effort should be made to secure more rapid church extension than has been accomplished in recent years. The claims of the scheme have been brought before a number of the London congregations. They are based on the fact that in eighty towns in England, with a population of 20,000 and upwards, there is no Presbyterian church. The new scheme requires the raising of a fund of £50,000 within the next five years. In its administration special provision is to be made for the erection of churches in working-class districts.

Calls.—Rev. J. M. Jones, of Cambridge, to Hope Church, Merthyr; Rev. J. S. Roberts, to Farnworth; Rev. A. Mitchel Hunter, of North Leith, to Cardross (assistant).

Resignations.—Dr. Robert Small, of Gilmore-place, Edinburgh; Rev. D. Mackay, of Rothesay.

Society of Friends.

New class-rooms have just been opened at Doncaster to accommodate the increasing adult schools there. Several Friends from a distance rendered excellent help at the opening services.

The Annual Conference at Brookfield, near Moira, co. Antrim, held there on the 2nd inst., was a time of special favour and blessing. At the interregnum, about 200, mostly Friends, dined together. The addresses in the afternoon were searching and weighty.

At the London and Middlesex Quarterly Meeting held on the 4th and 5th inst., M. A. Marriage Allen and Walter Morice returned certificates granted them several months ago for service abroad, and both gave encouraging reports and spoke of Divine help graciously vouchsafed. Wm. Thompson, of New England, gave a powerful Gospel address.

By the death last week of Wm. A. Loveless, of Diss, Norfolk, the Society has lost one of its most loyal and devoted home missionaries, whose pure life and persistent toil made him beloved by all who knew him. An attack of influenza, last winter, left him prostrated not a little, and another attack a few days ago of the same complaint carried him off suddenly, but not unprepared. He leaves a widow and young family as well as many friends to mourn their great loss.

Salvation Army.

A hospital for the Chinese population of San Francisco has been opened in connection with the Chinese Corps there.

The corps in Honolulu takes up street collections in order to support the lepers on the island of Molokai with War Crys.

Five hundred and seventy-five tons of grain have been distributed to the famine-stricken natives of India, through the Army relief works.

Temperance Women at Bristol.

The autumn meetings of the Women's Total Abstinence Union, which were held in Bristol October 10 to 14, were among the happiest and most successful ever held by that society. The conference papers were of a high order, the subjects being, "The Progress of Temperance among Women on the Continent and in India" (contributed by Mrs. W. S. Caine and Mrs. Finlay); "A Glimpse at Women's Temperance Work during the Victorian Era" (by Miss M. E. Docwra), and "How shall we Double our Membership?" (by Mrs. Atkinson); the Hon. Mrs. Eliot Yorke presiding over the morning session, and Mrs. Lionel Mundy in the afternoon. Mr. W. S. Caine rendered invaluable service by his powerful speech at the public meeting, chiefly addressed to moderate drinkers, which carried conviction to many minds. Lady E. Biddulph ably presided throughout.

The crown of completeness to the whole was given at the praise meeting held on the last evening, when one after another briefly, but with full hearts, testified to God's goodness and laid at his feet the tribute of thanksgiving.

Personalia.

Rev. Silas Mead, who lately returned from South Adelaide, has accepted the post of principal of the East London Institute. The present appointment is till July next, but it is hoped it may be permanent.

Mr. W. Summers, of the North Africa Mission, is now in England for a short time. Few missionaries have passed through more thrilling adventures, and few have a more interesting story to relate of personal contact with the leaders of Islam. Application for his services for addresses on Morocco should be made to the deputation secretary, North Africa Mission, Barking,

American Missionaries in Turkey.—The Constantinople correspondent of the Daily Chronicle says:—"The Sultan, I hear, is making strenuous efforts to obtain the withdrawal of American missionaries from the interior of Asia Minor. If these efforts should be successful, then the Sultan's policy of the extermination of the Armenians could be accomplished without European witnesses. Miss Pastor, who is organising Armenian orphanages in the interior, has been prevented from travelling in Asia Minor, and, owing to the French influence against her, has been ordered home."

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

A SPECIAL crusade against gambling, intemperance, and impurity is to be carried on in various parts of the Metropolis during the coming winter, which will begin on December 14, 15, and 16, in the Queen's Hall, Langham-place. The council and executive committee include some of the most prominent men in various walks in life, including Viscount Wolseley, Lord Kinnaird, Sir George Williams, Messrs. J. Compton Rickett, J. E. K. Studd, and many of the most influential ministers of all denominations. It is time some effort were made on a big scale to deal with these crying evils. The period of political lassitude on which we have fallen provides a good opportunity for rousing the public mind to something like moral earnestness, and if the movement is as thorough as it promises to be, it cannot fail to bring lasting results in its train.

The first prosecution under the recent Betting Act, by some unaccountable reasoning on the part of the jury, whose counsels were divided, resulted in an acquittal. But the case revealed the far-spreading network of temptation which envelopes our public schools in the direction of betting and gambling, and the need of extra care being taken by the authorities to prevent the mischief taking root among the rising generation. It is one of the perils of the gambling habit that anyone can now indulge in it without ever appearing on the racecourse, or visiting a betting establishment. Nothing will meet such a state of things but the strengthening of inward principle by perpetual warning against the evil effects of the vice. This is the function of teachers and parents. Is the duty being adequately performed? The constant extension of the habit among schoolboys suggests a strongly negative answer.

"We as a nation are not now playing wisely," said a recent speaker. The great mass of young people know much about popular sport and read newspaper accounts of the subject with tremendous avidity, to the unfortunate neglect of more important matters. The pulpit will have to speak out on this waste of life and being. There is no necessity to denounce games as an unholy thing. But the devotion of whole interest to them is one of the sins of the time, and the prophets must warn the youths for their own sake, for the nation's sake, and for God's sake.

How is it the Oxford Music Hall is allowed to run Sunday concerts with paid admissions? Is it not licensed on the understanding that it is not to be open on the Lord's Day? The matter should be looked into before the coming licensing session, or there is no knowing where it will lead to.

When it is pleaded on behalf of Sunday cycling that it carries numbers of persons out of city surroundings into country air and freshness, it should not be forgotten that it also creates a great deal of labour in country places, a great deal of drinking, and a great deal of exhaustion and unfitness for work on Monday morning. It is sometimes very hard, unusual work on the Day of Rest. We commend to young Christians Dr. F. E. Clark's pronouncement upon this subject, given on p. 16.

The Bishop of Durham, whose age and ability and undoubted devotion to his work entitle his words to a respectful hearing, said at his Diocesan Conference that the Church itself must obtain the power of self-government and the laity be admitted to a greater share of power. This, he confessed, involved many difficulties. It is a sign, however, of a desire to move in the right direction.

The Bishop of Ripon spoke worthily of the Gospel when he said that as long as he held the position he did, and remembering the vast amount of sin, wickedness, and misery around him, he should never allow differences of church order and government to prevent him from recognising that Nonconformists and he were engaged in the same effort to extend the kingdom of their common Lord and Saviour. Were this language and its corresponding courtesy of action more general, things would move far more smoothly in England and Wales than they do at present, and much more good would be done.

A correspondent of the Times gives the following strange extract from a circular issued in connection with the opening of the new schoolroom of St. Oswald's College, Ellesmere, last week :—

> Owing to circumstances which were unavoidable the date of the opening of the schoolroom was fixed for Oct. 22, a fast day. The visitor, the Bishop of Lichfield, who was consulted by the Provost, has given his dispensation from the obligation of the day to those who may desire it.

This is carrying High Church practices to a ridiculous extreme, reminding one suggestively of the Papal custom of "indulgences" to those wishful of release from the fasts of the Church. Surely the simple common-sense of Englishmen within the Church must soon revolt against such childish manifestations of the sacerdotal spirit, and refuse any longer to be led blindly along the path that ends in the extravagances and tyranny of the Vatican.

All do not come to an experience of grace in the same way. But it is the duty of each church to create within itself and around about it an atmosphere favourable to the visible confession of Christ. Spiritual truths to have efficiency must have atmosphere. When the south wind of the Spirit blows softly along the valleys, and a power not of man is in the hushed air, this condition is supplied, yet spiritual power, like electricity, must work through the conditions that conduct it. Thus has it been in every modern Pentecost. Said one, "Had it not been for that revival I would never have been here." The spirit and power of such seasons of spiritual enlargement no written record on earth can ever exhibit.—Dr. Hill, in N.Y. Independent.

We are glad to see in The Methodist Recorder an appreciative and brotherly leading article on "The Congregational Union." There was no commotion at the meetings of the latter at Birmingham; nothing outside the ordinary themes has occupied attention. The interest of a journal belonging to another denomination in its proceedings, is an indication of the rapprochement of the Free Churches; they are beginning to look on the things of others with a kindly regard. This is how the Methodist observer was impressed with the evangelical nature of the utterances :—

> The feature of the assembly which would perhaps most have gratified Dr. Dale, had he been present, was the prevalence of a markedly spiritual element. The early morning services form, we believe, a new item in the programme; in any case, a most admirable one. The devotional hour thus gained seems to have influenced every day. The addresses on "How to Increase the Spiritual Power of our Ministry and our Churches" were full of evangelical fervour. These were followed by an interval for prayer and the Communion Service, conducted by Dr. Berry. The influence of such a morning will not be soon lost. It was noticeable, moreover, that any allusion to "down-grade" teaching or to the spread of Unitarianism among Independent ministers was greeted in a fashion which showed how sound was the heart of the assembly upon the great central verities of evangelical religion.

We rejoice at the increase of fraternal feeling between the Free Churches, but great as are the results we believe will flow from it, we doubt the utility of proclaiming that the Free Church Federation is going to do for Evangelical Christianity what the Oxford Movement has done for the Anglican Church, and that it is the most important movement which Europe has seen since the sixteenth century. The men in a movement never know what it will become and do, though their grandchildren may, in some measure. Let the Federation proceed quietly with its work, and leave the self-laudation for another day.

The report of the Metropolitan Free Church Council read at its annual meeting showed that a large amount of real spiritual work is being done. Fears were expressed at its inception some few years ago that the council would become a mere political party machine. But the political work does not appear to have occupied much of its attention so far. The report told of missions and quiet days of prayer and communion. It is indeed a happy thing to see so many regiments of the great Christian army coming together and presenting a united phalanx in its attacks upon evil. If the spirit of loyalty to Christ whom they all call Master and Lord be preserved, this federation of the Free churches will make good progress in the work of winning men for Christ.

Is it a chance, or a coincidence full of significance, that so much stress is again being laid on the doctrine of sin? Dr. Maclaren dealt with it in his powerful address to the Baptist Union at Plymouth; it was brought before the Congregational Union at Birmingham; and last week it was discussed by the London Baptist Association. It is to come before the latter body again in January. Surely this points to a new sense of need, a feeling that scientific ways of regarding sin do not meet the verdict of conscience or of the Word of God. If men are to be brought to prize the sacrifice of Christ they must know the purpose for which it was made. Indefinite conceptions of sin lead to incorrect estimates of the Cross of Christ.

"The Sense of Sin" is an important topic which individual ministers would do well to discuss in the privacy of their own studies. Mr. Gladstone once said, "The age needs preachers who will speak to the conscience." The pulpit too often deals with "subjects" rather than persons. Uplifting the perfect character of Christ is good, but it is insufficient unless we point out the exceeding sinfulness of sin. Men are not appalled with their distance from Christ's holiness until we measure that distance for them yard by yard, and point out the wrong-doing that goes to make up that long measurement. The mirror of the Gospel must be held up to men so that they shall see and recognise themselves reflected in it.

We are glad to see signs in the utterances of our younger ministers that the kingship of Christ—a doctrine that has recently been left far too much in the background—is once more regaining its central place in their preaching. There is a healthy reaction against the wave of German rationalism which but recently threatened to emasculate much of the preaching of the pulpit. The "Crown Rights of the Redeemer" must be held up without compromise if his saving power is to have its rightful chance. Only as He is made supreme, Lord of lords, and King of kings, can his teaching be understood and his redemptive work completed in the world.

The Westminster Gazette called attention the other day to the words of Lord Derby on the subject of peace, spoken by him in 1878. They well deserve consideration, for they are wise and true words, and have only too much force in our present circumstances as a nation. We give a couple of sentences :—

> We all profess to wish for peace, and I hope most of us do so sincerely ; but do not let us forget that in a country like this there are interests which tend steadily and constantly in an opposite direction. I am not referring to politics or to parties, but to social tendencies, which will operate equally whatever party or ministry is in power.

His lordship then referred to the professional eagerness of soldiers for an opportunity to win distinction, and of the use they make of the Press for their own purposes. He, further, recalled the fact that there is scarcely a family in the upper classes that has not some connection with the army ; hence an enormous social influence is on the side of war, and to these influences is to be added the desire of a large number of speculators to fish in troubled waters. It is a mere delusion to say that everybody is against war, if it can be honourably avoided.

Another instance of the besetting form of insanity that sometimes afflicts millionaires is related in a Paris newspaper. A viscount of enormous fortune has been consigned to an asylum because he tried to commit suicide, under the delusion that he is not worth a penny, and must die of starvation. We speak of this as a form of mania. Is it not too often true of men spiritually that they will not realise their riches? It is the delusion of the world at large that it is poverty-stricken in the things of God, and will not believe in the inheritance that is given freely in Christ Jesus. He has brought heaven and God within our reach. And yet it is the few, and not the many, that believe Him, and so have life in his name. The rest voluntarily shut their eyes to the spiritual wealth revealed in Him, and choose poverty, and weakness, and final despair for their lot ; and all the while the kingdom of God, with all its resources, lies at their door. Truly the world is slow in coming into a realisation of its privileges. "My people doth not consider, saith the Lord"

Strange news comes to us from the Japan mission-field. Bishop M'kin, the American Episcopal delegate at Tokio, reports that of the 150,000 converts in Japan, 50,000 belong to the Roman Catholics (who have been at work there for two centuries), 23,000 to the Greek Catholics, and 10,000 to the Episcopalians. The remarkable fact is this—that in the matter of Church government, ritual, and theology, the Episcopal and Greek Churches in Japan are said to be closer than any other religious bodies, and Bishop M'kin intimates that the two bodies may soon be united. This is surely an extraordinary state of things, and must argue a curious forgetfulness of fundamental principles on the one side or the other. When we realise that in many directions the Greek Church is more heathenish in its worship of pictures and relics than the Roman, and is even less progressive, the Episcopalians must find themselves in strange company in view of this projected union. Judging by the trend of the dominant section in this country, they are the side most likely to be most "adaptive." This kind of adaptation looks like surrender.

The following advertisement appears in the (Allahabad) Pioneer :—

> Wanted, an experienced Butler for a bachelor. Must understand the care of uniform and accoutrements. Must be clean and active, and if possible, honest. Must be equal to camp life. No native or Belgaum need apply. No Christian need apply. Wages Rs. 15. Address Captain Tyler, Royal Artillery, Belgaum.

And yet our officers in India are supposed to represent a Christian country! No wonder our missionary progress is slow, but the fault does not lie with the missionaries nor with the Gospel they preach.

According to the Cape Times, the "slave market" appears to be definitely established in Capetown. These slaves, it is needless to say, are the Bechuana prisoners, who seem to be treated "like mere bales of goods and cattle." Careful supervision is kept over them while under the control of the Government, and the writer says, "It is not easy to pass the strict guard at the gate, unless you are a farmer come to pick your 'labour.'" These farmers go round the market, scanning the men as they would bullocks, and "sorting out those of the biggest size," who are then bound to them for a term of years on a system of "apprenticeship." This does not seem to be different in principle from slavery in its absolute form. The labourers will be at the mercy of their employers, over whom no adequate supervision can possibly be kept in a scattered country. The whole matter is a deep disgrace to our civilisation, and calls for immediate interference from the Government.

German Protestants have been so much incensed by the Pope's recent offensive remarks against Luther, the Reformation, and the Evangelical Confession, that they are endeavouring to influence the Government to recall the German ambassador from the Vatican. Even the Kaiser has expressed displeasure at the Pope's Bulls. Catholicism, however, is said to be more influential in Germany than at any time since the banishment of the Jesuits, who are making strenuous efforts to return to that country. It will need strenuous watchfulness on the part of Evangelical Protestants to hold the lamp of the pure Gospel alight amid the darkness of Romanism, on the one side, and the night of Atheism on the other. Their real strength, there as here, lies not in the arm of flesh, but in the Sword of the Spirit and the preaching of the Book and the Cross.

The last decade of the nineteenth century will be remembered for the new spirit which is being felt in the world of philosophy in its bearings on religion. Old systems are being broken up ; the hard "sensationalism" of such thinkers as Mill and Bain, the materialism towards which the writings of Spencer and Darwin tend, the omniscient attitude of W. K. Clifford and his school, so influential among men of science during the "eighties," are giving way to a more open attitude, a readier acceptance of the spiritual aspects of material things. The change has been very silent, but it is universal in its influence, and revolutionary in its effects on human thought—predisposing the next generation of thinkers to listen to the long-forgotten voices of the Spirit.

How wide this movement is may be seen in the growing popularity in France of books expounding a spiritual philosophy, as opposed to the works of writers like Taine, and Littré and Comte. In the preface to his "Outline of a Philosophy of Religion," by M. Sabatier, just translated, the author says :—

> To a generation that believed it could repose in positivism in philosophy, utilitarianism in morals, and naturalism in art and poetry has succeeded a generation that torments itself more than ever with the mystery of things, that is attracted by the ideal, that dreams of social fraternity, of self-renunciation, of devotion to the little, to the miserable, to the oppressed—devotion like the heroism of Christian love. Hence what has been called the Renaissance of Idealism, the return, i.e., to general ideas, to faith in the invisible...and to those longings, as confused as they are ardent, to discover a religion or to return to the religion their fathers have disdained.

It is the object of the author, in this eloquent and stirring book, to prove that this discarded and disdained religion of Christ is the religion which can alone satisfy and redeem. That the youth of France—and of all countries—may make this discovery for themselves is an object worth the writing of many books and the offering of many prayers.

Sabatier has expressed in a brief sentence a truth which needs to be constantly remembered both in daily life and in great international events. "The secret of the future of a race is hid in its religion." The little prayer meetings in cottages, the classes of children gathered in Sunday-schools, the visits of Christians to the poor and needy, the worship of God at the family altar, the acknowledgment of God in the congregations of worshippers, guarantee the well-being of a nation, rather than the legislative chambers whose proceedings are chronicled with care and commented upon by some of the brightest minds. We do not depreciate the public action which is seen of all, but stress needs to be laid upon the fact that it is in the religion of a people that its life or death is found.

The views of an octogenarian actor ("Memoirs of a Mistaken Life") on the effect of the dramatic profession on those who follow it are not encouraging. Avowing himself as in some sense a Christian all his adult life, he complains of the excessive egotism engendered by the art, of the tendency it breeds to excessive self-indulgence > often quite at variance with the abstinence, even the asceticism of which the followers of other arts are capable, while the frequent observance of lax principles and conduct in those around brings about a complaisant tolerance on the part of those who would not for a moment think of doing the same themselves.

He concludes this summary by saying :—

> I have seen in the humblest walks [of the profession] principles in many of its members that no bad examples could undermine ; while among the more cultivated and refined the pernicious influence did far more injury.

From this one would infer that even subtler perils than those of social impurity have to be faced Some stand ; how many fall!

England and India.

THE vast panorama of human history slowly unrolls itself before the eyes of successive generations. No reflecting man—at any rate no true Christian—can for a moment suppose that this complex and unending picture is the offspring of blind chance. It must be the outcome of a great scheme, conceived and set in motion by the Divine Spirit; working through sentient minds, and responsible, though imperfect and faulty, instruments.

Among the races of mankind, as they now exist, we Britons are accustomed to think that we hold a chief, if not the chief, place in the scale of the world's benefactors. Originally one of the smallest of the nations, measured by numbers and superficial area, we have grown to be one of the largest from the point of mere size as well as of beneficent action. This we have done, surely, by virtue of the clearer light of divine revelation received and welcomed, and by the purer Christianity that has possessed and inspired us. We plume ourselves on being the foremost colonisers of the century, and the most unselfish; and the boast may in the main be justified.

When we descend from the general to the particular, however, there must come the confession that our shortcomings as a nation are no less conspicuous than our achievements. Take the case of that mighty continent of varied peoples—India—which we fondly designate our "Great Dependency." Notwithstanding all that we have done for the causes of individual freedom and social progress in India since we imposed British rule within its borders, the tale of what we have left undone is long enough to cause deep searchings of heart. Have we not too often acted on the principle that possession and prestige are interchangeable terms? and that, as in the days of ancient Rome, the proper fate of the conquered many is to be tied to the chariot wheels of the conquering few? Have we not exploited India in our own commercial interests, and regarded its posts of ruling and administrative authority as stepping-stones, from which the scions of our upper and middle classes may land themselves in speedy opulence, and the certain prospect of fat pensions?

The history of British rule in India, though it holds not a few splendid chapters of high-minded resolve and truly Christian devotion, is yet stained by many traces of selfish aggrandisement and contemptuous disregard for the just and inalienable rights of the inhabitants of the country. For some of these evils our military system is responsible, with its unnatural aggregations of the young British soldiers, removed from the restraints and refining influences of social ties and family responsibilities. It might, perhaps, be thought that for the ghastly and far-spreading consequences of famine in India we, as the dominant factor in the country's government, are, at any rate, not responsible. It is a convenient euphemism to describe such a calamity as the act of God. It is rather the fruit of the ignorance and the inaction of man.

It will be the purpose of a short series of articles to show that we cannot throw off our responsibility in this matter. Granted that we are not able to ward off the drought which is the producing cause of famine. But actual experience proves that we may, and we ought to, make such provision in advance as will to a great extent nullify the disastrous results of dry seasons, and thereby prevent the wholesale sacrifice of human life. Calamity is no doubt the generator and the occasion of much practical sympathy and generous relief of the suffering; and is thus a powerful illustration of "the solidarity of the race." But where it is attainable, the work of prevention, as a mere matter of common sense, not to speak of sanctified forethought, ought to displace and render necessary the attempts at cure which tardily follow the advent of such an overwhelming disaster as that from which India is now, we hope, beginning to recover.

We confidently assert that the great preventive of famine in India is extensive irrigation. If God, in his mysterious providence, so seals up the fountains of heaven that, with a periodic certainty, the vitalising rains are for a time withheld, He has not inevitably left us to the nerveless paralysis of despair or the slow palliative of a terribly partial relief. He has so fixed the geographical conformation of India that mighty rivers bisect its great and populous plains. These vast watercourses can by human skill be diverted into canals, so that in time of drought the otherwise desert places of the land shall be transformed into well-watered tracts that will not only produce sufficient food for man and beast, but furnish ample means of necessary transport. In order to prove that this can be done and should be done in India, it will be enough to retell the story of what has been accomplished in this direction in one notable instance. That story we purpose to give in brief form in a succeeding issue.

"Exercised Thereby."

PAIN and sorrow are inseparable from the human life. There is a faded flower in every garden, a broken shrine in every temple. The palace cannot close its door against the silent-footed death, neither can the mother shelter her bairn that she folds in agony to her bosom. The iron hand of pain is laid upon the heart of humanity. All, all must carry the burden of life, but woe to them that are not enriched by the burden they bear! Here is the pity of life—that men should stagger beneath its load and not be one whit the better of all their labour! Alas, that this is possible! God grant us grace to become athletes under his training!

God's chastening should make us very humble. What is the fault He would point out? What is the lesson he would teach? Let us show anxiety to learn our error, eagerness to understand his will. Has trouble come because of my wilfulness? Lord, make my heart as the heart of a little child. Has blessing been withheld because of my wandering? Lord, draw me with the cords of a Man. Help us, O Lord, in affliction to turn to Thee, that the day of our suffering may work an eternal weight of glory.

Literature for Italy.—The Italian Evangelical Publication Society, 51, Via dei Serragli, Florence, is the Religious Tract Society for Italy. It has provided all the churches and schools at work in Italy with the literature needed for their different purposes. As they are offered in a Roman Catholic country, these publications have to be sold under cost price to be accepted. Hence the need of this Society to be supported by friends of Italian evangelisation. The foreign helpers having continued to decrease in number, the secretary, Rev. Odoardo Jalla, has come again to apply in Great Britain to the friends of Continental work for renewed help. Mr. Jalla's address will be in London, care of Rev. Prebendary Dr. L. B. White, Religious Tract Society, 56, Paternoster-row, E.C., and in Scotland, care of Mr. J. Forbes Moncrieff, 15, Hill-street, Edinburgh.

Answered Prayer.

IN the CHRISTIAN of October 7 "An Old Subscriber" suggested that those who have received, in answer to prayer, special deliverance from special or temporal dangers should communicate their experiences for the encouragement of others.

A number of years ago I was in a position of peculiar liability to spiritual pride. Alarmed, I laid the matter before God, with the specific request that He would allow me to continue the work in which I was engaged, and would use me in converting souls, but in such a manner that it would be impossible for me to take an atom of the credit to myself.

Among the women attending my little meetings for prayer and Bible exposition, held in the artisan quarter of a small American town, was a Scotch woman of considerable intelligence. She was eager to become a Christian, and seemed to understand perfectly what was necessary; but, to her intense and increasing distress, and my complete bewilderment, was held back by an inexplicable inability. Again and again, prayerfully and with the open Bible, we went over the ground; but always with the result that just as she seemed about to grasp the prize she became like one lost in a fog.

About this time I had bought some religious booklets which I did not wish to distribute until sure of their fitness; so as I was too busy to read them myself, I said to my humble friend:

"Mrs. C——, will you look through these and pick out the ones that you think would be suitable to give to the women after the meetings?"

She cheerfully assented, and, very much relieved, I handed the package over, without a single thought as to what effect might be produced upon her by the reading. The next week when I called she met me joyfully, seized my hand, and with face all aglow, exclaimed, "God Himself must have put it into your heart to give me those books. As soon as I read this one, called, 'More Light,' everything became perfectly clear to me."

It was true; the mysterious hindrance had vanished, and she had accepted Christ as simply as a little child; and thus was my prayer categorically answered. I had been used in her conversion, but in such a manner that it was impossible to take an atom of the credit to myself. Meanwhile the writer of the little book has never known how it proved indeed "more light" on an obscure way.

A second case was that of a poor German Roman Catholic, who also attended the meetings, and who was very anxious to learn to read English. Another attendant was an intelligent and godly American woman, with very pronounced opinions and strong prejudices. One day she remarked to me that she did not believe Roman Catholics could be converted.

"What!" I exclaimed. "Do you mean to say that you believe it is impossible for the power of God to change the hearts of Roman Catholics?"

She was a little staggered at that way of putting it, but after an instant's hesitation answered:—

"Yes, I do, with the priest always at hand backing them up."

"So," I said, "you think the priest is stronger than God?" "Yes, the priest and the devil together."

Seeing that further argument was unwise, I soon dropped the subject. Shortly afterwards, it occurred to me to make her carry the Gospel herself to a Roman Catholic. Accordingly when I next saw her I said, "Mrs. J——, I have some work for you. I will pay you twenty-five cents (one shilling) a lesson if you will teach Mrs. L—— (the German woman already mentioned) to read in the English Testament."

Her shrewd smile showed that she read my thought; but she promised to do her best, though persisting that no good would come of it. However, it was not long before she owned her mistake, and acknowledged fully and freely that God's power was sufficient to convert even a Roman Catholic, for as her pupil read the truth she accepted it. Thus once more was my prayer answered, and neither my unbelieving countrywoman nor I could take any credit to ourselves.

The German stood staunch in her new-found faith, notwithstanding the opposition of her friends. As she succinctly put it herself: "They all say, 'You mustn't go to those meetings; if you do Mrs. —— make you Protestant.' But I tell them Mrs. —— not say anything about Protestant; and I not see anything in my Testament about Protestant, or Catholic, or Episcopal, or Methodist, or Baptist; I just see that Jesus tell Peter 'Follow thou Me,' and that is all; and I just follow Jesus."

A Quiet Day in West London.

A DAY at St. James's Hall devoted to the cultivation of the spiritual life is now a settled autumn fixture in connection with the West London Mission. It is designed to be a united gathering of Christians of all sections of the Church, with a view to their spiritual strengthening and equipment for the winter's work. Three meetings were held on Friday last, and eight set speakers were announced. At the forenoon meeting, Rev. W. H. Tindall (who presided) intimated that Rev. H. P. Hughes would not be able to be present, having that morning received a telegram calling him to the bedside, in Cardiff, of his father, who was very seriously ill. Being one of the evening speakers, his place was taken by his fellow missioner, Rev. M. Guy Pearse.

Two addresses were given during the forenoon meeting. Rev. E. W. Moore spoke most impressively on "Seeing God" (Isa. vi. 5). This, he said, has been the yearning desire of the Church in all ages. The results of such a vision are conviction of sin, of unworthiness, and of unfitness for service; confession of lip sins, which are surely the crying sins of the Christian Church to-day; cleansing of the heart and life; the call to service for God and man. The second speaker was Rev. F. B. Meyer, and his words were in beautiful harmony with what had gone before. He discoursed on the co-operation of the believer with God in the matter of salvation and service—working out what God has inwrought in the soul (Phil. ii. 12). The Christian's heart is in which He will frame and fashion the life in all its outgoings and endeavours and influences. This thought was applied to the various perplexities and difficulties of daily life. Stillness, waiting, and watching, in the secret of God's presence, were urged, in order that He might give the needed light, guidance, and strength. We must not block or thwart God's working in and through us by any inattention or worldly prepossessions on our part.

The afternoon gathering was considerably larger, and after praise and prayer, Dr. J. Monro Gibson expounded a portion of the book of the prophecy of Zechariah. After the summons in verse 3 of the first chapter, "Turn ye unto Me, and I will turn unto you," there was a lapse of about three months, and then the prophet had a series of visions from the Lord. These constituted a "quiet time" for the encouragement of prophet and people in building the Temple, and restoring the city of God. The work of God's people to-day runs on much the same lines, but in the spiritual sphere. The visions were given to answer the many perplexing questions which arose in the minds of the people. Was the Lord really with them? Yes, there was "the man among the myrtle trees"; a later vision showed the "man" to be the angel of the Lord, or, as afterwards appears, the Lord Himself! So with the other visions; they were intimations of God's purpose to STAND BY HIS PEOPLE IN DOING HIS WILL.

The later visions were explained with special reference to Christ and his redeeming work. The eighth vision (chap. vi.) shows the chariots of the Lord going forth in all directions to subdue the world and bring it captive to the feet of Christ. Finally, the ninth vision brings before us Jesus only—wearing two crowns, the priestly and the kingly (verses 11 to 15)—"Behold the man whose name is The Branch; and He shall grow up out of his place, and He shall build the temple of the Lord...He shall bear the glory...and shall sit and rule upon his throne...and He shall be a priest upon his throne...and the counsel of peace shall be between them both...and they that are far off shall come and build in the temple of the Lord." After some impressive words of application, Dr. Gibson appropriately quoted the prophet's words setting forth the conditions of coming glory and blessedness: "This shall come to pass if ye will diligently obey the voice of the Lord thy God" (v. 15).

The second speaker was Rev. C. G. Moore, who presented some of the lessons suggested by our Lord's miracle of feeding the five thousand with five barley loaves and two fishes. He noticed, first of all, the contentment of the disciples with what was ordinary and readily within reach. "We are in a desert place...send the multitude away that they may buy food." We settle down to like conditions, and are also content withthe commonplace; we are victims of the possible, instead of aiming at great achievements and realising new victories. Face to face with a dying world, and with the great promises of God before us, we are yet as ordinary as the disciples were. Christ did not leave the disciples to themselves, but intervened for their salvation. His words, "Give them to eat," introduced the impossible. This constantly happens to-day; that which we cannot do we are led up to, and enabled to do by God. The work must be Christ's, done through his disciples: "Bring ye them hither to Me." Thus, everything was in Christ's strong hands, and He acted with consummate wisdom. The scene is a picture of the power and wisdom which the Lord every day exercises in all matters that are placed under his command. The application of the address was that there are

THREE LIVES POSSIBLE TO US:

(1) Making the best of things as they are; (2) attempting the impossible in our own energy; (3) the Divine method, with Christ in everything—living so closely to Christ as to be always conscious of his presence and control.

There was a still larger attendance at the evening meeting, when three addresses were delivered. The first speaker was Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, who drew attention to the words of Christ in John xv. 3: "Now are ye clean through the word which I have spoken unto you." He placed the emphasis on the "I"—not on the word but the speaker. It is not a memory that will bless us, but Christ's word spoken to us individually. If we are to hear his voice, we must get near Him and listen. If He was once with men, it was in order that He might always be so; if He spoke to some, it was to assure us that He has a word for all.

The second address was delivered by Rev. T. Eynon Davies, on the Apostolic exhortation "Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God" (Eph. iv. 30). Grief presupposes a personal concern; when a man goes wrong, God's heart grieves. God can feel no pain but that which comes of the sin of his erring children. What grieved the Spirit of God in the days of Paul, grieves Him now. The Epistle shows that one of these sins was lukewarmness; other causes of Divine grief were pride and bitterness of soul. A man with a queer temper is malicious words come from a malicious heart. These and other sins can be reached only by the mighty power of God. The Holy Dove will not rest upon the impure heart; those who wait upon God will please Him and have joy in his service.

After a season of prayer and praise Prebendary Webb-Peploe delivered the closing address, beginning with an interesting contrast of truths. The preceding speaker had remarked upon the wondrousness of the fact that God could be grieved by his creatures. Mr. Webb-Peploe now remarked upon the marvel that we have to deal with a God who can be joyful over the people whom He has created, but who have in too many cases caused Him to be grieved (Zeph. iii. 17). Christ is to see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied; that will be through the holiness of his people. The pathway of holiness is the pathway of power, and that path is the path of privilege; and again, the privilege of the believer is to glorify God and to enjoy Him for ever.

Having led his hearers through many Scriptures on longing and satisfaction, Mr. Webb-Peploe distinguished between satiety, which fleshly indulgence may afford, and anything

WORTHY TO BE CALLED SATISFACTION.

True satisfaction is found in God and not without Him. As St. Augustine said long ago: "God made man for Himself, and the heart of man can never find rest until it rests in God." In a full description of man's nature we should not begin with the body, or the lowest part of his constitution, but we should follow the apostolic order, "spirit, and soul, and body." When the Holy Spirit enters a man, he realises satisfaction in his spirit, and the soul and mind and will are influenced in due course; the body also may be brought under subjection. So the man comes to know God and labour for Him in holiness of life. Our high calling is to cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and the spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God. Self will never bring satisfaction to man; this must come from Christ. Dropping all things into God's hands, we must make the venture of faith; then receiving one thing, Christ, we may have all things, including the subjugation of the body, mental rest, and spiritual power; in fact, complete satisfaction, "all things and abound.

Women's Social Work.

THE annual Thanksgiving, in connection with the rescue and social work carried on under the direction of Mrs. Bramwell Booth, was held on Wednesday week, in the King's Hall, Holborn. Dinner was provided for friends and subscribers, after which Commissioner Higgins read extracts from a number of letters showing the value set on the work by men well qualified to judge of the practical results of these efforts.

Professor Stuart, M.P., who presided, spoke in warm terms of his admiration for the work carried on so devotedly amongst a class long regarded as hopelessly depraved. The Salvation Army workers have, however, once more proved that the lost may be found if sought in the right spirit. Those who have given so willingly toilsome days and sleepless nights to this service ought to enjoy the sympathy and help of all.

Mrs. Booth then told of the dinner party entertained daily in the homes and shelters. They came from all parts, and they are the poorest of the poor. It is a joy to be able to report the continued progress of the work during the Jubilee Year. Over a thousand women and children are at present cared for who would otherwise be homeless and destitute. The thirty-seven homes and other institutions connected with this part of the work are in full operation. The officers, of whom 262 are engaged in this branch, are the bearers of the message of hope and salvation to the lost on the streets at midnight. They have visited the cells of the prisoners, and, without respect of persons, opened to them the door of hope. The sick and dying poor in the slums have had a share of attention, and no friendless woman has been turned away. To sustain this good work, one thousand pounds are urgently needed. If funds are forthcoming, it is planned to open a home for discharged prisoners in Glasgow, a women's shelter in London, a metropole at Bristol, and one or two posts for midnight and maternity work. These undertakings will probably involve an expenditure of another thousand pounds at least.

Amongst the advances of the year, Mrs. Booth enumerated the home for inebriates, which it is hoped to enlarge, the maternity nursing among the poor, and the police-court and prison-gate work in Plymouth, Cardiff, and Glasgow. The Army has now in this country fifteen rescue homes, one maternity hospital, seven industrial lodgings for women, three women's shelters, five nursing institutes, and six midnight homes. Details followed of one of the London homes, showing the daily routine, the patience needed, and the glorious reaping. The fact was strongly brought out that the women themselves largely support the work. For example, the one home referred to cost £470 last year; of this the inmates earned £280, old girls paid for board (when on holiday) £16, and contributed out of gratitude £21, so that £348, or two-thirds of the cost, were raised by the girls themselves. More or less this has been true of other homes, and it is a very cheering feature of the work.

Bible Class Union.

A splendid contingent from the Bible-classes in houses of business gathered on Saturday week at Exeter Hall for the annual social of the Union. Some thousand or more were in attendance to welcome Sir George Williams, when he took the chair at 7 p.m. The venerable president, having spoken a few homely words of advice to the young people before him, Mr. F. Phillips, the central secretary, gave a report of the work the Union is doing in the establishment and fostering of Bible-classes in the business houses of the metropolis and elsewhere. He sketched the difficulties to be overcome, often at much personal cost, before this opportunity for Bible study is vouchsafed by some firms.

Rev. W. H. Stone (Kilburn) delivered a powerful address on "Belief in God," and concluded by a word to the unconverted. Rev. Ossian Davies followed with a very helpful and earnest discourse upon the Bible.

Prophecy: An Evidence for Christianity, was the subject of a lecture delivered a few days ago by Mr. H. M. Barnett, of Stamford Hill, at a meeting of the Christian Community Memorial Hall, Bethnal Green, E. Great interest was evinced in the facts and arguments adduced, and at the close there was a free discussion.

Rev. John Stoughton, D.D.

THIS venerable servant of Christ has at length, full of years and of honour, passed to his rest, falling asleep on Sunday evening at his residence, Oberlin House, St. Leonard's-road, Ealing. It is twenty-one years since he resigned his charge at Kensington, and retired from the active ministry, but his memory is still warmly cherished by a wide circle, and his influence has continued to make itself felt in many ways. To the last he was distinguished by the unaffected simplicity and transparency of his character, and by loyal attachment to the Evangelical faith. Amidst the endless evolutions of modern speculation, he has remained content to stand on the old foundations, holding fast by and resting in the Revelation he so long and faithfully set forth in his public ministry.

In 1894, we gave a portrait and sketch of this aged minister of Christ. We may, however, briefly recall the leading features of his career.

John Stoughton was born at Norwich on November 18, 1807, and had thus almost completed his ninetieth year. He was the son of a solicitor of that city, and was educated for the same profession, but on the threshold of manhood he was led to think of the Christian ministry as his vocation. Though his mother had been a "Friend," and his early associations had been with Wesleyans and Church people, he decided to seek admission into the Congregational body. At the age of twenty-one he entered Highbury College, where he remained for four years. In 1833 he was appointed co-pastor of the Congregational Church at Windsor, and during his ten years' residence in the royal borough actively participated in divers movements for the spiritual and intellectual improvement of the inhabitants.

On the appointment of Dr. Vaughan to the principalship of Lancashire Independent College, Mr. Stoughton was chosen to succeed him as minister at Kensington, a position which he occupied till his retirement from pastoral work. At Kensington there was a large and influential congregation, and Mr. Stoughton's labours were heavy, but he found time to engage in enterprises of a far-reaching character. He was much interested in the work of the British and Foreign Bible Society and the London Missionary Society, and was associated with the Young Men's Christian Association and the Evangelical Alliance from their beginnings. Dr. Stoughton was also one of the founders of the Congregational Union. On more than one occasion he was concerned in efforts to promote a better feeling between Churchmen and Nonconformists, and this brought him into personal contact, which in several instances developed into close friendship, with Dean Alford, Dean Hook, Dean Stanley, Canon Swainson, and Archbishops Tait and Magee. With Dean Stanley he remained till the Dean's death in specially intimate relationship. He was a frequent guest at the Deanery, acted as a pall-bearer at Lady Augusta's funeral, and in 1877 was chosen by Stanley to deliver an address on missions in the nave of the Abbey.

Considering the claims of his congregation, his literary activity was considerable. From the time of his Windsor ministry, where he was allowed access to the library attached to St. George's Chapel, Dr. Stoughton was an assiduous ecclesiastical student. The Puritan period of English religious life was nearest to his heart. In 1867 he published "The Ecclesiastical History of England from the Opening of the Long Parliament to the death of Oliver Cromwell," followed, three years later, by "The Church of the Restoration." Successive volumes dealt with the reigns of Queen Anne and the first three Georges, his final contribution being "Religion in England from 1800 to 1851." Many other books of interest were written by him; amongst these "Spiritual Heroes," "The Light of the World," "Stars of the East," "The Song of the Flock," "Philip Doddridge," "Church and State Two Hundred Years Ago," "The Pen, the Palm, and the Pulpit," and "Homes and Haunts of Luther."

Two years before his resignation of the charge of his church at Kensington, Dr. Stoughton, who had previously refused the principalship of the college, accepted the position of Professor of Historical Theology at New College, which he held until advancing years necessitated his complete retirement from active work.

Dr. Stoughton's later life was spent quietly at Ealing, his companion being his daughter. His wife, who was a daughter of Mr. George Cooper, of Windsor, died in 1879, and of his eleven children only four now survive to mourn the departure of their aged and honoured father.

Young Men and Temperance.

A DEMONSTRATION arranged by the National Temperance League was held on Friday evening in the Guildhall, the subject being Young Men and Temperance. The committee of the League have determined to celebrate the sixtieth year of the Queen's reign by a wide extension of their forward movement, for the special purpose of widely augmenting the number of abstainers among all classes of the community ere the dawn of the twentieth century.

The Archbishop of CANTERBURY, who presided, said the purpose of the meeting was not merely to be an ordinary meeting of the League—but it had a special meaning, for it was intended to be the inaugural meeting of the young men's auxiliary to the League. They wanted to form a special body of young men pledged to give up intoxicating liquors, and to do their very utmost to encourage others to do the same. There was an excellent reason for this, for there could be no question at all that it was amongst young men that as a general rule the habits of life were formed for permanence. It was in youth that a man marked out for himself, much more surely than he knew himself, the course that he would follow in many respects for the rest of his days. As the youth developed in his character he would find new surroundings; he would find himself among new companions; he would have to deal with new temptations; he would in various ways be moulded and fashioned; and there would be impressed upon him that which afterwards he would not be able to change without very serious difficulty indeed. When a young man came to maturity the change would imply a very severe conflict with himself, and from that conflict he might possibly be saved by looking closely to the walk in which he was treading just at the time when permanent impressions were most certain to be made upon him. Young men were capable of very high and generous sentiments, and while they were capable of great folly they were also capable of most devoted and earnest lives, and could influence one another to a degree which was almost impossible to estimate. If young men could be got to pledge themselves, the body would do much more to raise others than could be done by any arguments or experience of later years, and therefore if it were possible to persuade young men to aim high a wonderful service would be done them, a service hardly possible to match. The National Temperance League could not, he thought, confer a greater benefit on the whole country than by founding such a body as the London Young Men's Auxiliary. A new regiment of splendid recruits would thus be won who, assuredly, would march pace by pace with them to victory, because the temperance cause was God's, and victory was certain.

Addresses with special reference to the importance of temperance to young men were afterwards delivered by Dr. G. Sims Woodhead, Mr. C. E. Tritton, M.P., Mr. Robinson Souttar, M.P., Mr. J. Williams Benn, Mr. Bowen Rowlands, Q.C., Mr. W. Joynson Hicks, Mr. Josiah Nix, and Mr. R. Whyte.

Jews in Italy.—On Sunday, October 17, Dr. Alexander Robertson baptized into the Christian faith in the Scottish Church, Venice, an adult Jew. The preacher took occasion to pay a high tribute to the Jews in Italy, and especially those in Venice, declaring that they were amongst the most intellectual, the most industrious, the most patriotic, and the most philanthropic of Venetian citizens. Many Jews in the city recognise Christianity as the legitimate outcome of Judaism, and are accepting Jesus of Nazareth as the Messiah of Old Testament type and prophecy.

Protestants in Congress.

THE eighth National Protestant Congress was held last week at Blackburn. After a conversazione on Monday evening, the first public meeting was held, under the presidency of Mr. J. J. Spraggon, of Southport. The subject was "The Church of Christ," and the first speaker, Rev. C. F. Ward, of Manchester, maintained that in doctrine that Church must be Scriptural. Rev. Dr. Grattan Guinness followed with an address affirming that in character the Church must be Spiritual. The concluding speaker was Rev. A. A. Isaacs, of Bath, who held that the Church must be Vital by the power of the Holy Spirit.

The first session on Tuesday was presided over by Rev. D. M. B. Chapman, of Preston, who directed attention to the relation of the Bible to the Church. Rev. Dr. C. H. H. Wright (Liverpool) spoke on the Priority of Scripture to the Church. We should, he said, rest the Old Testament on the authority of the Lord Jesus Christ. The Bible is not dependent upon the Church for its authority; historically, as well as dogmatically, it has the priority. Rev. E. T. Hitchens (London) read a paper on the Supremacy of Scripture over the Church. The Bible claims to be the supreme rule of faith and practice, and this position was recognised by the primitive Church and reasserted by the Reformers.

At the afternoon gathering, with Mr. S. Breeze (Southport) in the chair, an address was delivered by Rev. Joseph Hocking (Burnley) on "Protestantism as a Standing Witness against Error." In conclusion he showed that Protestantism not only witnesses against priestcraft, but it preaches Christ the Saviour of men.

WHEREVER PROTESTANTISM HAS GONE,

light, liberty, education, and progress have gone also. The second address, on "Protestantism a Positive Declaration of Truth," was delivered by Rev. Thomas Davis (Birmingham). He maintained that the official teaching of the Church of England is thoroughly Protestant, especially in her Articles and Homilies. In the evening addresses were delivered on "The Sacrifice of the Mass" (by Rev. W. C. Minifie, of Bradford), "Mariolatry in the Church of England" (by Mr. W. Walsh, of London), and "The Confessional" (by Rev. P. T. J. B. Hains, Wigan).

Wednesday's proceedings opened with a breakfast, at which a resolution was adopted approving the principle of Imperial Protestant Federation. Mr. J. Garnett (Clitheroe) presided over a public meeting afterwards, at which Protestant and Romish missions at home and abroad were contrasted by Revs. G. W. Clutterbuck (Manchester) and J. W. Harrison (Arklow). At the afternoon meeting Colonel Ainsworth (Bolton) presided, and opened a discussion on "Modern Unbelief." Rev. P. E. Thomas (Blackburn), referring to the small proportion of gentlemen of the commercial class who attend places of worship, said it would soon be incumbent upon them to make in the hearts and minds of the educated people of England. Rev. J. Urquhart, dealing with modern unbelief in its treatment of Holy Scripture, said that archæology was slowly but surely vindicating the Old Testament. Rev. J. E. Linnell (Pavenham) defined modern unbelief as a determination to disobey Scriptural commands. He did not think clericalism had very much to throw at commercialism. Had not so-called Protestant clergymen received dispensations from Rome to do Rome's work? And were Nonconformist pulpits free from the preaching of blank, bare Unitarianism, in spite of trust deeds?

Mr. S. Smith, M.P., occupied the chair on Wednesday evening, when "Rome" was the subject for discussion. Remarking upon the revolt against the pure and spiritual religion taught by Christ, he said that this strange back-eddy passing over England reminded one that no error was ever completely destroyed. The entire system of sacerdotalism is anti-Christian. It fosters intolerance towards fellow men, and sets up false standards of holiness. Mr. Smith said he was informed on good authority that over in England had bound themselves to seek reunion with the Church of Rome, and in the face of that it was time to preach a fresh Reformation in England. The other speakers were Revs. Talbot Greaves, Lindsay Young, and Jacob Primmer.

The morning and afternoon meetings on Thursday were under the auspices of the Women's Protestant Union. Mrs. W. R. Arbuthnot, who occupied the chair, explained the inter-denominational character of the Union, which knows nothing of political differences or party spirit. Discussing prevalent Romanising influences, Mrs. Arbuthnot said that the children of Protestant parents are largely falling victims to the educational traps of the Romanising party. In the dioceses (R.C.) of Plymouth, Birmingham, Leeds, and Shrewsbury forty-one per cent. of the children attending Roman Catholic schools are of Protestant families, and the curious fact has been elicited in regard to one diocese—probably it was the same in others—that though a so-called "conscience clause" existed, yet Protestants parents never availed themselves of it.

At the concluding meeting, on Friday evening, "Worldliness in the Church" was the subject. Mr. T. Hardcastle, of Bromley Cross, who presided, showed the difference between the enjoyment of legitimate pleasures and the giving first place to temporal things. Moreover, he insisted that the Gospel does not call upon Christians to retire from the world to secure personal salvation and with no concern for the salvation of others. Lieut.-Col. Alves held that it is not the function of the Church to provide amusements for the people. Pastor F. E. Marsh (Sunderland) distinguished between profession and possession. He traced worldliness in the Church to departure from the Word of God.

South American Missionary Society.

A farewell meeting, in connection with this Society, was held on Thursday in Clifford's Hall, Clifford's Inn, Fleet-street, to bid God-speed to Mr. W. C. Morris, who returns on November 4 to South America, to open new centres of evangelistic work among the Argentines, and to Mr. A. Pride, who is going back at the same time to continue the work for God in the Paraguayan Chaco.

Mr. F. A. Bevan presided, and spoke words of cheer to the prospective voyagers. Among those who are interested in missions, the great continent of South America seems to command little interest as compared with other fields; but the workers now returning to their loved labour might depend upon the sympathies and prayers of friends at home, and, above all, they would have the continual presence of the Lord.

Mr. A. Pride, speaking of the Chaco work, in which he has laboured for some years, mentioned that the workers will, on his return, number eight. Much progress has been made in the study of the language, and Mr. Hunt hopes soon to compass a translation of God's Word. The confidence of the natives has been gradually gained, and beneficial influence has been exerted upon their manner of life in various respects. Morally and spiritually, the ground has been broken up, and a little seed has been sown, amid many difficulties, with a hopeful outlook for the full harvest in God's good time.

Mr. W. Case Morris asked further financial help for this forward movement among the South Americans, who are throwing off the yoke of the mercenary Romish system, which has so long enslaved them to superstition and utter ignorance. Thousands stand ready to welcome the standard-bearers of the Cross, as the result of political and social revolutions, in which we must surely see the finger of God. Less than half of the £5000 required for the Argentine and Indian departments of the work has been raised to date. In the Spanish-speaking countries of South America the fields are white unto harvest. As fast as mission-halls are opened in the land, they are sure to be crowded. There is really urgent necessity for pushing the good work forward at any cost.

South Africa General Mission.

Meetings were held in Exeter Hall, last Friday, to commend to God six workers sailing for the field of this society's operations — Miss Porter (late secretary Y.W.C.A., Swansea); Miss Jackson, of London; Nurses Gossage and Pertwee; Mr. Walter Mather, Trinity College, Oxford; and Mr. Douglas Wood, B.A., All Souls' College, Oxford.

The evening meeting was opened by the chairman, Mr. T. B. Miller, who referred to the undenominational character of the Mission. Mr. Arthur Mercer, secretary, described the nature of the "Home Helpers' Union" as a channel for prayer, effort, and giving. Testimony concerning personal and relative blessing received through the Mission, was given by Rev. C. E. Sampson, of St. Peter's, Islington, who had also seen much of what has been accomplished for God by the workers, who always maintain a high standard of holiness and consecration. Miss Constance L. Maynard, of Westfield College, detailed what she had seen of the Mission's operations in Pondoland. In contrast to the Zulus, the Pondos are indolent and childish. Their docility, however, affords some leverage for godly influence, though hope of affecting permanent good must largely centre in the children.

Testimonies followed from each of the departing missionaries, breathing the spirit of self-surrender to God's will, with full confidence in his care and guidance in the work to which He had called them. Miss Porter's appeal to individual responsibility in the sense of Bishop Tucker's telegraphic message, "Africa waiting," was solemn and impressive. Dr. W. R. Miller, of the Student Volunteer Missionary Union, who is shortly sailing for Sierra Leone in connection with the C.M.S., followed on the same lines urging that it is Christians in motion who get to know and do the Lord's will.

After the outgoing missionaries had been commended to God in prayer, Mr. Eugene Stock warmly commended this Mission, from various points of view. It is doing, in one of the hardest fields of the world, a work which is valuable to colonists and to nations alike. The evangelisation of South Africa before the century closes is a noble aim. He trusted that God would use that meeting not only to send out more workers to South Africa, but to stir the hearts of those who are called of God to work at home to do so with more simplicity, earnestness, and devotion.

A few words about the value in God's sight as well as the extent of the mission-field were spoken by Rev. E. W. Moore, who trusted that each worker in the field might prove to be skilful, strong, and sent of God; while those who remain at home may remember that prayer for missions, at least, is incumbent upon all who love the Saviour.

Service and Knowledge.

"But the servants which drew the water knew."

They who in love's blest ministry are spent,
The Master's deepest secrets learn to know;
Their touch is on the fountains whence there flow
To men those richest treasures, freely lent,
That with best hours of human joy are blent,
And theirs the eyes that watch the deep'ning glow
With which the waters into good wine grow,
The Master's wedding dowry unseen sent.
Sad, thirsty guests sit at life's bridal feast:
The servants would we be who bear the bowl
Deep-draughted, brimming o'er, unto the least
Of these his chosen, who of ev'ry soul
The parchèd longing knows, and ne'er has ceased
Supplies to multiply—no stinted dole.

Japanese Sailors.—Miss M. McLean continues to take deep, practical interest in the welfare of these Far Eastern seamen when they come to this country to convey vessels back to Japan. Miss McLean writes telling of her Christian intercourse with the crew of a Japanese vessel, the Yoshima. At Newcastle, where the ship was built, she was able to board it daily and distribute New Testaments, with other literature, to the men. She came into contact with them again at Plymouth previous to the sailing of the ship, and there again opportunities were found of bringing Christian influences to bear on the Japanese sailors. In less than a year another crew is expected at Newcastle to fetch a new warship. Miss McLean is anxious that each man should be presented with a book-bag and its contents. Any ladies who can help in providing these bags should communicate with Miss McLean at 62, Coolfin-road, Custom House, London, E.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, October 31.

"They shall know that I am the Lord when I shall have put my sword into the hand of the king of Babylon."—Ezek. xxx. 25.

THE emphasis is on my. The punishment inflicted by the King of Babylon on Egypt was directly from God, it was his sword in the hand of Nebuchadnezzar (v. 10). How little the historian of that time realised that there was anything more in the expedition of Babylon against Egypt than the natural rivalry of these two great nations. But the eye of the inspired seer saw that Babylon was the executor of the Divine decree.

God's chastisements are very real. It is probable that no child of God sins knowingly against the Divine order without being chastised. Sometimes the natural consequences of our sins, at other times misfortunes in our circumstances, or the alienation of our friends, make the scourge of small cords by which our souls are taught the bitterness of any way but God's.

Are you undergoing chastisement? Do not regard the human agent with any feeling but love and pity; do not expend your strength in resistance and threatening; do not faint when you are rebuked, but lie still at the feet of God, receiving meekly the strokes, and thankful that He loves you well enough to take such pains. Thus you shall become a partaker of his holiness, and the bitter discipline will produce the fruits of righteousness which are to the praise and glory of God. Never forget to distinguish between chastisement and punishment. The one is for the child, the other for the rebel. Chastisement we may bear, but the punishment of our sin has been for ever borne by Jesus Christ.

MONDAY, November 1.

"They...that dwelt under his shadow in the midst of the heathen."—Ez. xxxi. 17.

Whatever may be the primary meaning of these words, they have a very blessed application to those who have gone forth, from so many Christian families, into heathen lands. For no choice of their own, and simply in obedience to their King's command, hundreds of our sons and daughters have gone forth to dwell in the midst of the heathen. They have taken up their home amid conditions which they would not have chosen, had it not been for the constraining love of Christ, and the imperative need of dying men; and as fond relatives and friends regard their lot from a distance they are often filled with anxious forebodings. May they not be involved in some sudden riot and sacrificed to a frenzy of hate? May not the sanitary conditions and methods of life be seriously detrimental to their health or morals? "Oh, if only I could be there," so often escapes, almost unconsciously, from the lips of fond affection.

Hush! Christ is there, as near them as He is to you, casting over them the shadow of his Presence, beckoning them to his secret place. He is the shadow of a great Rock in a weary land, or like the canopy of cloud that hovered over the camp of Israel by day, screening it from the torrid glare. Do not fear to trust your loved ones to the immortal Lover, who fainteth not, neither is weary. The hand that would harm is arrested and paralysed when it attempts to penetrate that safe enclosure.

TUESDAY, November 2.

"It came to pass in the twelfth year, in the twelfth month, in the first day of the month ...in the fifteenth day of the month...that the word of the Lord came unto me, saying:—Ez. xxxii. 1, 17.

We often bring our words to God, without being equally sensible of his to us. Probably his word often comes to us when we are too engaged to hear it, or because our ear is not anointed and purged. When it does come, breaking in through the many voices that fill heart and life, we do well, as Ezekiel did, carefully to mark the days as memorable, writing on the tablet of our heart, "On this day God spake to my soul."

We do well to observe special days in our diary of the years. The day of our conversion or consecration; the day of deliveranc from overwhelming trouble; the day when He summoned us to some new duty; the day when Paradise shone around us with its golden sheen. Even Paul recorded, amid his busy life, that day when he was caught up into the third heaven.

Let us invite these Divine confidences. Let us fall on our face while God talks with us. Let us be on the outlook lest his invitations are not responded to. Let us address our heavenly Bridegroom in the words of the Song of Songs. Let me hear thy voice, for sweet is thy voice. Then though we sleep, our heart will wake; and we shall recognise the voice of our beloved, as He waits at the door, saying, "Open to me, my sister, my love, my undefiled." Ah, who shall fathom the confidences that are exchanged when the word of the Lord thus comes to us?

WEDNESDAY, November 3.

"Then shall they know that a prophet hath been among them."—Ez. xxxiii. 33.

The people looked on Ezekiel's ministrations as a delightful diversion. They regarded him as one that had a pleasant voice, and could play well on an instrument, and gathered around him with apparent eagerness and devotion. With their mouth they were profuse in expressions of love and admiration, but they had no idea of the weight and worth of his words. They looked only on the beauty of his expressions, without penetrating to the spiritual depth and meaning they contained. But when once his warnings had taken effect, and his predictions had been fulfilled, they would know that he had been something more than a sweet singer, and that there had been a prophet among them.

We do not realise the true worth of God's gifts till they are gone from us never to be recalled. That friendship was grateful and pleasing to the sense, but we did not gauge the true worth of our friend. That opportunity of hearing God's Word from the lips of an honoured minister was frittered away in casual criticisms on his manners and gestures, instead of being employed for hearing God's Word from his lips. That incident in our life touched us by its outward features only, but we failed to receive the profound lesson it was intended to convey. Alas, so often when the prophet has gone, we realise what he was, and what we have missed.

Let us be more careful to look into the heart of the circumstances and people around us; to tread as on holy ground; to ponder deeply the meaning of all that God puts into our lives; to penetrate below the surface to the eternal and divine, which are not far beneath. There is only a very thin veil between us and the Eternal Presence-chamber. Oh, for grace to look not at the things that are seen, but at those which are not seen.

THURSDAY, November 4.

"I will feed my flock, and I will cause them to lie down, saith the Lord God."—Ez. xxxiv. 15.

It is perfectly impossible to make sheep lie down unless they are satisfied or free from alarm. When the flocks lie deep in the rich pasture lands, it is because they have eaten to the full, and are quiet from fear of evil. When, therefore, the Shepherd and Bishop of our souls promises that He will so deal with us as to cause us to lie down, He undertakes to fulfil in our life these two conditions.

The Lord Jesus brings us into a good pasture, and causes us to feed in a fat pasture upon the mountains of fellowship, transfiguration, and far-reaching vision. Listen as He cries, "Eat, yea, eat abundantly, O beloved." Our restlessness arises from our refusal to obey his loving invitation to come and dine. We do not read our Bibles enough, or feed on his flesh, drinking his blood. Let us look at Scripture as the green pastures, and as we open them let us ask Him to be our guide, and to show us where the food appropriate to our need is to be found.

The Lord Jesus does more. He makes with us a covenant of peace, and even if the evil beasts do not cease out of the land, He so assures that we can dwell safely in the wilderness and sleep in the woods. He intends that we should be safe in Immanuel's land, that the bonds of our yoke should be broken, and that we should be delivered out of the hands of those who serve themselves of us.

O child of God, be less dependent on people and circumstances. Deal more constantly at first hand with Jesus. Let Him be your Shepherd. Be content that He the Lord your God is with you, and that you are his. O blessed union, in the consciousness of which we are caused to lie down.

FRIDAY, November 5.

"Whereas the Lord was there."—Ez. xxxv. 10.

Listen to the plottings of Mount Seir, waiting until Nebuchadnezzar has dispossessed Israel of their land, and with the fixed intention of entering upon its inheritance. These two nations, says the foe, and these two countries shall be mine. The children of Israel are in captivity in Habor and Gozan; the children of Judah at Babylon. What is there to prevent my entering upon their lands? But, Jehovah Shammah, the Lord was in possession, He was there.

What inspiration this is! How often do our foes plot against us, supposing that we shall fall an easy prey, and that they can divide the spoils without let. But God is there. God is in the heart, holding for Himself that which He redeemed. God is in that bed-chamber of mortal anguish and of long waiting. God is in that home which appears besieged by every kind of misfortune. O foot of the foe, thou shalt not intrude! O might of the foe, thou shalt not prevail! God is in possession! Though there seems nothing to prevent the complete over-running of the land, the mailed forces of the enemy shall break on the invisible bulwarks of the Divine presence.

Jehovah Shammah! That hallows every spot, consecrates every act, invests the meanest believer with transcendent worth, is our buttress against attack, and our glory in the midst. For God to be in the soul is the secret of its holiness, of its persistence in the heavenly way, and of its ultimate triumph over all the power of the adversary. Be sure that He is willing to become all this for you also, O weakest and most helpless man!

SATURDAY, November 6.

"But ye, O mountains of Israel, ye shall shoot forth your branches, and yield your fruit to my people of Israel, for they are at hand to come, for behold I am for you."—Ez. xxxvi. 8-9.

Very magnificent is this address to the mountains of Israel. When the prophet addressed them they were lying waste, and the people of Idumea were plotting to possess them; but this chapter is full of assurance that they should be tilled, sown, and possessed.

It seems to me as though these words may be addressed to desolate hearts that are suffering from heartrending grief. Whereas they were once full of mirth, they are now desolate and lonely. The light of their eyes has departed, the voice that made music is still, the presence that filled the home is gone. Is such your case? Behold, God will do better unto you than at your beginnings, and the old estates shall be apportioned and inherited. Bind this promise to your heart; the desolate land shall be tilled, and they shall say, This land that was desolate has become like the Garden of Eden, and the wastes are inhabited (34, 35). Do you think that you will never be glad again, the shadow will always be athwart your path, and that desolation shall hold undisputed empire? It shall not be so. O desolate mountains, ye shall shoot forth your branches, and yield fruit; and it is near to come.

But before these promises can be realised you must let your sorrow work to its full result in the purification and sanctification of your heart. The trouble has been allowed to come that you might know the vanity and evil of your own heart, and claim the promises of verses 25-29. Note specially the words, "In the day that I shall have cleansed you from all your iniquities, the wastes shall be builded, and the desolate land tilled" (v.v. 33, 34). F. B. M.

"The Christian" Almanac.

With this number we issue "The Christian" Almanac, a publication which is cordially welcomed in thousands of homes in all parts of the world. We have from time to time heard of much blessing attending the reading of selections from Holy Scripture such as appear in these wall sheets. Having been prayerfully gathered, and in the same spirit assigned to the various days of the week, these brief excerpts from "the Divine Library" have been remarkably used of God to minister stimulus and encouragement, comfort and direction to weary and waiting servants of Christ in their daily round of life and work.

This year the artist's pencil has been engaged upon the delineation of scenes in the life of John the Baptist—a truly great man. Think of him—Forerunner of the Messiah, yet utterly self-effacing: "He must increase, but I must decrease." Though "the Prophet of the Highest" and "filled with the Holy Spirit" from his birth, he was content to be "a voice" heralding his Lord, a preacher of repentance, saying, "Behold the Lamb of God!" In the words of Christ he was "more than a prophet"; he had the distinction of linking the Jewish and Christian dispensations, closing the former, inaugurating the latter. Throughout Judea "all counted John as a prophet"; we know him as one who witnessed with great boldness, even unto death, for the truth of God. John was one of the noblest of men; of him Christ testified with the emphasis of "Verily, I say unto you," that "among them that are born of women there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist."

The Almanac engravings are nine in number, the first of which depicts the appearing of the angel to Zacharias, with the words: "Fear not...thy prayer is heard" (Luke i. 13). The next scene represents Mary entering the house of Elisabeth and saluting her (Luke i. 39, 40). These incidents are amongst the most striking in the story, the former almost tragic, the latter intensely human. The third engraving helps us to realise the statement: "And Zacharias asked for a writing table, and wrote, His name is John." From childhood to manhood means a lapse of many years: hence the fourth picture shows John in the full vigour of life in the attitude of prayer amid desert scenes. Having "waxed strong in spirit," the day was approaching for "his showing unto Israel." Before this public appearance, however, "The word of the Lord came unto John in the wilderness" (Luke iii. 2). Before we start on work for God we must be sure as to our orders; work that is the execution of a Divine commission cannot fail of fruition. In rapid succession the remaining illustrations recall the influential career and strenuous activity of the ascetic prophet.

First among these comes the scene in which the prophet declares his mission, telling the priests and Levites from Jerusalem that he was "the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Make straight the way of the Lord" (John i. 19-23). Then we have a glimpse of the Jordan, with a group of spectators on the bank; John is administering the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins. These baptismal scenes suggest some of the most stirring passages in the sturdy prophet's eventful life. At this time he was brought face to face with characters for whom his only words were those of reproof and warning. This ministry of rebuke, so faithfully performed, he continued to exercise, as occasion demanded, throughout his life; and the last three engravings are descriptive of one such scene and its consequences. They are entitled—"John Denouncing Herod," "Herod's Birthday Feast," and "John in Prison," all of them based on Matt. xiv. 1-10.

There is a wonderful pathos in the words that end the story of John's death. "And his disciples came, and took up his body, and buried it, and went and told Jesus." When John was alive his disciples went after Jesus; now that he is dead, to whom shall the remnant of his followers go, sure of a word of welcome and sympathy? His career has lessons for life; his end tells us how to die to the glory of God. It is interesting to note how the prophet's influence survived him at the corrupt court of Herod. The king said of Jesus, "This is John the Baptist; he is risen from the dead." Sooner or later God vindicates his people; He "brings forth their righteousness as the light and their judgment as the noon-day." Hence the name of the Baptist has come down the centuries with a peculiar fragrance; in the ranks of heaven's nobility, this man stands out as a great preacher of righteousness and a fearless witness for God.

Shankhill-road Mission Buildings, Belfast (see page 17).

Home of Industry.

A bright and happy band of Christian workers assembled here last Wednesday evening from East and West, North and South of our busy city, missionaries on furlough from China, and heads of home missions being well represented. The message was pungent and encouraging. Col. Oldham read the three passages from the Gospels on "salt," and brought out the lessons to be gathered from each. The counsels for the strain of every-day work were excellent; one lesson was pressed most lovingly—the advantage of having one morning hour with God alone over his Word.

During the last hour the senior workers of the Home of Industry presented each their branch of service, Miss Macpherson commenced by telling of the youthful writer of the following letter:—

"Dear Mrs. Merry,—I was very pleased to have your letter, and to hear that many of the little girls had found a home, and all I hope is that they have got as comfortable a home as I have, for I have a very lovely home, and Mr. and Mrs. Gare are very kind to me, and I would not like to go away from them for anything. We all went to the woods for two hours. I never had been in the wood before. I pray morning and night for my little companions in the Home, and for you all.—Yours respectfully, Alice."

The writer was found by the police last spring in a street near the Home, shrieking with pain, and her body much bruised by cruel treatment from her father. She was taken to the workhouse, kept there six weeks, and sent on with a note, "Could we do anything for her?"

She was at once placed in the Training Home, and it was suggested that she should be placed out in Canada, where she would get the schooling she desired, and which she was kept from in order to nurse the landlady's baby; this was why she was so unmercifully beaten. The banker's lady who has adopted the forlorn little Alice of nine years old, writes how she is loved by all, only she fears that she has sustained injuries through her father's ill-usage. There are many young children needing protection from their drunken parents. City missionaries and mission workers should watch for such for Christ's sake. C. S.

"Is Sunday Cycling Permissible?"

Replying to a correspondent, presumably an "Endeavourer," as to whether cycling is permissible on the Lord's Day, Dr. Francis E. Clark, the founder of the Christian Endeavour movement, replied as follows:—

"Your question is one of genuine moment, my dear friend, and one that cannot be dismissed with a single word of authority. Many a young person has wished, I know, that there was some prophet or pope to decide these questions for him. But, thank God, Protestantism has no pope, and our manhood or womanhood is developed as it could be in no other way by facing just such questions for ourselves, recognising our accountability and responsibility, and deciding what is right for us as individuals before God.

"There are two things to be considered in deciding this question. One is the effect of Sunday bicycling on yourself. You say that it will do you no harm, but rather good. Perhaps you are right. But of that I am not quite sure. Are you certain that it will not lower your reverence for the Sabbath, and your general moral standard more than a quiet walk for fresh air and exercise?

"But, after all, this question, and many others like it, resolves itself into Cain's old question 'Am I my brother's keeper?' No man liveth to himself, and no man rideth his bicycle to himself. We are involved in so complete a network of relationship one with another that others must be considered in deciding any such question.

"Will your bicycle lead somebody else to break the Sabbath? Will your spin before church keep somebody away from church who otherwise would go? Shall you be counted among Sabbath-breakers, and your profession of religion be discounted, if you take a ride first for exercise on Sunday morning? Will your example do something to break down the sanctity of the Sabbath? All these questions must be settled before you join the ranks of Sunday bicyclists.

"Does this seem a narrow, cramped sort of life—always looking for somebody else, always living in fear of public opinion? Ah, there is one motive that raises any such self-denial above the fear of public opinion, above mere expediency. It is the same motive that has sent martyrs to the stake and missionaries to the cannibals. 'The love of Christ constraineth us.' Therefore, we will not ride if it will bring dishonour upon his name, or will cause others to desecrate his day."

Hailsham Gospel Mission.—The fourteenth annual report shows that a good unsectarian work is carried on voluntarily by a number of working men. Open-air and indoor Gospel meetings are held all the year round. The hall, which holds nearly 200, is often packed on Sunday evenings. An encouraging mission has been held by Mr. J. Albinson. The meetings have been largely attended by many who seldom if ever attend any place of worship. Much fruit is anticipated from this effort.

Rev. Henry Montgomery, M.A.
(BELFAST).

THE subject of the following interview was brought up to a business life. Led to a knowledge of the Saviour chiefly through a mother's prayers and the faithful admonition of a life-long and loving friend, he sought to serve the Lord in a feeble way up to the year 1874. This was the year of deliverance to many. Mr. Moody, with his friend Mr. Sankey, visited Belfast, and not only roused that city in particular, but the entire province of Ulster, to seek after the Lord. Amongst other places awakened was the town of Bangor, near Belfast, chiefly through that well-known evangelist and pastor Rev. H. M. Williamson, D.D., Belfast. It was at this time that Mr. Montgomery was loosed and let go, and it is to Dr. Williamson as the instrument that he feels most deeply indebted for spiritual stimulus and light then received.

A little later the Belfast Y.M.C.A. invited him to speak at a Gospel meeting at which several clergymen were assisting. One of them (still alive, Rev. Geo. Shaw) took the young evangelist aside after the service, and asked him if he had ever thought of the ministry. The reply was, "Yes," but that it was next door to impossible. "Not so," was the reply, and there and then he suggested giving him employment as missionary-assistant in his own congregation. God opened up the way marvellously, and Mr. Montgomery took a full university and theological course, graduating with honours both at B.A. and M.A. examinations. He was ordained over a small charge called Albert-street Presbyterian Church, where God gave large blessing to his servant. The old church had to be pulled down and rebuilt to accommodate double the previous one. It seats 1250 persons. Inquirers were found regularly waiting after the Sunday evening service, and many received the Saviour. Apart from those uniting by letter, about 1500 have joined the church for the first time on profession of their faith, during the fifteen years' ministry. Church and schools were built and paid for, as Mr. Montgomery would not use, for God's work and worship, a house in debt. Nor could he touch bazaars or any of the worldly methods adopted for raising funds to extend the Redeemer's Kingdom. The Lord graciously sent in the money by the time the buildings were completed.

The church life and work still go vigorously forward, finding outlet in the foreign field, in open-air meetings, tract distribution, and various forms of Christian activity, including six Sunday schools with 2250 children and young people. On a summer Sabbath evening about five years ago, as Mr. Montgomery was speaking to a regular congregation of about 1000 people, the Lord laid heavily on his heart the condition of those outside the pale of the ordinary church services. In the midst of a Gospel sermon the message which seemed to be spoken in the ear of his soul with unusual directness and power was, "This is a very encouraging congregation to come to an unadvertised service in an out-of-the-way church, but go to those outside." An open-air service was forthwith announced, and led by the pastor, a large contingent of the congregation making their way to the crowded thoroughfare known as the Shankhill-road; and thus was started the mission, particulars of which are now to follow.

What led you to undertake this particular effort for the Belfast masses?

I had the rare opportunity of seeing one Sunday evening, some years ago, the congested condition of the streets where the working classes congregate and parade during church hours; and the astounding thing was that, while many of the churches were half and more than half empty, the streets were crowded, chiefly with young people, and a good many of them under the influence of drink. Moreover, it had been borne home upon me that Belfast was developing the features of other large cities in the kingdom. This is the century of cities, and in many respects they are alike.

There is an experience which has been as uniform as a law of nature, viz., that a larger margin between what a wage-earner has and needs means an increased impetus to the drink trade and other crying evils; that as the public-houses become larger, gaudier death-traps, the slums grow more slummy, and life in them harder and more bitter. We have found that the people are increasingly cutting adrift from the regular religious agencies as the population increases. There is an alarming number in all our large cities outside the churches, and there has been growing up a feeling of estrangement which is at once humiliating and grave. The ordinary working man, generally speaking, is no longer a church-going man. Within this non-church-going class in every city will be found the pests of society, the habitual criminal, the corner boy (frequently the criminal in embryo), the fallen and depraved, the decent and professional poor, the enormous army of habitual drinkers and drunkards, gamblers, tramps, loafers, and those not only careless of Divine things but opposed to God and all Evangelical religion; one found the children demoralised, the devil evidently aiming at ruining the race through its childhood. Generally speaking, therefore, the considerable cleavage between the churches and the people, the relaxation of moral restraints, the confirmed apathy amongst the masses regarding spiritual things, the increase in drunkenness, gambling, love of pleasure, etc., the appalling condition of things which it is to be feared may be found in any city of the kingdom as well as Belfast—were loud Macedonian cries to come over and help.

What agencies do you make use of?

(1) We have a Gospel service every night, preceded by an open-air meeting, at which bright and clear testimony is given as to the power of the Lord Jesus to save and keep.

(2) We have also a system of visitation in the homes and haunts of the poor, the tramps, and the depraved. We likewise visit periodically the public-houses, with that brief text illustrated, "As ye go, preach." One helper goes during the day to the publican for conversation. Some have been uneasy, but at least it smooths the way for the worker who may call about closing time.

(3) Midnight missions for drunken men. This may seem a strange kind of agency, but nevertheless we have found it work well. Either I or some of my helpers visit the public-houses of the district, and also the pawnshops, about nine o'clock, with invitations to a midnight mission for men. Then there is a season of earnest prayer. Afterwards, about 10.45 p.m., two workers are placed at the door of each public-house in the district, ready to invite those emerging at closing time to the meeting, and also to assist them there. Another set of workers patrol the road in couples, and bring in all and sundry. We have had as many as 100 men on one campaign night of this class; our ordinary number is about fifty. We have a worker for every man brought in. God has sobered and saved people in connection with this effort.

(4) We also assist in the direction of free meals, food, fuel, and clothing judiciously distributed; we help, too, at getting work for those requiring it, and we take an interest in slum children, feed them, and try to help them in various ways; we have periodical suppers for the very lowest in the community, at which we invariably preach a free, full, and present salvation.

How has the mission succeeded thus far?

It has pleased God to give us much encouragement. We have found that no new Gospel is needed. The old one is still God's power unto salvation. We have found slaves of drink sobered and saved, and able to go home with their week's wages in their pockets, even when the footpath has been sprinkled with rum and sawdust. We have found lads able and willing to give up the low singing saloons; rather has it been that all their desires for such things vanished with the incoming of the Lord into their lives. We have found men with a passion for knowing the latest tips in the gambling world half a dozen times in the day absolutely set free from its enslavement; we have found the young girl abandoned to the pleasures of the cheap dance and gay dress set free from its tremendous fascination by the power of the Holy Ghost. Praise God for a Gospel which is a positive up-to-date message to men! It really is as efficient an instrument as ever for the regeneration of men.

Have you any special plans for the future?

We are now providing a large Mission building in the Shankhill-road, and along Carlow-street. There we propose to have a medical mission for the poor, a large hall to seat about 2000 persons, and a residential settlement. It is designed to push Gospel temperance work, to provide Bible and other classes, and to promote boys' and girls' clubs. The scheme also includes a night shelter and lodging-house, where clean, comfortable beds can be obtained, a soup kitchen where cheap nourishing food may be purchased cheaply, and a labour bureau to find employment for the deserving. These buildings, when completed, will cost us from £13,000 to £14,000, but at present we propose only to lay out £10,000. This amount will include a large hall, small halls, and a suite of medical mission buildings with two storeys of shops and offices in the front.

On Saturday afternoon last, the foundation stones of the Mission buildings spoken of by Mr. Montgomery, were laid in the presence of an assembly at once large and representative. The Moderator of the General Assembly presided, and the proceedings were unique for several reasons. Trowels were not used in laying the stones, but carved bog-oak mallets instead. These mallets were presented to the ladies and gentlemen officiating by six men rescued through the mission; one was formerly a noted gambler, four had been delivered from the depths of drunkenness, and one from a life of theft It was a very touching sight to see the two extremes of society thus meeting, and brought to mind the words of the Apostle, "And such were some of you; but ye are washed: but ye are sanctified: but ye are justified," etc.

The Moderator made a strong statement bearing on the condition of the masses, and was followed by Rev. H. Montgomery. The Right Hon. Thos. Sinclair and Rev. W. Park moved and seconded warm thanks to kind friends who assisted at the stone-laying; these were Mr. Young, of Fenaghy; Mr. Forster Green, Mr, Workman, of Glastry, Rev. D. A. Taylor, Mr. Jas. Henderson (proprietor of the Belfast News Letter), and Mr. Alex. Crawford, J.P. Rev. Dr. Crawford Johnson, and Mr. J. MacDermott also spoke.

It may be added that Mr. Forster Green, a prominent member of the Society of Friends (whose wife laid a stone), spoke a few kind words, and gave a cheque for £1,000. Other friends, including a large second contribution from Mr. Montgomery's congretion, added £1200, so that the foundation-stone offerings reached about £2200. As the sum of £3000 had been previously contributed, the total now amounts to fully £5000; there are many who have yet to help. The mission continues its meetings nightly, and is reaching some of the very lowest in the community. The promoters glorify God for all He has done. "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto Thy name give glory."

Awakening in Algiers.

The reports of the North Africa Mission have of late been exceedingly interesting. Letters from Djemaa, Sahridj, describe a movement of much promise among the young people. Mme. Rolland, writing on Sept. 22, says: "The Spirit of God has been working among us with such power that all the lads present at a recent meeting gave themselves to the Lord, those who had already professed Christ surrendering themselves for greater blessing and deliverance. We cannot express the joy we feel at hearing Said-ou-Rah'moun, the young Kabyle who was long in the service of Mr. Cuendet, and for some months with us, ask Jesus to save him. We loved him much, and often spoke to him of the Saviour. He helped Mr. Cuendet in the translation of the Gospel and was very attentive, but when we asked him to turn, to trust in Christ, he would only answer with a smile, 'I cannot believe that Jesus is the Son of God.' We have continued to pray for him, and to believe that God would reveal the truth to him. How true it is that it is by God's Spirit that the change of heart is wrought!

"On Sunday morning, at six o'clock, we had a blessed season of worship, all the lads declaring their decision for Christ. Miss Smith afterwards invited them to accompany us into the village. There, before all the people, they told the great things Jesus had done for them. They spoke the Gospel before their comrades and relatives, and bowed in prayer to Christ the Son of God. Each evening we have a testimony meeting. Friends of the work would be delighted to hear the statements. Some of the lads visited a sick friend and prayed in the house; others have spoken for Christ while breaking stones; and one, Said-ou-Rah'moun, who used to spend much of his time in card-playing, says, 'I am so happy! I have no longer any desire to go to the café.' Thus, salvation has become the great subject of conversation, and we are seeing several souls pass from death to life. We feel that this awakening is of God, and we trust that those who believe in the promises that depend upon faith will remember it in earnest prayer to our heavenly Father."

Mr. Henry Varley in Toronto.

In company with Mrs. Varley, I am intending a protracted tour in the States and Canada, where a "wide door and effectual" is opened.

The night following arrival the second mission began in Pittston, Pa. The work has been deep and real, mainly, though not exclusively, with believers. The havoc caused by "the higher criticism" is seen here. The ungodly are only too ready to make excuse for giving up all interest in the churches or special services, for "who knows what of the Bible is true or has authority?"

The work of God, by which I mean "repentance toward God and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ," always difficult, has been rendered still more so by the subtle undermining of the Word of God during the last fifteen years. Much of that criticism is now proved to be without any foundation. The Word of God is vindicated, but those who have been deceived by it, where are they? The poison has been scattered.

From Pittston we journeyed to Toronto, where a number of servants of Christ gave us hearty welcome. For a solid fortnight we had "a great truths campaign," and large audiences thronged to hear the Word of life.

The culture of this city has not been divorced from the fundamental power of Christian doctrine. Regard for revealed truth, hold upon and exaltation of the Christ of God, has without question done much to make it a stronghold of "the power of godliness" and of Evangelical teaching. Its danger just now is lest the undercurrent of ungodliness which exists, and chafes against the bands of Divine restraint, should overflow and hurry true liberty into worldly licence. The people of Toronto need reminding that "the price of liberty is eternal vigilance."

The brethren from Keswick were there the week before we arrived. We heard good accounts of their testimony. The Christian life of the city is vigorous, and the recoil from the rationalism and neology of certain teachers is pronounced and welcome.

The Walmer-road Baptist Church, in which we held several meetings, is one of the most simple and beautiful structures in the world. That is saying a good deal, but it is true. Erected mainly through the unwearied energy of Mr. Elmore Harris, a devoted and noble-hearted man of God, it stands as an illustration of what men of commercial prominence may accomplish. A large employer of labour, a scholar, and an able preacher, this brother is indeed a man whose friendship and love are greatly valued.

This is written in the midst of the hallowed scenes which we are witnessing in New York in connection with the work of Dr. A. B. Simpson and the Christian Alliance. There is fire, enthusiasm, and power here. Of that there can be no question.

New York, Oct. 12. Henry Varley.

Work in Montreal.—A correspondent of the Montreal Witness writes:—The American Presbyterian Mission, Inspector-street, is a place it would be safe to say many never even heard of; and yet there is a great work going on in that part of the city. Souls are being rescued and shown the way of salvation, the drunkard and those who have been brought low through strong drink are shown that there is only one way for them to escape, "and that by the blood of Jesus, who died to save us all." This Mission has been in charge of Mr. John Currie, evangelist, since last May. His work has been wonderfully blessed. There is a strong desire among the people that Mr. Currie's appointment should be made a permanent one.

The Gospel at Panama.

In a communication from Dr. Harry Guinness, describing his journey from New York towards Peru, he thus speaks of Panama:—

"Mr. Geddes, the Wesleyan minister here, was having his anniversary meetings the day after our arrival. Peters and I both spoke afternoon and evening. Special services were at once arranged for the two successive evenings. The people came out in splendid numbers, and we have had two blessed opportunities of pressing the claims of Christ and the world. The congregations have been deeply attentive and solemn, and at the close on each evening twelve or fifteen men and women came up and knelt at the penitent form, confessing their desire and determination to be wholly the Lord's.

"The Wesleyan work here is the outcome of the earthquake in 1882, which impressed the Jamaican Methodists with the opportunity for opening out work amongst the coloured Jamaican brethren on the isthmus. Now eight stations are opened, with main centres at Colon and Panama. Two ministers from the conference were deputed to the work, and for nine years Mr. Geddes has been labouring in the upbuilding of a Christian church in this republic with marked success."

From Northern Burmah.

Writing from Bhamo, Burmah, Mr. Thomas Selkirk, of the China Inland Mission, says:—

"We hope very shortly to press forward into the country on the Chinese side of the frontier. Last dry season I spent some weeks in the city of Momein, which is eight days' journey from Bhamo, and was well received by the people. This place is said to be anti-foreign, but I met with no opposition of any consequence. The mandarin did not care to have us settle there at the time; but as the place has been opened to foreign trade, and a consul is to be stationed there, open opposition from the officials must break down.

"We hope to open a station in Momein; and, with the aid of a missionary who has spent some years in the Yunan province, we shall endeavour to take the Gospel to the surrounding district. The hill tribes, who were greatly feared twenty years ago, are now completely held in check on both sides of the frontier. We hope in time to have a chain of stations to connect with Yunan. The road from here to Tali-fu is certainly a rough one, but it is not dangerous. Mrs. Selkirk and I travelled over the roughest parts of it, mounted on sure-footed, steady-going Chinese mules, and greatly enjoyed the journey. Missionaries need not fear to adopt this route to reach Yunan, and the saving in time over the route viâ Shanghai would be considerable."

Reading for Women in China.

Rev. Stewart McKee, of North Shansi, writing on the application of the numeral type for the teaching of reading in the Mandarin-speaking provinces of China, says:—

"For some time it has been a burden to me that our womenfolk were unable to read their Bibles, and in spite of all efforts, not one made anything like progress. After six months' hard work at Chinese characters one woman could read five chapters in St. John. That was the best. Our dialect differs so much from any in which the New Testament is printed in that Roman alphabet that that system is useless for us. On the other hand, although this is a Mandarin-speaking district, the language is so different from book Mandarin, that it is almost another dialect, so the women cannot understand what they read.

"At last I think I can cry 'Eureka! I have found it!' Mr. Murray, of the National Bible Society at Peking, has a system for the blind, which he has also adapted for the seeing. I have set to and learned the system, and in twenty-five hours' work I mastered it sufficiently to read St. Luke's Gospel, and write any word in our dialect. You know there is nothing sharp in me, so the fact that I learned it so easily proves its simplicity. I am now teaching it to a class of men, who are greatly charmed with it, and the ladies are learning it in order to teach the women. In fancy, I can see the day when all our women and girls will be able to read their Bibles for themselves, which will be a boon indeed."

"Mary hath Chosen."

Luke x. 42.

SOME persons never seem to know their own minds. It is too much for them to decide about even trifling matters. They will pore for hours over a time-table without knowing even then which train they intend to take. The choice of a birthday present would seem to be almost more of a worry than a pleasure, to judge by their anxious faces. Outsiders feel sometimes as if even an unwise choice would be better than the agony of indecision of such dear friends, and we are sure there must be great discomfort to those who are themselves unable to decide upon any matter.

It is a very uncomfortable thing to be undecided. After all, though, as regards the little things of this life, it may not be very serious to be unable to make a choice. The boy who hesitates between a book or a knife may defer his decision without great risk. The girl who cannot make up her mind as to whether she will walk, or drive, or practise, or sketch, may end by doing neither, but the consequences are such as can be borne.

The one choice which cannot be deferred without tremendous risks is the choice for eternity. And yet with regard to this choice there is, perhaps, more indecision than with regard to any other. Other things are desirable, but "one thing is needful." The "one thing needful" is, nevertheless, the one thing which too many think can be attended to at any time in the future. God says "Choose ye this day." The only reply is a vague "to-morrow."

The Lord Jesus commended Mary not because she intended at some time to choose "the better part"—as we cannot but believe that everyone of our dear young searchers intend to choose it at some time or other—but because she had passed over from the ranks of the undecided to the ranks of the decided. "Mary hath chosen." Mary could have joined with all her heart in singing the simple but expressive words;—

My heart is fixed, eternal God,
Fixed on Thee;
And my immortal choice is made,
Christ for me!

Suppose the blessed Saviour were looking through the lists of those who do these Bible Searchers so regularly and so nicely (and does He not most certainly look?) would He be able to say of one and another "—— hath chosen that good part?" Put your own name into the empty space, and ask yourself if He could say it of you. If not, why not?

Surely it is the wonder of wonders that you are not anxious to possess, and at once, the one thing that is "needful," the one thing that can never be "taken away" from you!

Is it not unwise to defer as long as you think it safe to do so? Is it wise, is it safe to delay a single day?

When you are eager to reach home after a long turn at school, do you seek permission to travel by the very last train that would convey you there?

If the sea divides you from some beloved ones, will you take passage in the very last vessel which is timed to visit the distant shore?

Those things would be wiser things to do than is the delay as to choosing Christ and heaven as your everlasting portion.

He chose you, come choose Him
And make Him your Guide
Fear only to lose Him,
Fear nothing beside.

Young Christians' Missionary Union — The president, Rev. F. B. Meyer, suggests that in view of the Missionary Congress, from Nov. 13 to 17, Sunday, Nov. 14, be set apart, as widely as possible, for the advocacy of the claims of foreign missions. He asks ministers to co-operate on "Missionary Union Sunday" by reserving a part of the day for a special sermon, address or prayer-meeting, with a view to aid in stimulating interest among young Christians.

"How Davie's Lazy Bone was Broken."

"Davie, I think I left my spectacles upstairs," said grandpa, after he had searched the sitting room for his accustomed helpers.

"Oh, dear!" began Davie, who always thought it a great nuisance to go up and down stairs unless he wanted something for himself, and couldn't get anyone else to go. But before he had finished his grumbling sentence, little Lillie put down her work, and, with a cheery "I'll get them, grandpa," was on her way upstairs.

"Davie, you forgot to put your tools away," mamma said a little later.

"Oh, dear! It's such a bother to put everything away!" fretted Davie. "Can't I leave them where they are till to-morrow, for I want to use them again?"

"No; I want them put away at once," said mamma, in such a decided tone that Davie knew she required instant obedience.

"Oh, dear! I never can learn this long lesson," he grumbled that evening when he sat down to prepare his recitation for the next day. "It's such a lot of work to translate all the santences."

Dr. Morton had dropped in for a little chat with Davie's father, and he looked up as he heard the impatient exclamation.

"What do you think I have been doing to-day, Davie?"

"What, sir?" asked Davie, glad of a diversion from his books.

"Breaking a little girl's arm."

"Do you mean mending it, doctor?" asked Davie, thinking that the doctor had made a mistake.

"No; I broke it," answered the doctor. "Some time ago a little girl broke her arm, and it was very badly set, and had been so stiff ever since that she could not use it as she wanted to. She makes lace very cleverly, and her earnings have been a great help to the family; but since her arm was hurt she has not been able to work at all. We held a consultation at the hospital to-day, and decided that the only way to help the child would be to break her arm again and reset it."

"I think I'd rather never be able to do anything than have that done," exclaimed Davie.

"Why, that's unfortunate!" remarked the doctor. "I've been thinking that there is a bone about you that ought to be broken very soon, if you expect to become an active man. I've been meaning to mention it to you for some time."

Davie turned pale. He was not so fond of bearing pain.

"Where is the bone?" he asked, with a frightened tremor in his voice. "Will you have to break it?"

"No; I can't very well break it for you," answered the doctor. You can break it for yourself better than anyone can break it for you. It is called the 'lazy bone.'"

"Oh, that is what you mean!"

And he was so relieved that he smiled at the doctor's words.

"Yes, my boy, that is the bone I mean; and it is a bone you ought to break very soon, if you ever expect to be of any use in this world. It will take a pretty determined effort to break it, for it's one of the toughest ones I know anything about; but you can break it if you make the effort. Will you ask God to help you."

"Yes, sir, I will," promised Davie, manfully, his face flushed with mortification at the thought that he had earned a reputation for laziness.

And he did try, and with God's help became quite a different boy.

Rev. John McNeill in Scotland.

[By Our Own Correspondent.]

HAVING made a successful commencement of his winter's work at Huntly, away on the upper reaches of the Deveron, the evangelist moved southwards to Clydesbank and Helensburgh, on the lower reaches of the Clyde. There he was privileged to proclaim his message not only to the artisan population of the former hive of industry, but to the comfortable rich folk whose desirable residences dot the banks of the Gareloch. It is the same Gospel for all, rich or poor, and Mr. McNeill summons all alike to pass through the lowly gate of repentance and faith, into the land of possession and peace. There is a sweet reasonableness about his presentation of the positive aspects of salvation, as well as a very faithful stripping away of the filthy rags of self-righteousness, and one wonders how any soul can resist the wooings of the Master as He pleads through the anointed lips of the evangelist. Probably many do, but many more do not.

During the past and present weeks Mr. McNeill has transferred the warfare to Dunfermline, in the Kingdom of Fife. Here he is on classic soil, not only in the annals of Scottish royalty, but in the history of Scottish revivals. The U.P. Church in Queen Anne-street, where all the evening meetings have been held, is rich in memories of the sainted Erskine, whose statue fronts the entrance to the church, and is said to cover the very spot on which his pulpit was erected. The building in its present form is a compact and spacious one, seated for some two thousand people. Needless to say, great crowds have resorted to it night after night, attracted by the burning eloquence and Celtic fervour of the preacher. If there be any who are beginning to tremble lest the incursions of the critics should they should attend a few of Mr. McNeill's meetings. A more Biblical preacher there could not be. He never seems to wish to go outside the Scriptural narratives, selected impartially from both Testaments. In his hands these narratives live and move with thoroughly modern meanings and applications, and with all the vividness of detail of the cinematograph.

Take for example the two gatherings of last Sunday evening—one for women at five and one for men at seven. On both occasions the great church was crowded—in the afternoon especially so, with many hundreds turned away. In Dunfermline the women are said to be five times as numerous as the men, so many of them are needed for the looms of the fine linen factories. To this splendid array of the gentler sex Mr. McNeill discoursed with indescribable power and pathos on the Gospel story of the woman who vainly tried the doctors of Palestine for twelve long, weary years, and was healed of her wasting complaint in a moment at the touch of her faith. It was a deeply interesting study to watch the faces in the audience, and see them gradually thawing under the genial warmth of the preacher's beautiful and winsome exposition. Fife folk are commonly regarded as being shrewd and hard to move. But no amount of natural or acquired stolidity could stand the sunshine which streams forth at every pore of this ancient story in Mr. McNeill's setting of it. Even to one like myself, well accustomed to the evangelist's method, the fascination and melting impressiveness of this discourse were marvellous.

So it was, later on, at the men's meeting, when Mr. McNeill drew the portraits of the three men whom Jesus called to follow Him—one too quick, the second too slow, and the last too soft. For well over an hour the sermon lasted, and the attention up to the last second was rapt. Near the close of a specially pathetic bit of illustrative incident the throng actually broke into a subdued cheer, so thorough and complete was the preacher's grip of them. The mission throughout has been full of enjoyment and fruitfulness. On three afternoons of the week meetings were held in the Free Abbey Church, and the same arrangement holds good for the present week. The mission closes on Friday evening, after which Mr. McNeill will take a short rest before entering on a month's work at Montrose and Arbroath.

Insane in the East.

Mr. Theo. Waldmeier, whose great project on behalf of the poor insane of Syria and the Holy Land has several times been brought before our readers, hopes in about a fortnight to leave England for Beyrout, visiting Dutch and German centres en route. Since returning from his tour in America, Mr. Waldmeier has travelled considerably in England and Ireland, and enlisted the sympathy of many new friends in his benevolent enterprise.

All authorities on the treatment of mental diseases agree that the cottage system is the most desirable, and promises the best results. The homes in Syria will accordingly be established on the cottage plan, no more than twenty inmates to be allocated to each, under the headship of a matron. This plan allows of a beginning being at once made in carrying out the scheme which Mr. Waldmeier has at heart; and once a start has been made, it is certain that extension will soon be possible, so as to meet in a larger measure the pressing need.

The humane treatment of the insane is almost unknown in Eastern lands. Rather, it is common for the patient to suffer gross ill-usage, through the superstition, ignorance, or heartlessness of those who should be his dearest friends. Helpless ignorance is certainly responsible for much pain and privation on the part of the insane in the East; hence the news that an institution will shortly be established for the scientific and merciful care of such persons has travelled with unexpected rapidity right into the interior of Syria. Accordingly, Mr. Waldmeier has letters from the spot saying that many are impatiently waiting for his return. In fact, some have so far anticipated matters that they have conveyed their afflicted friends to Beyrout to place them under Christian care!

This undertaking may well engage the deep interest of philanthropists, for it appears that under proper medical treatment fifty per cent. of the insane are cured. And when "clothed and in their right mind," the poor people combine a true religious devotion with their gratitude to Christ's servant who takes pity on them. Mr. Waldmeier will be glad during the next few days to embrace opportunities to explain his scheme. He may be addressed to the care of Sir Richard Tangye, treasurer of the work, 35, Queen Victoria-street, E.C.

Homes for Little Boys.

An excellent musical programme, with displays of physical exercises, was carried out on Saturday afternoon in Exeter Hall by inmates of these institutions. Sir George Williams, who presided, enthusiastically advocated the cause of the Homes, dwelling upon the fact that in these Homes at Farningham and Swanley, for homeless and orphan boys respectively, the good seed of the Kingdom is sown in soil which would otherwise be choked with weeds of evil; while the lads are also lovingly trained for lives of useful labour.

Canon McCormick declared that if we look after the lads and lasses of our country, God will look after us as a nation. Such institutions as these afford many a lad shelter from sinful surroundings. Moreover, they are places of varied nurture; and the spectacle before them on the platform, in tidy, clean, and intellectual lads, was most charming.

Rev. H. Russell Wakefield, rector of St. Mary's, Bryanston-square, said that these institutions foster good habits in lives which would otherwise be undisciplined. Child life without brightness must be entirely contrary to God's will; yet we may see little faces all around us, looking, under the cares of a warped existence older than grown-ups. Thank God that the number of such are lessened by these Homes. To the advantages of education in the truest sense, and the atmosphere of loving care, the institutions add the greatest boon of all, by training in the fear and admonition of the Lord.

A short address followed by Rev. John E. Wakerley, superintendent of the Wesleyan London Central Mission. The secretary of the institutions is Mr. Wm. Robson, and the London office is at 25, Holborn-viaduct, E.C.

"Paul in Melita and Rome."—Acts xxviii. 1-16.

Golden Text:—"We know that all things work together for good to them that love God.—Rom. viii. 28.

THE previous chapter shows that the incidents of the perilous voyage fulfilled the vision of Paul—the crew getting safe to shore, but the ship itself going to pieces. Here, as in many other cases, the bad were saved on account of the good. Someone suggested that all the prisoners should be killed to prevent their escape (Paul among them), but the centurion wanted to save Paul, and so all the others were saved for the sake of consistency.

Note.—(1) How the Maltese received the crew. They were not savages. All people who did not possess the privileges of Roman citizenship were called "barbarians," just as we to day use the term "foreigners" of all who are not British. The shipwrecked people were drenched and benumbed with the cold, wintry seas. So the first thing was to kindle a fire on the beach (the spot where the the wreck occurred was many miles from any town). The Christian charity of these Maltese is very striking. Often have shipwrecked crews been plundered and murdered, but these men received nought but kindness at the hands of strangers. Point out that if pagans can act so how much more should we who have the example of Christ. (2) Paul assisted in preparing this fire. Out of his bundle of sticks came a viper, which fastened on his hand. The Maltese knew the creature too well. They thought that Paul must be a murderer who, although he had escaped the sea, was being pursued by the fates on land. But when their waiting eyes saw no harm come to him, they thought he must be a god (3-6). The teacher should compare with this superstition those which existed in our own country in Saxon times—e.g., the ordeal by bread. The bread would choke a person if he were guilty of the crime with which he was charged.

II. Paul's Conduct at Malta.—Paul and his companions were received for three days into the house of the chief man Publius. For this kindness, doubtless, the chief man of the island expected no payment, but Paul was always self-reliant and independent. He did not like to be under any obligation. Teacher should illustrate this by referring to Paul's action in gathering sticks for the fire (3); It was not his ambition to be waited on, but to serve. And Publius was more than amply repaid. His father was healed by Paul's prayers and actions (8). The disease from which he suffered was one which has always been common in Malta; and as the report of this single cure was spread, many other sufferers came, and were healed also. Note—that although we cannot heal the sick, the prayer of a "righteous man availeth much" still; and wherever a good man goes, a halo of benediction surrounds him.

During the three months' stay in Malta we may be sure Paul did all in his power to tell of Jesus by word and deed. The shipwreck was one of the greatest blessings that ever came to Malta, for by it they were allowed to "entertain an angel unawares." The angel left behind him heavenly messages which the people did not soon forget. They were not slow to show their gratitude by paying affectionate attention to the crew, and by providing them with all the necessaries for their journey (10) (for in the wreck they had lost everything save that which they could carry about their persons).

III. Forward to Rome.—They set sail in the "Castor and Pollux"—(twin brothers, the sons of Jupiter, held by the seamen as their patron deities); so they travelled to Syracuse, Rhegium to Puteoli—(follow the journey on the map). Here they landed, finding some Christians who were delighted to entertain the Apostle, of whom they heard so much. (The Gospel was carried to Italy by the Roman Jews, who were at Jerusalem on the Day of Pentecost.) After a seven days' visit the prisoners went on to Rome (14). If Paul had any misapprehensions as to the way in which the Christians would receive him, these were set at rest by the brethren coming to Appii Forum and Three Taverns to meet him: "Seeing them he thanked God and took courage." At last Paul is in Rome, the fulfilment of a cherished ambition. A prisoner, it is true, but dwelling in his own rooms, and able to see and hear and preach to the Christians there.

Obituary.

PROFESSOR PALGRAVE.

The Professor of Poetry at Oxford died on Sunday, aged seventy-three, at his residence in London, after a few days' illness. As the compiler of "The Golden Treasury;" as a poet himself and a critic; and also for his friendship with many distinguished men, Mr. Francis Turner Palgrave occupied a notable place in the literary world, and his death removes another link with the great period of the Victorian Age. "The Golden Treasury," his most famous work, appeared in 1861, and at once attracted attention. In 1885 he was elected to the Chair of Poetry, which he held till his death.

REV. JOHN EVANS, PONTYPRIDD.

This famous Welsh Wesleyan minister, who had attained wide fame as a preacher, died suddenly in Liverpool on Saturday night at the age of 57 years. For five or six years he had been superintendent of the South Wales Wesleyan Mission, and travelled to Liverpool on Saturday with his wife, having arranged to conduct services at Shaw-street Chapel, Everton. He retired to bed about nine o'clock. Shortly after he complained of illness and died before the arrival of the doctors, who had been at once summoned. His death is attributed to failure of the heart's action. His wife had also arranged to lecture in Liverpool, but this was abandoned. Mr. Evans, who was a native of Denbighshire, commenced preaching when only seventeen years of age, and in his ministerial career he held positions in London, Liverpool, and other places. He was an author, "The Life and Times of John Wesley" and "The City Road Pulpit" being among the books he had written.

MISS HATTIE L. JUDSON.

The famine in India has claimed a missionary victim in Miss Hattie L. Judson, of Hurda, who passed away on Oct. 6, as surely as in the many who have died from actual starvation. In April last, instead of going to the hills, Miss Judson left her own work at Hurda and went to Mahoba, to help the little overworked band at that station to grapple with the claims for help that had been pouring in upon them for many months. Miss Judson took up the outside famine work, and superintended the daily distribution of pice to the three or four hundred destitute, maimed, halt, and blind ones who became pensioners of the Mission, as well as the distribution of cooked food to as many children. About a month ago, Miss Judson's health began to feel the severe strain of this work, and she left Mahoba on Sept. 17 in a weak and exhausted condition, hoping, however, to get rested, and, after a change, to resume her own work. But this was not to be, and after a month's illness she was called to her rest.

THE DUCHESS OF SAXE-ALTENBURG.

The Berlin correspondent of The Times announces the death of the Duchess of Saxe-Altenburg, at Hummelshain, on Saturday last. The condition of her Highness had given grave cause for concern during the preceding week. The Duchess was born in 1824, and was the daughter of Duke Frederick Leopold, of Anhalt, and of Princess Frederica of Prussia. She was married in 1853 to the then Hereditary Prince, now reigning Duke Ernest of Saxe-Altenburg. She lived a very retired life and obtained some celebrity as the author of a pamphlet entitled "A Word to Israel," which went through five editions, and was translated into Hebrew, Yiddish, Danish, Swedish, English, French, Dutch, Italian, and Russian. The pamphlet was addressed both to Christians and to Jews, and dealt with the fulfilment of the prophecies of the Old Testament in the events chronicled in the New, inculcating, at the same, upon Christians love for the Jews and upon the Jews the necessity of believing in Christ as the realisisation of the promises of their Scriptures.

LADY MUIR.

There passed away at Dean Park House, Edinburgh, on the 17th inst., Lady Muir, wife of Sir Wm. Muir, the principal of the University, and for many years Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces of India. The deceased lady was seventy-six years of age. She married Sir William at Cawnpore in 1840, and they celebrated their golden wedding seven years ago. In India she worked side by side with her husband in every effort to benefit the people, and her own womanly power was effective in brightening the darkened lives of Indian women. Her life and influence helped Sir Wm. Muir in those works of beneficence and kindness which have made his name an abiding memorial in British India. During more than half-a-century of married life she maintained a constant Christian character, sharing her husband's counsels, and aiding him in all his endeavours for good. Lady Muir always took a deep interest in the various missionary and philanthropic enterprises in our city. She devoted herself unweariedly to the interests of the students of the University; open and frank in nature, she greatly assisted her husband to keep in touch with them, and many, particularly those from abroad, will remember the Sunday afternoons spent at her house. Even when failing strength might have been regarded as a good cause for her abating her efforts, she was unto the very last a powerful influence for good in many a young life.

The Evangelistic Field.

EVANGELIZATION SOCIETY.

During the past summer this long-established agency had forty-five tents in constant use, thirty-eight of its own and seven lent by friends for outlying places, where Romanism, Ritualism, and indifference prevail. It is found that many will come to a tent who could scarcely be persuaded to enter church, chapel, or mission-hall. In such efforts Christians of various names heartily unite—godly clergymen and ministers cordially co-operating. Might not many Christian friends do good service by securing a tent for their own district, and having evangelists from the Evangelization Society to preach? Many letters have been received telling of much blessing. The following extracts illustrate the general character of the testimony.

A minister in the neighbourhood of Bournemouth writes: "The tent has proved a centre of blessing, a centre in which Christians can meet on common ground. The congregations have kept up, and distinct results have been seen in conversions."

A clergyman writes from Halesworth, at the close of a very encouraging fourteen days' tent mission: "The Lord has been with us and has given cause for much praise. The tent has been a centre of blessing. Some who have been living in almost entire neglect of their souls, have been seen at the meetings."

Another clergyman writes from near Saxmundham as to tent services conducted by Mr. John Johnson: "We have had encouraging attendances and feel that the Holy Spirit has been working. The people listened with marked attention to the message of salvation."

From Finborough, a farmer writes that the tent services seem to have been very much blessed. "Fruit has been seen of past missions, and many have confessed that they were brought to Christ in the tent in bygone years. So it has been again this year."

Another writes he had heard of several conversions, and rejoiced greatly in the plain simple earnest manner in which the preachers delivered the Gospel.

EVANGELISTS' MOVEMENTS.

Mr. Moody is giving this month to work in Canada. Beginning at Montreal on October 9, he went on to Peterborough (20th and 21st), Brantford (22nd and 24th), Stratford (25th and 26th), Toronto (27th), finishing at Winnipeg on the 30th. The "Montreal Witness" says:—"The great evangelist who, in former years, moved thousands of hearts in Montreal, and, who, in all the large centres of population, has been a power for blessing and uplifting—Dwight L. Moody—is once more in our midst. His present visit is a flying one, and his message is chiefly to Christians, who are exhorted to a more living faith."

Mr. Alexander Clark has concluded a fortnight's mission in connection with three of the Huddersfield Baptist churches, Pole Moor, Scapegoat Hill, and Sunny Bank. The meetings, which were well attended from the first, attracted many non-churchgoers, and have produced deep impressions. Mr. Clark's visit was much appreciated by the workers in the Churches. The Mission continues this week conducted by Pastor F. J. Greening, of Bury, Lancs., assisted by Pastors T. Isles and T. R. Lewis.

A ten days' mission has been brought to a close at the Working Men's Mission, Barrow-in-Furness, by Mr. H. Driver. Christians have been greatly blessed, backsliders have been restored, and many unsaved ones have yielded themselves to Christ.

Mr. John Anderson, Superintendent of the Gordon Evangelistic Mission, Aberdeen, has retired from the direction, although remaining associated with the work. Under him the mission from small beginnings has grown in size and influence, until last summer twelve men were employed in tents and otherwise preaching the Gospel. The fruit of the mission is found in all departments of life at home, and many blessed through it have gone to other lands with the message of salvation. The secretary is now Mr. J. A. Smith, Glendon, Westburn-road, Aberdeen, to whom applications for evangelists should be addressed.

The Bristol Free Church Council has issued a letter, signed by ninety-nine ministers and workers (representing ten denominations), calling for prayer and effort on behalf of the united mission to be held in Bristol Nov. 1-14. The writer says: "The object is simple and grand, and, for Christians, beyond all cavil. It is, on the one hand, to bring home to every human heart in Bristol the claims of our Lord Jesus Christ on its affection and obedience; and, on the other, and as a consequence, to make Bristol more truly a city of God."

Mrs. Baeyertz has concluded a sixteen days' united mission at Blackheath. Afternoon and evening meetings were held daily in the Rink Hall, and from the first were very full. At the afternoon Bible readings the numbers, beginning with two or three hundred, rapidly rose to 750 and upwards. At the evening meetings the large hall was packed to the doors and beyond the doors, the passages and outer porch being crowded with those who could not find seats, and who stood for an hour and a half listening with quiet and deep attention. Night after night, after the Gospel meetings, the room behind was filled with anxious inquirers, and large numbers have professed to receive Christ. The results of Mrs. Baeyertz's mission here have been of a nature to reach far beyond anything seen on the surface.

A bright and successful eight days' mission has been conducted in Dunstable by Mr. Josiah Nix. On the opening Sunday (10th) three services were held; the afternoon meeting being for men only. The services increased in interest and attendance from day to day, and also in decision for Christ. On Saturday evening a magnificent temperance meeting was held, when 170 pledges were taken. On the following Sunday and Monday 130 more were taken. Large numbers entered the inquiry rooms, about half of them being children belonging to the Sunday-school, the remainder being of all ages, both male and female. Such a mission has perhaps never been known before in this town.

Mr. Richard Spragg's Mission at London-road Hall, Kettering, has been fraught with blessing. Every night there were those who testified that they had accepted Christ.

A fortnight's mission has been held by Mr. B. H. Angel, at Croxley Gospel Hall, Rickmansworth. Souls have been saved during the fortnight, and much interest manifested. Mr. Angel has now left for Guernsey this week, where arrangements have been made for him to evangelize for two mouths.

Mr. W. D. Dunn, who has been preaching the Gospel of late in Edinburgh and Airdrie with great success, visited Kirkcaldy, N.B., last week at the request of the Gospel Union, and from the commencement of the mission the power of the Holy Spirit was manifest. God's people were confident that rich blessing was being granted, nor have we been disappointed, for night after night the spiritual interest has been deepening, Christians are being quickened, and not a few are finding life in Christ. Mr. Dunn preached on Sunday afternoon in Dr. McNeel's parish church to a large and attentive congregation. In the evening the large Public Hall was crowded out into the streets long before the time to commence the service, so eager were the people to hear the Gospel of the grace of God. The power of God filled the place, and many decided to serve the Lord Jesus Christ. Mr. Dunn continues all this week, preaching twice a day. Will the children of God give thanks for the blessing received, and pray for still greater things to be done?

Fulham.—Great blessing has rested upon the work at Tasso Tabernacle since Mr. H. A. McKenzie began his ministry ten months ago, forty having been admitted into fellowship mostly through conversion at the services. A successful and well attended mission has been held by Ned Wright, and amongst others a notorious gambler and drunkard has professed conversion. Mr. Charles Cook is to give his lecture on "A Pictorial Tour of the World," on Thursday, Nov. 4.

Irish Notes.

The Governors of the Presbyterian Orphan Society have added 206 children to the roll.

A successful series of evangelistic services has just been held in Trinity Church, Bailieborough, by Mr. Jackson, Assembly Evangelist.

In addition to three Presbyterian students permanently engaged in colportage work in this country, twenty-three students have given up a part of their summer holidays this year to this important kind of missionary effort.

Much satisfaction is felt in the North of Ireland that Rev. Canon Crozier, D.D., of Holywood, has been elected Bishop of Ossory, vacant by the retirement of Dr. Pakenham Walsh. Dr. Crozier is an active temperance worker and a broad-minded evangelical clergyman.

An artillery officer sends some interesting details of open-air work in South Ireland, as recently witnessed by himself in company with Rev. R. C. Hallowes, of Arklow. At Enniscorthy, Mountmellick, Carlow, and Waterford, the Gospel was preached and sung to goodly crowds in the streets or markets, without serious interruption. Many listened to the message of salvation.

The inaugural meetings of the Northend Baptist Association have been held in the Baptist Church, Antrim-road, Belfast. Rev. C. S. Donald presided, and was elected chairman for the ensuing year, Mr. D. McKelvey was chosen treasurer, and Mr. John Nelson secretary. Addresses were delivered by Pastors R. F. Jeffrey, F. E. Bury, and W. Whiteside. The conference was a very successful one.

A lady correspondent, who has lately visited Dublin, reports in very encouraging terms of the work sustained by various denominations in that city. She saw something in turn of the operations of the Visiting and Medical Mission, the Prison-gate Mission, the Soldiers' Home opposite Phœnix Park, the Irish Church Missions, in various of its departments, and the Mission to Jews. Everywhere she found hearty devotion among the workers, and a great readiness on the part of the people to receive their ministrations.

Scottish Notes.

The Ayrshire Christian Endeavour Union reports eight new societies added to its roll during the past twelve months, bringing the number up to twenty-one.

The Baptist Union of Scotland finds its home mission funds in such a serious condition that the possibility of maintaining the whole of the present stations must be considered in the near future.

Referring to our note on the Young Men's Guild Conference at Inverness, we are asked to say that the convener of the committee on Life and Work is Rev. Wm. Robertson, of Coltness; and that the paper mentioned was read by Mr. Robert Burnett, of Gilcomston, Aberdeen.

The second annual conference in connection with the United Presbyterian Churches of Kirkcaldy, Dunfermline, Cupar, and Kinross, was held last week, Mr. H. M. Barnett presiding. There were good audiences, nearly all the denominations in the district being well represented.

By the will of the late Mr. James Gordon Oswald, of Scotstoun, £300 a year is to be paid to Mr. William Quarrier, towards the maintenance of one of the Orphan Homes of Scotland specially designed for invalid children, "so long as these homes are conducted on sound Christian principles and to his son's satisfaction."

The sixteenth annual conference of the Edinburgh Y.M.C.A. and Fellowship Unions was held last week in Newbattle Free Church, Dalkeith, when there was a good attendance. Mr. James Taylor occupied the chair, and Mr. William Stewart (Leith) introduced the subject for the day: "What are the best outlets for aggressive work in village associations?"

At the annual meeting (held last Friday) it was reported that the membership of the Glasgow United Young Men's Christian Association is now 8430, and the number of branches meeting weekly 231. During the year a large number of evangelistic meetings were held every Sabbath evening, as well as services conducted regularly in nine model lodging-houses.

Lord Overtoun was spokesman last week, when a presentation was made to Rev. Professor Lindsay, on the attainment of his semi-jubilee in the chair of Church History, in Glasgow Free Church College. He paid a warm tribute to Dr. Lindsay's services in connection with home mission work, and as foreign mission secretary, in addition to what he had done among the students.

Dunfermline Christian Conference was held on Saturday, October 16. The first subject of conference, "Faith's Opportunity," was introduced by Rev. W. D. Moffatt (Edinburgh). This was followed by "The Culture of the Spirit," opened by Rev. Alexander Maclennan (Dunfermline). In the evening the large Free Abbey Church was crowded, when Rev. John McNeill gave the first address of a fortnight's mission, and indicated the lines on which he hoped to work in the town.

Last Friday there was celebrated the thirty-eighth anniversary of Grove-street (Home Mission) Institute, Glasgow. Dr. Jas. Alex. Campbell, M.P., presided, and among the other speakers was the founder, Mr. J. Wakefield McGill. Attention was called to the completeness of the organisation. There are separate departments to deal with boys and girls, growing youths of both sexes, young men and women, and adults of every class. By means of these it is possible to take hold of all the members of a family whenever one link has been formed.

Medical Missions.

Belfast has been visited by Dr. E. Sargood Fry and Mr. G. A. Barclay as a deputation from the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society, who have held several meetings and diffused a large amount of interest in the work of this society and of medical missions in general. The Marchioness of Dufferin and Ava presided over the opening meeting for ladies, held in the Y.M.C.A. buildings on the afternoon of Monday, October 18, and very largely attended. Lady Dufferin's great interest in such work is well known, every friend of missions knowing something of the "Dufferin Fund" and its outcome in India. Her ladyship's opening statement was most eloquent and full of encouragement to all who, through medical work, try to reach the non-Christian population of India and other lands.

The second public meeting was held also in the great hall of the new Y.M.C.A. buildings, when Dr. Fry and Mr. Barclay delivered addresses on medical mission work in many lands, magnificent limelight views deepening the impression in the minds and memories of the audience.

During the evening Mrs. Barclay sang with effect two or three sacred solos. Other meetings have been held, and it is believed much interest has been awakened. This Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society is deserving of the hearty support of the members of all evangelical churches, inasmuch as it is strictly inter-denominational.

Requests for Prayer.

For special mission, from Nov. 1 to 14, Netherfield-road Mission-hall.

For special meetings to be held at Gospel Hall, North Woolwich, October 31 to November 7.

For a week's special mission amongst metropolitan railway men, commencing November 1 to 8.

For power of the Holy Ghost upon mission at Clapham Y.M.C.A., November 7 to 14, inclusive.

Rev. T. B. Pandian, a native Indian Christian, has been holding a series of meetings in St. James's Hall, Plumstead, S.E. The meetings were very well attended, and considerable interest was aroused. Mr. Pandian is highly educated, and well able to instruct the British public on the religious and social life of our great Dependency. Two lectures were illustrated by magic lantern slides. One characteristic of the meetings, which was noticed by many with special gratitude, was the unanimity which prevailed among the different denominations of Christians in sympathising with Mr. Pandian's work.

National Refuges.—The Queen's Jubilee Memorial Home for Destitute Boys, situate at 164, Shaftesbury-avenue, was on Friday evening the scene of an interesting meeting and presentation of prizes. The occasion was the reunion of Old Boys, former inmates of the Home, which is called Shaftesbury House, and which is also the headquarters of the National Refuges and Training Ships Arethusa and Chichester. The society during the past fifty-four years has trained for useful service over 14,000 poor boys and girls, and last night's proceedings were chiefly noticeable on account of the book prizes given to lads who had kept their situations over twelve months with good characters.

Letters to the Editor.

SUNDAY LABOUR IN BREWERIES.

Dear Sir,—I have lately visited Burton, and made careful inquiries respecting the chief local trade. After my evening sermon I held my usual evangelistic prayer meeting, and in response to my appeal to any who desired prayer, a lady raised her hand and spoke to me afterwards. She was a Christian and a member of the Church of England. She said she had for some time endeavoured to draw attention to the privations in religious privileges of the workers in breweries, and she had raised her hand for prayer, that God would help her. She gave me some very sad and striking facts, and gave me some numbers of the Birmingham Daily Gazette, containing letters of her own protesting against the excessive Sunday toil in the breweries. At the great meeting for Sunday closing, held at the Albert Hall on October 5, I had the honour of supporting the first resolution moved by his Grace the Archbishop, and took the opportunity of fulfilling my promise to the lady to bring before the public some of the facts.

On alternate Sundays the men work thirteen hours one Sunday and 18 the next, only leaving the brewers one hour for dinner. The maltsters work 18 hours on Sunday in an atmosphere most of the time of from 150 to 200 degrees. If it be said that the process of malting requires continuous work during seven days, the reply is that in Edinburgh the maltsters work only four and a half hours on Sunday. What suffices in the capital of Scotch whisky would suffice in the capital of English beer.

I am told that in Scotch malt houses on Sundays there is no "heavy loading, frame-breaking, heading, or emptying." If there is any inaccuracy in these statements I shall be glad to correct it. If inaccurate, will some brewer at Burton give the exact figures? Such reports if false should at once be denied or explained. If true—if even the half be true—such a state of things calls for instant reform.—Yours faithfully, Newman Hall.

J. H. AND F. W. NEWMAN.

Dear Sir,—In your issue of the 14th inst. occurs the following statement: "No one, however, has ever questioned the perfect honesty and sincerity of both brothers" (i.e., the two Newmans).

Did not Charles Kingsley, Dr. E. A. Abbott, and F. W. Newman himself question the cardinal's honesty and sincerity?

I think you will find the answer to this question to be Yes.—Yours faithfully, X.

Personalia.

Dr. Joseph Angus has devoted the Angus Testimonial Fund, now amounting to £3500, to the foundation of "a lectureship for the reverent and intelligent study of Biblical and religious truth."

Rev. C. A. Morgan, of Cath. Coll., Camb., eldest son of the missioner, Rev. Dr. Morgan, has sailed in the Australia for China, whither he goes to labour with Bishop Cassels under the China Inland Mission.

Rev. F. W. Coillard, the veteran missionary from the Upper Zambesi, accompanied by Rev. L. Jalla, purpose visiting Scotland on December 1, and are open to receive invitations to centres where they may have an opportunity of telling of the work they have been able to do in Africa. Mr. Coillard has an excellent selection of lantern slides, which he will be glad to use as opportunity affords. Mr. Richard H. Hunter, 27, Jamaica-street, Glasgow, the hon. sec. of the British Committee, will be glad to communicate with any friends who can arrange meetings for the missionaries.

"Too Good for a Priest!"—A lady writes:—"The following incidents show the esteem (!) in which the Roman Catholic priests are held even by the devout in L——. A lady, in telling me of a brother who had renounced the priesthood, expressed her delight by saying, 'He is much too good to be a priest.' A simple woman, speaking to me of Signor C——, said, 'He is an angel, but our priests—they are devils.' And both these women are sincere Roman Catholics."

Rev. Arnold Foster, writing with reference to the report of his recent address at Exeter Hall, says: "I am represented as saying that one of our Hankow preachers had declined 'the offer of a censorship in Pekin.' What I really said was that the preacher in question had a brother-in-law who was a censor in Pekin, and that through the influence of this relative an offer of a very remunerative appointment had been made to him, which, however, my friend had promptly declined in the manner described."

The Y.M.C.A.

BOHEMIA.

The first general conference of Young Men's Christian Associations in Bohemia has been held at Prague. The joy and blessing of such a conference in this land of Huss can be fully understood only by those who know the opposition which the first Y.M.C.A. of Prague experienced in getting legally established in 1886. On the one hand the Government—now so friendly to our Y.M.C.A.'s—looked with keen suspicion upon the movement, and repeatedly sent back the statutes as "not accepted," while, on the other hand, the old Reformed Churches did not care for such a foreign institution. To-day the Young Men's Associations enjoy the full confidence of the Government, and the Reformed Churches fully believe in this movement for young men.

This remarkable conference of twenty-nine Associations, with eighty special delegates, met in Caslau in September. A host of friends was most cordially welcomed by the local Association. The deliberations of this historic conference, the first of its kind in a land full of historic reminiscences, would compare most favourably with the exercises of similar conferences in America or England. All the addresses were in the Bohemian tongue, and some of them contained most touching historical allusions. The nearness of Caslau to Kuttenberg, once the scene of wholesale martyrdom, made doubly impressive the question of one of the speakers, "What other nation has such claims upon God as our Bohemian nation? What other people can claim so many martyrs for truth?" Is not such a conference a partial answer to the prayers of 4,000 martyrs that were hurled down the shafts of the old silver mines of Kuttenberg? God bless the young men of Bohemia.

Prague. Albert W. Clark.

BRIEF NOTES.

New Associations have been formed at Horsham and Clacton-on-Sea.

The opening meeting of the Southsea winter session was held on Thursday evening.

The Worcester Y.M.C.A. has added the names of 253 young men to its membership roll by a special "campaign."

Sir George Williams presided, on the 11th inst., in the Town Hall, Lavender Hill, over the ninth annual public meeting of the Clapham Junction Association.

The high sheriff of Lincolnshire, Mr. T. Cheney Garfit, who is presiding at the annual meeting of the Lincoln Association on the 27th inst., strongly endorses the work of the Y.M.C.A.

The Chelmsford Association held a very successful annual meeting in the County Hall on the 20th inst., when the chair was occupied by Mr. Howard Williams. Addresses were given by Mr. W. Hind Smith and Mr. Alfred Lambert.

The Hon. Thomas Pelham presided on Wednesday evening in the Lewes Town Hall, over one of the most successful annual meetings ever held in connection with the local Y.M.C.A. The report presented was full of satisfactory information.

The winter session of the Coventry Association has opened well. Two lectures, illustrated by limelight, were given the first week by Revs. C. R. Gilbert and J. P. Wilson. On Nov. 18 the Countess of Warwick will hold a book reception at the rooms, for which a thousand invitations have been issued.

The Wimbledon Association held a mass meeting for men only in the Drill Hall on Thursday, the subject being "Impurity," and the speaker Rev. F. B. Meyer. The chair was taken by Mr. H. W. Maynard, a vice-president, who was supported by the prominent clergy and ministers. There was a large and attentive audience.

By the kind invitation of the Bishop of Durham and Mrs. Westcott, the Y.M.C.A.'s of the North-Eastern District held their annual conference at Auckland Castle on Saturday afternoon, the 16th inst. Nearly a hundred delegates were present, and the proceedings, in which the bishop himself took part, were most gratifying and encouraging.

The opening of the winter campaign of the Camden Town branch was signalised last Thursday by a social reception of young men. There was a good attendance, and the evening was enlivened by vocal and instrumental music. Very interesting addresses were delivered by Mr. T. Richardson based on "the game of cricket," and Rev. F. B. Meyer on "the use of the bicycle."

The Archbishop of Canterbury addressed a cordial letter to the annual meeting of the Croydon Association on Monday evening, expressing his very earnest desire that God's blessing might rest abundantly upon the proceedings. The chair was occupied by Mr. J. Compton Rickett, M.P., and Dr. Joseph Parker was the principal speaker. The new building is now practically free from debt, and the members number 373.

"A more eloquent testimony," says the Sussex Daily News, to the widespread influence of the Brighton Young Men's Christian Association could scarcely be furnished than the magnificent assembly in the Dome on the occasion of the twenty-sixth annual public meeting. The spacious building was completely filled. Sir John Blaker, Mayor of Brighton, presided, the speakers being Revs. E. A. Stuart, E. J. Kennedy, J. B. Figgis, and others.

Mr. Isaac Selby has completed a week's mission against infidelity in the large hall of the Y.M.C.A., Manchester. Mr. Selby was formerly a Freethought lecturer in Australia, but is now a Christian minister. He came here strongly recommended His lectures were well attended by a large number of members and friends, who spoke most favourably day by day of his clear reasoning and courteous answers to opponents at the close of each lecture.

The Y.W.C.A.

In lieu of the customary report, the London Young Women's Christian Association has issued—as marking the Diamond Jubilee year—a most attractive booklet, entitled "Y.W.C.A. Sketches," handsomely illuminated, on toned paper, and giving portraits of a host of the leaders in the movement, such as the late Lady Kinnaird, Lord Kinnaird, and other presidents, secretaries, and workers, too numerous to catalogue.

The development of the movement is admirably traced—beginning with the Prayer Union, formed in 1855, and the inception of the idea of institutes and homes for young women.

The first Association Home, it is stated, was opened in Charlotte-street, Fitzroy-square, in 1855. This led to others, and now there are in London twenty-three Y.W.C.A. Homes and Restaurants for young women, while in the provinces there are a hundred, in Scotland eleven, and in Ireland fourteen. These cater for all classes of workers—teachers, clerks, shop assistants, and servants. Delightful sketches are given of life in such Homes, illustrating their real value and usefulness to lonely girls. Holiday Homes come next. Then Protective and Employment Agencies, with a passing glimpse at the operations of the Park Mission. The Factory Helpers' Union, with its manifold agencies for good, forms an instructive chapter. The work of the Association in country places will be to many as a new discovery. Nor are the workers in the Colonies and in foreign lands overlooked.

The attentive reader cannot fail to gain from the perusal of this charming booklet an enlarged conception of what the Y.W.C.A. is actually doing for the business young women of our time. The emergence of girls into workaday life, which is so marked a feature of the present day, has, in fact, brought with it an exposure to loneliness and temptation previously unknown, and with these novel conditions this Association has set itself resolutely to deal in order to win our young women to the Saviour. The booklet may be had (price 1s.) from the Y.W.C.A. Bookstall, 26, George-street, Hanover-square, W.

On Tuesday, Oct. 19, a large social gathering of the Upper Norwood and West Dulwich Y.W.C.A. took place in St. Aubyns Hall, Upper Norwood. Mr. C. E. Tritton, M.P., took the chair, and Rev. E. A. Stuart gave an address to a most attentive audience.

"The Homestead," Tankerton, Whitstable, provides a home for thirty gentlewomen whose means are small. Some are received for a short period whilst run down or out of employment, and others for a permanency. The Home is worked on an evangelical basis. The house is in a lovely position, and everything is done to make it bright and cheering. Gertrude Dutton, Hon. Treasurer.

The Bible League held a conference at Shaftesbury Hall, Bournemouth, last week. Revs. H. Graham Thwaites, G. D. Hooper, A. A. Isaacs, and W. Fuller Gooch delivered discourses exposing the fallacies and dangers of the Higher Criticism, and advocating the necessity for determined action in support of the divine authority of Holy Scripture. Mr. H. Forbes Witherby closed the conference with a lime-light lecture, entitled, "The Gods and the Religion of Egypt at the Time of Moses," producing valuable evidence from the monuments, etc., as to the accuracy of the Pentateuch.

Emmanuel Church, Brighton.—The controversy between Rev. J. G. Gregory, M.A. (just appointed to Christ Church, Leamington) and the ecclesiastical authorities of Brighton and Hove, showing no sign of a Protestant succession being obtainable for Emmanuel Church inside the Church of England, that church is about to pass into the hands of the trustees of the Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion. Rev. J. B. Figgis, M.A., who will shortly complete thirty-seven years of happy ministry at the church in North-street, Brighton, has been appointed to take charge of Emmanuel Church.

Christian Endeavour.

Mr. John Jolly, president of the Toronto Union, has resigned, and is now on his way to India as a missionary.

The fourth annual convention of the Christian Endeavour Societies was held last Thursday and Friday in Dublin, and was largely attended.

The Endeavourers of New South Wales have issued a new Christian Endeavourer organ, the Roll-Call, edited by the secretary of the World's C.E. Union, Rev. W. J. L. Closs.

A spirit of consecrated work was manifest at a recent convention at Michigan. The key-note was "soul-winning." A "surrender meeting," held early on Sunday morning, was the best of the several gatherings.

The two largest Christian Endeavour Unions in Scotland have held their annual meetings. At Glasgow it was reported that 146 societies numbered in all 6028 members (4710 active, 730 associate, and 588 honorary). The special feature of the Edinburgh gathering was an address by Professor Thomas Smith, giving an interesting account of his personal experience of mission work in India.

Work in Lugano.

The quaint town of Lugano, on the beautiful lake of that name, is in Switzerland, but its population is entirely Italian. For this reason the Italian Waldensian Church has a minister stationed there. The present pastor, Signor Paolo Calvino, is a most indefatigable preacher, but inasmuch as all Protestant services—English, German, and Italian—are held in a room belonging to the Hotel du Parc, Signor Calvino can only have the use of the "chapel" every second Sunday, alternately with the German pastor. As this room is closed the whole week, Signor Calvino holds classes and occasional meetings at his own house; but these are mostly attended by regular church-goers, though the general public are invited.

Now, Signor Calvino feels convinced that if he could erect a small chapel and schoolroom (which should be the property of the Italian Waldensian Church Committee in Rome), where he could hold regular Sunday and week-day services, many of the poor Luganese would go there to hear the Gospel. To this end Signor Calvino has for some years been endeavouring to collect money, and now only requires about £200 to enable him to buy the necessary land and begin the building. He would be willing to make arrangements for other Protestant services to be held in the Waldensian Church at convenient hours.—Yours very faithfully, (Miss) Dora Hecht.

The Open Door.

Father! smile on me if this plan be thine,
Now that the long-closed door is open wide,
And I am free to go where I incline,
With none to hinder, to upbraid, or chide.

Oh, let me feel thy Presence; let thy hand
Rest on my shoulder, and thy Voice,
Speaking in accents I can understand,
Tell me this pleasant land is all thy choice!

I cannot take the honey and the oil,
The purple clusters of the laden vine;
I cannot ease the limbs long used to toil,
Nor lift the weary hands that hang supine

Unless I know in certainty that Thou
Dost walk with me, thy will with mine agreed;
Alas! too long I sought thy gifts, but now
It is Thyself, my Lord and God, I need.

I pause before I pass the threshold o'er,
And leave, this straitened all where I have dwelt
In my affliction; where, in anguish sore,
Thy comforts and thy chastening I have felt.

I thought Thou meantest me to drink this cup
Quite to the dregs; each crimson gout
Tasted, until that last long trembling sup
When death the consummation brought about.

And I was wrong! Thou hadst another way;
Thy heart was set on some far wider scheme
Than I could dare to wish for or to pray;
A tenderer plan than I could ever dream.

Thy will be done, O Lord, on earth in me,
As it is done in heaven in all beatitude!
In my deliverance Thou hast made me see
I have misunderstood thy plenitude.

Geraldine M. Seymour.

Mormonism.—The prospect of Church domination in the civil affairs of Utah makes a dark outlook for the future. There is no remedy but the slow one of gradual enlightenment and the increase of the Gentile voters. The Church has the power, and how it will use it history only too clearly demonstrates.—*N.Y. THE BOOK WORLD.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

The Quiver (7s. 6d. Cassell & Co.) makes a splendid home library for the winter. It seems to improve from year to year, and fully holds its ground with later productions.

Darton's Leading Strings. This comes every year, and there has never been a better issue than the latest. The many short readings are as gay as the pictures are in many cases amusing. (1s. 6d. Gardner, Darton & Co.)

Our Boys and Girls. Under this title the Wesleyan Sunday School Union issue a little illustrated monthly for young folk. In volume form (1s.), with illuminated covers, it provides a pleasing and bright picture and story book.

The Day of Days, edited by Rev. Charles Bullock, is an annual the contents of which will cheer many a home during the winter months. Such volumes are specially useful in parochial and village libraries. (2s. Home Words office.)

The Young Woman. The fifth annual volume (Horace Marshall & Son) has stories and articles in abundance, with excellent portraits and other illustrations. The talks "Between Ourselves" are a very readable feature.

Sunday is a great favourite with the young. The pictures, over two hundred in number, are accompanied by a large variety of good reading, and the exterior is as bright as the interior is excellent. (3s. and 5s., according to binding. Gardner, Darton & Co.)

Little Folks. The Christmas volume forms a delightful book. The illustrations are of a high order and numerous, and there are six coloured plates. "How Royal Children Live" is the title of an attractive series of sketches. The stories and general contents are entertaining and instructive; while some of the pictures are very funny. (3s. 6d. Cassell & Co.)

The Temple Magazine, Mr. Silas Hocking's monthly, makes a bulky volume, filled with very attractive matter. Dean Farrar's papers on "Men I have Known" are replete with deeply interesting reminiscences. "Preachers in their Pulpits" is a series that many will welcome, and in most cases the portraits are strikingly true. There is much reading of the lighter sort. (Horace Marshall & Son.)

The Sunday at Home Volume for 1897 is as good as its excellent predecessors. Varied and of a high order, the contents should find reading for many a day to the profit and entertainment of Christian families. There are serial stories by Leslie Keith and Everett Evelyn Green, and shorter ones by other favourites. Mrs. E. Brewer contributes sketches on "Almshouse Life," and Dr. Monro Gibson writes on "Facts of Experience and Truths of Life." Biographical articles are a useful feature, and while there are meditations for persons of mature years, there are bright and useful readings for the young. The illustrations are, as always, numerous and good. (7s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.)

The Leisure Hour: Volume for 1897. This companion volume, with its tinted plates and other engravings, has many attractions. Not to specify running stories and papers on travel, we call attention to a series of sketches of Midland cities and towns from the pen of W. J. Gordon, and to historical and antiquarian articles by Sir E. Maunde Thompson, Sir Walter Besant, and Prof. Flinders Petrie. Scientific and natural history notes are a welcome feature, and uniformly from reliable pens. Dr. A. Schofield writes on "The Great Food Question," and Edward Porritt on "The Canadian Parliaments." There are readable contributions on American history and affairs. (7s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.)

Our Darlings. Vol. xxiii. (J. F. Shaw & Co.) This attractive children's paper is widely known. As a volume it is handsomely bound, and replete with the charming bits, pleasing stories, and bright illustrations young people so much love. It is a real treasury of delight for the long winter evenings. The same publishers issue Little Frolic for the very tiny ones—in large type and short simple words. It is prettily bound, and bright with charming pictures which appeal to the wee folk. Yet further from the same firm we have Sunday Sunshine, edited by Catharine Shaw. A Sunday annual for children of all ages, which will bring sunshine into many a dull hour. The stories are thoroughly interesting, and the illustrations bright and pleasing. Those who secure for their little ones these three charming annuals (which may be had either bound in cloth or in coloured boards) will always have something to afford pleasure on a wet day.

SCRIPTURE AND MOTTO CARDS.

These heralds of the coming Christmas time are making their appearance. An excellent selection can be had from Mr. E. Kaufmann, of 30, Paternoster-square, E.C., judging from the specimen packets sent to us. The Text Cards are of various artistic designs, which prettily set off the well-selected texts and constitute them admirable Christmas and New Year reminders. The Motto Cards are also beautifully finished, with richly coloured flowers and illuminated Bible mottoes. Mr. Kaufmann will send an illustrated list free to any address on receipt of postcard.

From Story to Story, by Janie Brockman (3s. Gardner, Darton & Co.), is a book of illustrated readings for children. The stories are told in simple words, dissyllables being divided so as to assist the learner. The book will be of service in the nursery.

Recitations and Dialogues. Edited by T. W. Paterson. An admirable selection of pieces, grave and gay, thoroughly adapted for juvenile entertainments, Bands of Hope, and other children's gatherings, compiled by one who evidently understands the taste of the young folk.

Messrs. Cassell & Co. are re-issuing in cheap serial parts those popular works, Cathedrals, Abbeys, and Churches and The Story of the Sea. Both are fully illustrated. The former work will be published monthly at 6d. per part, and the latter in threepenny weekly parts.

Heart Breathings. By Mary E. Bumstead. (1s. Fortune & Chant, Southport.) The fourth edition of a little volume of sacred verse, breathed from a couch of pain and weakness, but glowing with firm faith and fervid love of one who knows what it is to walk with God in the shadow. Many will find stimulus and comfort in these simple stanzas.

Fight and Win: Talks with Lads about the Battle of Life. By Rev. George Everard, M.A. (1s. Nisbet & Co.) An admirable little book for our youths. Beginning with "When I was a Lad," a chapter of autobiography, Mr. Everard presents life stories and principles to live by in thirteen bright chapters, the last of which asks the pointed question, "Are you a Friend of the Lord Jesus?"

Sermons on Cardinal Truths. By Pastor H. E. Stone (6d.) A series of plain, practical addresses on vital doctrines such as "the Fall," "the Church," "Repentance," "Faith," "Order," etc., with a trenchant discourse on "Confession" in contradistinction to "the Confessional." It is well that our pulpits should ring with such wholesome and timely words. (Barnes and Scarsbrook, South Hampstead).

Tares and Wheat: A Memorial of John Wycliffe. By Charles Tylor. (2s. Headley Brothers, 14, Bishopsgate Without.) This is a thorough piece of work, although intended for the general reader. Having made himself well acquainted with the times of "the Morning Star of the Reformation," the author has produced an eminently readable and useful book. There are several illustrations, all of them artistically finished.

"Sayings of Jesus": Six Village Sermons on the Papyrus Fragment, preached in St. Kentigern's Church, Crosthwaite, Keswick, by Rev. H. D. Rawnsley, Hon. Canon of Carlisle. (Glasgow: J. MacLehose & Sons.) There have been many studies of the now famous Logia. This is a thoughtful treatment; it deserves attention, and will well repay perusal. The preacher is a poet, hence striking sonnets from his pen—one prefatory, the other valedictory.

Fifty-two Stories of Duty and Daring for Boys, edited by Alfred H. Miles, is a capital presentation volume. Among the contributors are G. A. Henty, G. Manville Fenn, Grace Stebbing, and David Ker; that is sufficient indication of the lively contents of the volume. Fifty-two Stories of Duty and Daring for Girls. This is a capital selection of episodes, gathered from the writings of Countess Norrairow, L. T. Meade, Sarah Doudney, and other able authors. Many girls will find themselves charmed with the book. (5s. Hutchinson & Co.)

Two sumptuous books for young folk are issued by Messrs. Gardner, Darton & Co. Song Flowers, by the late R. L. Stevenson (7s. 6d.), set to music by Katharine M. Ramsey, and illustrated by Gordon Browne, will give rich entertainment in the nursery, both for mind and ear. Mr. Crocket writes a clever and characteristic preface. Little Grown-Ups (6s.) is a picture gallery of delights. The full-page coloured pictures by Maud Humphrey are truly exquisite in drawing and colour, while the interludes of story and verse by Elizabeth S. Tucker are gems of baby talk.

Selected Articles on Spiritual Subjects is the title of a volume of "leaders," which have from time to time appeared in The English Churchman, and are now published by request in book form. Over fifty in number, these articles cover a wide field of thought and teaching. They are uncompromisingly Scriptural in substance, and always spiritual in tone. Ecclesiastical controversies are out of sight in these helpful pages, which deal with such subjects as "Grace, Mercy, Peace," "The Fulness of Christ," "Waiting on God," and "Christ's Tenderness to the Weak." The spirit of the Puritans is in this book, for which we bespeak a large circulation. (1s. "English Churchman" Office, 74, Strand, W.C.)

The Sunday-School Teachers' Pocket Book for 1898 has a diary, class register and almanac, strongly bound up with much useful information. (2s. Sunday School Union.)

Messrs. Eyre & Spottiswoode have issued (in conjunction with Messrs. Harmsworth) the first part of a serial work, Nelson and his Times, by Rear-Admiral Lord Charles Beresford and H. W. Wilson. The volume will be uniform with "Sixty Years a Queen."

Ebenezer: A True Story from Life. By Thomas Hogben. In this booklet the writer tells the simple story of one who has lain five years on his back in suffering and poverty, and yet has been enabled to render useful service. (To be had of the Welcome Mission, Portsmouth. 4s. per 100.)

Stratford Mizpah Band.—God has given much blessing on the work of this band in the open-air; there have been large and attentive audiences. The workers have been permitted to know of some who have been brought to a saving knowledge of the truth. They recently held their annual thanksgiving service, when short testimonies from the leaders mingled with praise.

Instances of Heroism in humble life not likely to be chronicled in history, are constantly occurring. One of these has just resulted in the death of a brave man, whose devotion to the post of duty was truly heroic. A driver of the Scotch express was recently struck in the eye by a stone wantonly thrown from a bridge. It was a mortal blow, and the agony was intense, but the man, bleeding profusely, stuck to his post for two long hours, and then quietly went home to die. Had he given way to weakness and pain, the consequences to the passengers might have been disastrous. As it was, he refused to be attended to till his duty was done.

Street Collections.—The growing evils of street collections are causing the friends of certain charitable institutions that have hitherto been benefited in this way to consider the advisability of altogether suppressing them. Beginning with the Hospital Saturday Fund, one society after another has fallen into the practice. A crop of abuses are already being reaped in the form of bogus collections, and the genuine institutions have begun to suffer through the waning of confidence on the part of the public. The street receipts for hospitals, for instance, have fallen from £4430 16s. 9½d. in 1896, to £2474 6s. 3d. this year. One of the evils is a regrettable jealousy and friction between the promoters of various good causes, each zealous for his own work. The controlling members of both the Hospital Sunday and Saturday Funds intend discussing the question at an early date whether the street collections, which have hitherto contributed about 12 per cent. of their income, shall be dropped altogether.

BEFORE SIXTY YEARS AGO.

The Special Claims of The Society for Promoting Female Education in the East to recognition on the occasion of this year's grand National Celebration are:

(1.) That it was the only Society for both Zenana work and School work existing in the Empire at the time of the Queen's Accession.

(2.) That it was then already carrying on Zenana work, Harem work, and School work, in China, the Straits, Egypt, and India.

(3.) That it was the pioneer of all subsequent efforts in Zenana and Harem work, for which it prepared the way, by encountering, and, to a certain extent, overcoming the greatest initial difficulties.

(4.) That it still occupies a wider sphere than any kindred Society in existence.

(5.) That by the help of God it has continued steadfast unto this day "in the Apostles' doctrine," and in the sending the Gospel to the heathen women and girls of the East.

The Committee urge these claims, and APPEAL for HELP to their COMMEMORATION FUND, to enable them to strengthen and extend the work of the Society.

There are more than 400 Missionaries in the field, and the whole expenditure has been under £80,000, of which TWO-THIRDS HAS BEEN CONTRIBUTED BY THE NATIVE CHURCHES.

The Belle Isle Mission

The twenty-fifth anniversary of Mr. Benson's work at this Mission has been held with some interest. At the public meeting, Sir George Williams presided. Mr. J. Stark read a statement reviewing the work of the Mission during the past twenty-five years. The work had been progressive, and one much blessed with good. During these years a total of 839 members had been enrolled, an average of thirty-three per year, while out of that number 686 were received upon first profession of faith. The Sunday-school had increased from 100 to 1400.

Rev. E. G. Gange (president of the Baptist Union) having delivered a stirring and stimulating address, Mr. Joseph Benson spoke of the work which God had permitted him to do in connection with Belle Isle. Monday was a red letter day in his life, and he would always remember with thankfulness and joy how, in response to an appeal, 250 of his congregation visited him in the vestry, each bringing some free offering. Altogether, he received £195, some of the sums being very small—even a number of farthings, one poor person bringing sixteen farthings. He explained that he desired that an effort should be made to raise the sum of five hundred pounds in order the pay off the mortgage on the house adjoining the Mission chapel, which had been purchased for the use of the Mission, and for the cost of renovation of the chapel and branch mission-hall at Blundell-street. The announcement was made during the evening that the whole amount had been raised.

Addresses were also given by Mr. Thomas Lough, M.P., Rev. George Hawker, Mr. W. T. Paton, Mr. J. Williams Benn, Professor Clowes, and others.

Wakefield Convention.

As in previous years, the president and secretary of the Y.M.C.A. have been successful in calling together a large company of the Lord's people for four days of quiet waiting upon God, for the deepening of spiritual life, and for consideration of the claims of the heathen. Each of the ten meetings was presided over by Mr. Alfred Haley. They are memorable for the calm and quietness that pervaded all, and for the deeply searching, practical, and helpful addresses. The speakers were Revs. John Brash, Colin Campbell, John Wilkinson, E. O. Williams, and Dr. White.

The closing meeting was intensely solemn, Rev. Colin Campbell giving a deeply impressive address relative to personal responsibility in the matter of missionary service. He was followed by Dr. White, who spoke of the Lord's coming.

It is interesting to note that Rev. E. O. Williams, C.I.M., was the first of eight missionaries who have been accepted for the foreign field, having been led to offer themselves through the Wakefield Conventions, six of them being members of the Y.M.C.A., and one a member of the Y.W.C.A.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

WE seem to have been under the shadow of the Great Mystery—Death—all last week. First Lord Rosmead, then the Duchess of Teck, and last Mr. Henry George passed away with tragic suddenness. There is nothing that overwhelms us with awe so much as this force of death. Man feels his helplessness here more than before any other enemy he meets with in his conscious career. But it is a good thing that as a rule our attention is monopolised by life. This is the great duty and the great difficulty. It is easy enough to die well if we have lived well. How small a place does the Bible assign to the death of its heroes—as a rule, "he was gathered to his fathers" or "he fell on sleep." The death is evidently but the portal into another better state, and being not any enemy but the means to a glorious end, it should not be dreaded.

The nation sincerely sympathises with the Royal Family in the bereavement that has befallen it in the death of H.R.H. the Duchess of Teck. Ever since her youth she has been a familiar figure to the British public, and her sweet, genial, and philanthropic nature endeared her to all. The Royal race has always been remarkable for the number of good, simple-hearted, true women it has produced; and among them the late Duchess stood out pre-eminent for her ennobling influence and her indefatigable interest in all works of mercy. There will be mourning in many humble homes, where her presence and kindness were as well known as in the Court which she graced by her virtues. And while our sympathy should be freely given to the daughter who is to be our future Queen, it should go forth with special tenderness toward our present Sovereign, who in her old age has lost another link with her happy past.

"A feeling of sadness came o'er" us as we read the story of Lord Rosmead's career. There was such a tinge of sombre disappointment about it all. The service of man is a thankless task if it be not lit up by a motive whose inspiration is higher than man. There is only one good Master, and he is the wise servant who, putting his trust in no earthly government or authority, looks straight away to God and desires only his approval. That is the only man who can bear the thanklessness of the world with perfect equanimity. That is the only type of man who can live for others and in return bear misrepresentation, stripes, imprisonment, death, and yet in the end say, "I have fought a good fight, hence there is a crown laid up for me, which the Righteous Judge shall give me at that day."

"Man proposes, God disposes." The sudden death of Mr. Henry George, on the eve of the New York Mayoral Election, illustrates in a dramatic way how Providence sometimes interferes with the most elaborate human schemes and plans. "If the Lord will"—that is the condition under which alone all human plans and ambitions can be accomplished, and even reforms brought to pass. Underneath the surface-currents of men's personal aims and struggles flows the deep unhindered stream of the Divine purpose, which fulfils itself in spite of friend and foe, and in ways that are often inscrutable till long afterwards. It is well to allow for the uncertainty of our life-tenure in the laying of all our plans, and so to do all things "as in our great Taskmaster's eye.

It is somewhat early as yet to talk about Christmas preparations, but not too early for the suggestion we wish to make. Christmas Day is essentially the children's day—this is recognised in the home, but is it not possible to give it a more definite recognition in our churches? This might be done by having the pick of the Sunday-school scholars to form a choir for the Christmas morning service. There are several very beautiful cantatas appropriate for children and for the festive season, which might be prepared and rendered. It would be effective in bringing more of the parents out and would give the service a cheerfulness which certainly it often does not possess at present.

Last Sunday being "Citizen" Sunday, some 300 sermons and addresses were delivered in the London pulpits on various aspects of civic duty. According to the newspapers on Monday morning, the social question most prominently discussed seems to have been that of overcrowding in the poorer districts. There are few problems more distressing, or more provocative of vice and crime. It is appalling to find that there are 380,000 people in London alone who are occupants of one room, a large proportion being herded day and night in company with six or seven others. Under such conditions health, decency, and morality are well-nigh impossible. Until this evil is firmly dealt with any vital improvement is impossible in social purity and sobriety. Fortunately, it is largely within the scope of wisely-directed legislation. But before anything effective is done there must be a great uprising of healthy opinion in the direction of reform.

The question is often asked: "Is it right to preach Political Sermons?" We should reply emphatically No, and for many reasons, two of them being: People come into the house of God to worship Him, and should not in such a place have their passions of hate and quarrelsomeness roused. Again, the preacher has it all his own way in a subject which is always debatable—those who differ from him have no opportunity of expressing their dissent. On the other hand, the pulpit should be very certain in its demand that politics should be inspired by religious and moral principle—that Christian men make their righteous influence felt in the questions and government of the day. We should leave no department of life to the unquestioned control of the Devil.

Nations as well as individuals are sometimes regenerated by their troubles and misfortunes, and there is some hope, according to Mr. Courtney, that this may be so with Greece. During a recent visit to that country, this keen observer said he found the Greeks a sobered people, discouraged by what had happened, but at least cured of any flightiness, and ready to face the situation as they found it. Under the protection of other Christian countries, he thinks we may look to this little nation, not as crushed by her disasters, but as coming out of the conflict receiving lessons which she must long remember, purified, chastened, strengthened, a sober and reformed people, a people entering upon a career, a future which should not be a copy of the follies of the past, but should be an attempt to reproduce its best features without its worst.

With all our disappointment at the meagre results of recent diplomacy, we may be thankful that the integrity of Greece was at least maintained by the firm attitude of our own Government, which made it a sine quâ non that no inch of Christian territory should be taken away and given to the Turk.

Dr. McClure, of Mill Hill, thinks that the teaching profession is like the ministry. "Unless a man feels a distinct call from the Lord he ought not to think of entering it." Were all teachers filled with this spirit it would soon work a complete change in our schools and school methods. Such a body of men and women would never allow themselves to be coerced or supplemented by priests, and nothing would be able to withstand their influence in shaping character and life. Whatever the method of teaching, we should have in them the surest guarantee of the building up of a truly religious nation. Nor should we fall behind in physical vigour or intellectual power.

There is only too much reason to fear that in many elementary schools determined efforts will now be made to indoctrinate the children with advanced Ritualistic and Romish ideas. In this work Romanisers are not to be without important helps; for Messrs. W. H. Smith and Son have issued a series of cartoons in colours, illustrative of the Life of Christ, which are described as having been prepared "after careful consultation with clergy who have given special attention to religious education." These cartoons delineate, in mediæval style, the Annunciation, the Nativity, the Baptism, the Crucifixion, Easter Day, and the Ascension; and what with nimbi of various types and other accessory details, one is compelled to recognise in these productions Romish art adapted to propaganda in English schools. The cartoon on the Crucifixion is detailed to a painful degree, with its representation of Roman soldiers throwing the dice at the foot of the Cross! It is difficult to conceive of young people being influenced for good by scenes which are, to say the least, repulsive to the instructed and reverent mind. Unless Protestants awake, they will soon find the day-schools used as nurseries of Romanism, the Bible being replaced by an ecclesiastical manual, assisted by Popish pictures.

In the opinion of Mr. George W. E. Russell, himself a High Churchman, the High Church party is drawing steadily away from Rome; the line of division between them is more clearly marked than it was twenty years ago. The reason of this he believed to lie in "the increasing definiteness of the Roman position." As the claims of Rome have become more peremptory, the High Church has become all the more disinclined to submit. Many hoped for some recognition of Anglican orders from the present Pope, and were disappointed. Mr.

Russell himself never expected the Pope would yield anything. One wonders how any one could have been simple enough to entertain a different view. But then we next wonder whether Anglicanism is to be a kind of second Papacy, as arrogant, as exclusive, and as unbending as the first. With its notions of the validity of priests' orders we do not see how it can fail to be somewhat like it. If its orders only are valid, other Christians are unauthorised workers and teachers. But they can afford to be unauthorised by men, if they are authorised by God.

Query: When is a "prayer meeting" not a prayer meeting? When, in half an hour, there are three hymns, some notices, and an address of ten minutes' duration. Such a one we attended the other night. It was in preparation for a mission, and five or six hundred persons had thronged from many churches to attend it. Two (called upon by name) engaged in prayer, and the minister concluded. We wondered what the Methodist friends present thought of it. Had the meeting been once or twice "thrown open," there would have doubtless been a stream of prayer, which would have robbed it of its deathly chill. It was a great opportunity lost; unhappily we meet with many such.

Rev. F. B. Meyer last Sunday said that upon one Sunday in September two of his church workers had counted 547 children, under the age of thirteen, pass in the course of two hours into two public-houses. Local justices only need proper evidence to be put before them to deal with this matter, as is proved from the fact that to a petition organised by Mr. Meyer for this end, they replied that they would request the publicans to comply with the spirit of the memorial. Vigilance committees should take up this campaign with more determination and vigour.

Mrs. Creighton spoke some wise words at the National Union of Women Workers, when she said that women needed to be on their guard against "the idea that they, as women, could set the world right." In the beginning God created man and woman. Good women can do many valuable things that are impossible to men; but good men can do others that are impossible to women. They must join their forces.

Mrs. Creighton further deprecated the re-regarding of women "as forming by themselves a party or a class." Necessity may have been laid upon them to act together for a while, to discuss alone questions in which they are specially interested, and to do for themselves things that men have either neglected or declined to touch. But they ought only to act together in this way so long as it may be necessary to make their influence felt, and to gain their rightful place and power; or else they will cause coldness and separation on the part of many who otherwise would have sympathised with them. The place and influence of women in the service of Christ and humanity are too precious to be lightly esteemed by men, or carelessly endangered by themselves.

As a strong argument for the Church Extension Movement which is growing in volume and power among the Congregationalists, a writer in The Independent suggests that it is owing to the lack of adequate church accommodation in our teeming suburbs that there is a distinct set back in many of the signs of a vital religious life in the country. We admit the effect but doubt the cause. There are large churches, with plenty of accommodation, which is only partly used, wherein the lack of vital religious life is more noticeable than in churches which cannot find sufficient seats for their congregation.

But the writer claims earnest consideration when he points out the facts that the temperance cause is not where it was ten years ago, while the drink party has become stronger and better organised; that the one or two newspapers that had attempted to banish betting news have been forced to admit it; that at election time a Christian policy is too frequently at a discount, and selfish considerations alone weigh with tens of thousands of electors; that the agitation in defence of the persecuted Armenians failed for lack of moral stamina in public opinion, and that other grave national evils are growing more emphasized.

Most observers of the drift of public affairs must allow that there is too much truth in these contentions, though there are some encouraging facts to the contrary. In so far as this is the case, it should cause all lovers of their country and of Christ a real searching of heart, which will probably impress upon them that the evil is to be found within as well as without the churches. If all the nominal Christians in the country were real, earnest, whole-hearted believers, there would be enough momentum among them to control opinion and mould the national policy throughout on spiritual lines, and in the best interests of the kingdom of God. It is lukewarmness, inconsistency, and unworthiness within, and not the prevalence of rampant evil without, that endangers our national life to-day. Let the fire of a divine enthusiasm once be really kindled, and nothing could withstand it. "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon" is a truth that should be burned right into the Christian conscience nowadays.

In these days, when novelists construct their tales out of the wreck and ruin of home-life, when unfaithfulness is made the warp and woof of fiction, it is a comfort to read in the realm of sober fact of the true and unselfish love of two of our greatest poets for their wives, Tennyson and Browning. Tennyson's life and Mrs. Browning's letters are setting before the mind of the nation a picture which will do the nation good. It will do something toward strengthening and restoring peace and purity to the hearts of young persons. The story which is told of these four brave hearts, enduring and suffering for each other's sake, is worth tons of the feverish, unreal stuff that is passed off as an analysis of the affections. We count it a happy thing that this century can point to the married life of two great poets and of our Queen as approaching near the ideal. There is plenty of the base and bad, but we have also much of the good.

The niece of Tennyson has contributed some personal reminiscences of her uncle, which give us a near and entrancing view of his spirituality of mind. Certainly the retiring, silent man was not averse from speaking on the most sacred of themes when he had a fitting listener. Take this conversation as an example:—

"God is with us now on this Down, as we two are walking together, just as truly as Christ was with the two disciples on the way to Emmaus. We cannot see Him, but He, the Father and the Saviour and the Spirit, is nearer, perhaps, now than then to those who are not afraid to hear the words of the Apostles about the actual and real presence of God and his Christ with all who yearn for it." I said I thought such a near actual presence would be awful to most people. "Surely the love of God takes away and makes us forget all our fear," he answered. "I should be sorely afraid to live my life without God's presence; but to feel that He is by my side now just as much as you are, that is the very joy of my heart." And I looked on Tennyson as he spoke, and the glory of God rested upon his face, and I felt that the presence of the Most High had, indeed, overshadowed him.

We should like to hear something similar from some of our younger poets.

A new theological periodical is being started in Germany, in which the editor, Prof. Bousset, gives a most reassuring survey of the present temper of Biblical scholarship in that country. He says that the whole critical way of looking at things has altogether changed since the revolutionary days of Baur. More and more the tradition of the Church about the New Testament has vindicated itself as substantially accurate; and whereas scholars used to "distrust it on principle," they now incline to accept it until cogent reasons demand the contrary. The result is seen in the gradual acceptance by scholars of all shades of the Pauline authorship of the Epistles. This reversal of the loudly-trumpeted announcements to the contrary, which but recently filled the air, show the need of a cautious attitude in matters tending to discredit the earliest traditions of the Christian faith.

There is a Scottish Congregational Ministers' Theological Symposium, which appears to be doing a good work for ministers; and if for them, then ultimately for their people. It must be helpful to discuss in a right spirit such subjects as the Holy Spirit and his work, Practical Problems of Ministerial Work, and the Pauline Theology. At present the subject is the Doctrine of the Person of Christ, and next year it is to be the Teaching of Jesus, under six divisions. The Symposium has existed for ten years, and is said to have done something towards arresting among its members a prejudice against theology, and encouraging the systematic study of Christian doctrine. The method adopted seems to necessitate the careful study of the Scriptures, and cannot but enrich the several ministries with fulness of Scripture truth.

A joint committee of the Established, the Free, and the United Presbyterian Churches of Scotland has agreed upon a new hymnal to be used by these churches; in fact, a Book of Common Praise for Scotland. It will be a good sign of spiritual unity leading up to such formal and outward unity as may in time be found to be possible and desirable. The suggestion is now also made by the Independent that the Free Churches of England and Wales might agree upon such a book of praise for south of the Tweed. There is, on the other hand, a pleasure in seeing the unity in variety which characterises the books now in use among Nonconformists. A good hymn book is invaluable, for if on any occasion the Gospel is absent from the sermon, it is generally present in the hymns.

The power of the sword is not the whole of the explanation of the spread of Mohammedanism. Mr. T. W. Arnold calls attention, in "The Preaching of Islam," to the fact that every Mohammedan is expected to be a missionary. Islam does not depend upon the labours of a priestly class any more than Christianity. Mohammedan traders in all parts of the world make it their business to spread their religion. Then, again, the creed is simple and the practice easy. The former is no more than "There is no god but God, and Mohammed is his prophet." To this are added five practical duties—recital of the creed, five times of prayer, payment of legal alms, fasting during the month of Ramadan, the pilgrimage to Mecca. No lofty ideal is set up. It is painful to read that in the earliest days persecuted Christians often either sought or welcomed the interposition of the Mohammedans to save them from their fellow-Christians. In India the zeal of Christians has provoked that of Mohammedans.

The Filching of the Sabbath.

THE growing aggression of the secular party upon the privileges of the Lord's Day is becoming a serious menace to our national life. Sunday excursions, Sunday concerts, Sunday sports, Sunday dinners, are all contributing to the general break-up of the Day of Rest.

Of course the over-worked clerk and the oppressed working-classes are made the stalking-horse of all these innovations; and in so far as these classes suffer from any real grievance our sympathy is with them. But it requires but little observation to note three things—(1) That now-a-days all classes have more leisure for recreation in the week than they ever had; (2) That the non-observance of the Lord's Day is not, even chiefly, confined to these classes; and (3) That commercial gain is at the bottom of much that is promoted as "for the pleasure of the people."

Are we to regard the railway companies, or the proprietors of the Oxford Music Hall, for example, in the light of philanthropists? Their interest in "the people" would soon go unless they could show an increased dividend proportionate to the increased business. This is where the "cant" comes in, not the protests made by Christian workers who toil, week in, week out, for the real amelioration of the people's lot.

We are thankful to note that the London County Council have endorsed the view we expressed last week as to the illegality of the concerts at the Oxford; and that the proprietors of the latter have decided "for the present" to abandon their Sunday evening performances. But the question will soon arise again. In the meantime it is important that the real bearings of the matter be faced. Mrs. Chant, in her extraordinary speech at the first concert, compared the fees paid for admission to the gifts offered at cathedral services, suggesting that she saw no difference of principle in the two cases; and she hoped that these Sunday performances would be a commercial success!

The fallacy here is of the most transparent kind. For it is absurd to suggest that the freewill offerings at religious services are in any sense of the term a commercial transaction. The churches exist for the benefit of the community, and all collections made in them are for the payment of necessary expenses, any surplus being devoted to charitable and philanthropic purposes. These Sunday evening concerts, on the other hand, are promoted in the interests of the shareholders, and for the sake of dividends, and herein lies the chief danger. Once started as sacred concerts, we may be sure that if, as such, they do not ultimately "succeed," there will be a gradual encroachment of the secular element; and what began in harmony with the spirit of the Day may end in the ordinary, and certainly not elevating, music-hall entertainment. There is no adequate safeguard against this abuse of privilege. The worship of Mammon on the Lord's Day is an evil that all true citizens should set their faces against like flint, and they should see to it that they are not hoodwinked by pretended concessions to the religious instinct.

The root-evil, so far as the law is concerned, lies in the position (as at present established) that, so long as there are a few free seats at the back, the admission may be described as "free," in fulfilment of the law's requirement, the rest of the auditorium being "reserved seats." Clearly the original intention of the Act was that all seats should be free, and this beggarly subterfuge only shows up the more vividly the fiction of the pretended interest in "the people"; if it were real, why should nineteen-twentieths of them have to pay?

The friends of the Day of Rest will have to be on hand, and in force, when the Licensing Sessions are on, to see that no modifications are made in conditions under which this and other halls are licensed, in so far as they relate to compulsory closing for profit on the Lord's Day.

Nor does the question concern Londoners only. At Blackpool, Newcastle, and other provincial towns the same questions are to the front, and further proposals of secular endeavour are in the air. The Church of Christ will have to fight hard against the worldly spirit within, and the avowed non-Christian spirit without, if she would not suffer humiliating defeat in her professed warfare against the world, the flesh, and the devil.

The Risen Christ.

By Mrs. MERRILL E. GATES.

WHERE is Jesus now? is a question which must often recur to the mind of those who think of his mysterious life and death upon our earth. And not less urgent comes the desire to know what is the present position and condition of Him who once was the object of man's cruel mockery and hate. We do not need the "vision of angels" to say that He is alive.

A learned, most scientifically-trained botanist in America, who lately died, affords one of many instances not only of the questioning of the Christian mind on this point, but of the answer returned to the Spirit-enlightened consciousness of the believer; and it is also an illustration of the power of that light which falls upon the objective facts and truths of the Gospel, as revealed in the New Testament. Gradually, but at last totally, the truth of the Bible had been discarded by this devoted student of Nature. Through years of study and learning, the disintegrating process of disbelief went on, until, finally, no Sabbath, no church, no belief remained. Every moment of holy or secular time was given to the chosen and absorbing pursuit. But occasionally, for the change afforded to the mind, the open doors of the church proved attractive—and there, after a time, casting away all philosophic reasoning, the simple way of trust claimed this eager and studious soul for the Saviour.

And then came a vividness of belief and a desire to propagate this new and radiant knowledge, which was truly Apostolic. The whole circle of botanists, fellow-instructors in many colleges, students, and friends were immediately apprised of this new (but oh, how old) method of knowing God. To one this was the written phrase, "It is a long time since I have had an Easter. But now I do not need any one to tell me that Jesus is alive. I know it! for I have had communion with Him."

The dead Christ is not the Christ of power. While thought goes back to Calvary—daily and hourly, it should also fly upward to

THE NOW LIVING SAVIOUR.

Like a great shining arc of glory, Jesus comes out of heaven to earth, knowing that He has come from God. Again that resplendent arc issues from the short and seeming eclipse of his human life, and, knowing that He went to God, sweeps upwards through worlds of light back to the glory He had with the Father before the world was. "The man in the skies" is no figure of speech. There Jesus is. There for the present He remains, and there we are to think of Him now, shining far beyond the glory of the transfigured form upon the Mount, with countenance as the sun that shineth in his strength, with a brilliancy and splendour all unknown to the days of his flesh. It is the glorified, risen, and now living Christ, to whom we must pray, to Him in whom the all-power resides. From the Spirit, whom He is now shedding forth, comes the sight not only of Jesus as evidently crucified for us, but as the glorified object of our faith and love.

Could we but once have a glimpse of Jesus as He now is on the throne, outshining suns and stars and systems, would our faith ever question again his ability to work now in our day and in our sight his wondrous works of love? And when we remembered the road of humiliation and self-forgetfulness which led to the throne, we should never question that his victory would be used for those for whose sake He submitted to the self-emptying. "His high estate is as much at our service as was his condition of abasement," said Spurgeon. The sight by faith of Jesus on his throne to-day would do more to expand our prayers than much study. To see him as He is, exalted to be a Prince and a Saviour, would almost be sight, not faith.

Do we pray to the dead or dying Saviour on the cross, or to the glorious One who rose from his enthroned seat in the heavenly regions to welcome

HIS FIRST CONFESSING MARTYR?

Do we pray to a Christ in Joseph's tomb, or to Him who met Saul in the Damascus way in paralysing, yet regenerating splendour? Do we pray to one whose visage was more marred than any man, or to Him who stood in dazzling light and effulgent power before John in Patmos? We may say these two are the same—the Man of Nazareth and the God upon the throne. They are the same. But shall we not believe that it is to the glorified Christ that the all-power is given; and that while we bear about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus, it is that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our body?

If we were as truly assured of his present life in glory as we are of his past life in the flesh, faith would hardly need to be called faith. It would be vision, and it would be assured conviction that because He lives we shall live also. And more than this, the thought of Jesus now living in his high, supernal, incomparable glory would take away our disbelief in the possible salvation of men. The fixing of our minds on what Christ Jesus now is, in his body of glory, will wing our faith with pinions of fire, will make us believe in his light, though we were in darkest corners of the earth.

"Twice since his disappearance in that cloud," says a recent writer, "he has thrust his hand into human affairs in such a way that He could not be ignored." Once when He appeared to him "born out of due time" on his way to destroy the saints; once to John upon the holy isle. These two appearances are enough to convince us of his present glorified condition, since at both times the splendour of his presence was unbearable to those who saw Him. "These manifestations, as well as what is written of Him, prove that He has been marvellously changed. It was the Christ of glory, and not the Christ of humiliation, who thus came to earth."

"I am He that liveth, and was dead; and behold I am alive for evermore."

The Testimony of Jesus
Concerning Himself.

BY DR. JAMES CULROSS.

WHENCE HE CAME.

COMING back to Christ, we listen first to what He says respecting his coming into our world. His general manner of speech is undoubtedly singular. We calculate our age from the time of our birth. Only once does He speak of having been born, viz., when He stood before Pilate for judgment, and the word "born" is immediately followed up thus: "To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world," as if He had stepped across the frontier from some other sphere into the world of men.

Elsewhere He speaks in this fashion: "No man hath ascended up to heaven but He that came down from heaven, even the Son of man which is in heaven," whose home is still there, and whose fellowship with heaven has never been suspended. "The Father Himself, who hath sent Me, hath borne witness of Me." "What and if ye shall see the Son of man ascend up where He was before?" "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent Me." "I am not come of Myself, but He that sent Me is true, whom ye know not." "They say unto Him, 'Who is thy Father?' Jesus answered, 'Ye neither know Me nor my Father.'" "I proceeded and came forth from God. "Ye are from beneath; I am from above. Ye are of this world; I am not of this world." "Before Abraham was I am." "I have not spoken of Myself, but the Father who sent Me; He gave me a commandment what I should say and what I should speak." "This sickness is for the glory of God, that the Son of God might be glorified thereby." "Which of you convinceth Me of sin?" "O Father, glorify Thou Me with thine own self with the glory which I had with Thee before the world was. "They have known that I came out from Thee." "Father, I will that they also whom Thou hast given Me be with Me where I am, that they also may behold my glory which Thou has given Me; for Thou lovedst Me before the foundation of the world."

The drift of these words is unmistakable. Though spoken at separate times and on diverse occasions, they harmonise in

THEIR UNDERLYING CLAIM.

Jesus has come from another world into the world of men. He is the Son of man—man coming up to God's ideal. He belongs to eternity. He pre-existed there. He had fellowship and glory with the Father before the foundation of the world. His home is in heaven. He came into the world on an errand of mercy from the Father. He had work given Him to do. His work, his mission, his message, were Divine. He brought Divine credentials, and was invested with Divine authority. His consciousness and his memory reach back into the timeless past. Before Abraham was brought into being He existed. While He is one of us, He is above us—Son of God as well as Son of man. The greatest question that we can ask is the question, What is God? To that question the answer is given in Jesus; the love, the purity, the self-sacrifice, the meekness, the gracious power, are not those of the man Christ Jesus only; they tell us what is in God.

The next greatest question that suggests itself is, What is man? Jesus is the answer to that question also; He is the Son of man—man without the disease of humanity—in whose person Godhead and manhood are united. In all these respects his person is unique. It is not, however, on so many detached and isolated texts that we have to rely with reference to his person, but on the tout ensemble of the four Gospels.

We have all experienced a strange, vague sense on the occurrence of some new experience, of having known it in some former state of existence, in keeping with what Wordsworth imagines—

> Our birth is but a sleep and a forgetting;
> The soul that riseth with us, our life's star
> Hath had elsewhere its setting,
> And cometh from afar;
> Not in entire forgetfulness,
> And not in utter nakedness,
> But trailing clouds of glory do we come,
> From God who is our home.

Could it be some dim feeling such as these lines suggest that lay behind the words of Jesus! No. He evidently speaks from a clear consciousness and memory. He came down from heaven, and received a message from the Father for men. His coming forth from God is not something which He had in common with others, but something special to Himself. It is explained by his supernatural birth, in which the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us. It is no mere celestial visit, as Barnabas and Paul were mistaken by the people of Derbe and Lystra for two of the gods in the likeness of men come down to visit them; but, oh that mystery of mysteries, the Incarnation, when God in very deed came to dwell with man on earth as Immanuel.

"We make far too little," says Rabbi Duncan, "of the Incarnation: the Fathers knew much more of the Incarnate God than we do. Some of them were oftener at Bethlehem than at Calvary; they knew too little of Calvary, but they knew Bethlehem well. They took up the holy Babe in their arms; they loved Immanuel, God with us. We are not too often at the cross, but we are too seldom at the cradle, and of the Word made flesh—of the holy child Jesus."

The words of Jesus which have been quoted are absolutely unique, and inapplicable in the lips of anyone else. He who testifies from his own consciousness that He came down from heaven, and that He had glory with the Father before the foundation of the world, and who expects us to believe Him, must either be a superhuman being or unworthy of serious consideration.

The difficulty has been felt from the beginning where to place Jesus. On the one hand, there were the wonderful works of Jesus and his great claims. There was an impression of purity, loftiness, majesty, heavenliness, produced on men's minds by his whole life. On the other hand, there was his lowliness, his abasement, his endurance of shame and suffering at the hands of men. There were those who, looking on these things, found them irreconcilable. They wanted to get rid of mystery, which they found intolerable, and they bought simplicity at a great price. The modern method is to deny his Divinity.

In early days they took a different method. One of the earliest heresies, described with graphic power by the pen of Gibbon, was that of those Gnostics who held that the appearing of Jesus was merely an illusion on the senses. He was not what plain people took Him to be. He did not really come in the flesh—was not flesh. He did indeed seem to be one of us; He made common cause with us, and took his place alongside of us against the devil; He came to save us; yet his appearing among us was only in appearance. His human nature was but a phantom. He was not truly "born a Saviour," and stood in no true relation of brotherhood to us. Nor were his sufferings real sufferings. When He was tempted in the wilderness He sustained no real assault; when He journeyed over the land he was not really fatigued; when He sat on Jacob's well He was not actually weary; when He seemed to be asleep on a pillow in the boat it was only in semblance. He could not feel as we do, or suffer, or be slain. The supposed agonies of Gethsemane and Calvary were only an illusory show. The whole evangelic narrative, in effect, was but a magic-lantern picture thrown on a screen; and all the mystic scenes of Christ's life and death and resurrection were a representation for the benefit of mankind, with no more reality than an acted play.

> Ah! to how many faith has been
> No evidence of things unseen,
> But a dim shadow that recasts
> The creed of the Phantasiasts;
> For whom no Man of Sorrows died
> For whom the tragedy Divine
> Was but a symbol and a sign,
> And Christ a Phantom crucified!

Thus does the dark mind of man speculate. How different the clear testimony of our Lord Himself.

Signs of the Times.

SURELY the end draws nigh. The governments and the peoples do not cleave together, as iron is not mixed with clay (or earthenware). The emperors are forming alliances, and even Republican France is included in the league. Who knows how soon the ten kings will be united in giving their kingdoms to the Wild Beast? their enemies not apparently being foreign Powers, but their own subjects, who are rising for the assertion of their real or supposed rights.

For if the Ten Kings of the Roman Earth, or of Christendom, are confederate together, against whom are they opposed? Against whom have they been opposed in reality, with small exception, from the beginning? Why did the gold give place to silver?—the absolutism of Nebuchadnezzar to the restricted power of Darius? Why has the Autocracy of the first monarchy declined into the Democracy of these last days? Because the Governments oppressed the peoples, and the Ruler over all permitted their misused power gradually to be limited. In contrast with this, the chief characteristic of God's King will be that He shall break in pieces the oppressor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth.

The game of chess bears witness that the governing powers have not regarded themselves as existing for the peoples, but the peoples for them. The pawns represent the people, while the king and queen, bishops, knights, and castles represent the royal, ecclesiastical, military, and feudatory powers, by whom the peoples were sacrificed at their convenience or their will. The Ten Kings may combine to give their power to Satan's Wild Beast, but He shall come whose right it is, and God will give it him, and the sovereignty of the world shall become the sovereignty of our Lord and of his Christ. Visitors to Egypt.—Professor Sayce has arranged, at the conclusion of his period of research in Upper Egypt, to return to Cairo in the month of March, and give an account of his explorations to a party of English ladies and gentlemen visiting Egypt under Mr. Woolrych Perowne's arrangements on the Midnight Sun. Sir Arthur Arnold, Sir Lambert Playfair, the Bishop of Richmond, the Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge University, Canon Tristram, Professor Ramsay, and others are also lecturing in connection with these cruises during the approaching winter.

Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.

By PASTOR THEO. MONOD.*

GOD THE FATHER.—I.

THE first thing we have to do in a convention such as this is to lose sight of the convention. God has brought us together for a purpose—his purpose; and what is that? It is to set us right—to set our minds right, our hearts right, our consciences right, and most especially to set our wills right.

The convention is but a means to an end. Indeed, all that we are doing in the convention is but a means to an end. The object of our praying is that God may be glorified in us. The object of our singing is likewise, directly or indirectly, the praise of God—I mean directly when we sing a hymn of praise, and indirectly when we sing what may be called a hymn of prayer, asking God for his blessing and grace, that it should return to Him. Our reading of the Word is, of course, but a means to an end. We cannot be reminded of this too often, especially we Christians who have been brought up with the Bible, who have been fed on the Bible.

THE BIBLE ITSELF IS NOT THE END;

it is the means. Otherwise the more a man knew of the Bible and was able to talk about it, the holier a man he would be. Is it so? Surely the enemy is quite as clever now as in the days of the Pharisees; they were covered with texts of Scripture. So we may be full of the Scriptures, our houses full of them, and our lips full of them, and yet our hearts may be full of sin. Therefore the Word of God is only a means to an end; and the end is ever the same. You cannot get beyond the first question in your own Catechism—"The chief end of man is to glorify God."

In order to glorify God we must know God. We must have such a conception of God as will draw us towards Him. We must know Him as the Creator, as the God of providence, as the Redeemer, as the Comforter, as the Living and True God. It has been on my mind, and I believe it is my message to you this morning, to consider with you for a moment God as a Father. That is the beginning, and I venture to say it is the end.

Let us read from Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians, chapter ii. This epistle was written to those who were heathen Gentiles, who did not belong to the peculiar people whom God had chosen as the channel of blessing to all nations. (Pastor Monod read from verse 11 onwards to verse 18 with running comments.) "Who hath made both one" (ver. 14); that is to say, Jew and Gentile. "Having abolished in his flesh the enmity" (ver. 15)—the enmity between man and man, and first of all the estrangement between man and God. Here we must not speak of enmity except with respect to ourselves.

THERE IS NO ENMITY OF GOD

toward man; but there is an enmity of man toward God. "If, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more being reconciled we shall be saved by his life." "Preached peace...to them that were nigh" (ver. 17)—that is the solution of all international and social disagreements, if men would only see it and believe it. The middle wall of partition would go down between country and country, class and class, man and man.

"Through Him we both have access by one Spirit unto the Father." This is the word of which I wish to speak. We have spoken of a means to an end. Here we have it—"Through Him." "I am the Way." The Spirit is a means—the very breath of God—leading us to Christ, and through Christ to the Father. I confine myself to the last words of the passage, "unto the Father." That is where we want to go.

When thinking of the subject I had rather

A STRANGE EXPERIENCE.

I looked into the "Scripture Index" at the end of my reference Bible. It is not a concordance, or, of course, every word would have been there, but an index of subjects. I went through it for this subject, "God the Father." I looked at the word "Father" and found "See parents and children"; that is all. I thought I would find it under "God" very likely. I looked, and there I found a whole column about God, his titles, his attributes, etc. I thought perhaps my glasses were bad, or I had not read closely enough, but "God the Father" I could not find in that whole column. How is that? I believe it to be without intention, but it is all the more telling and all the more astonishing. In the index you will find, and surely you ought to find, two columns about our Lord Jesus Christ, and one column about the Holy Spirit. In that column I did find the Father's name once, quoted from Matt. x. 20: "The Spirit of the Father."

I do not wish to lay too great stress upon this, but it is a significant symptom. The fact is there is a certain view of the Gospel which leaves the Father almost out of sight. You would think Christ had come not so much to reveal the Father as to hide Him. I think this to be a grievous mistake in every way. It is a mistake theologically, of course; and it brings great mischief in our experience if we fail to see, as the Apostle did, that through Christ we have access, by the Spirit, unto the Father.

Shall we open the Gospels and see what Christ Himself said about it? We begin with Matthew, at the very beginning, and what do we see? We see that most wonderful scene where Father, Son, and Spirit are met together on the shores of Jordan. The Spirit descends in the likeness of a dove, and a voice—the voice of the Father, surely—says, "This is my Beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." What does speak of? Not so much of our relation to God in the abstract, but to our Father which is in heaven. Take this verse, for instance: "When thou prayest, enter into thy closet and pray to the Father which is in secret, and He which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly." Here, too, we have the prayer itself: "After this manner pray ye: Our Father which art in heaven."

We go on to Luke. When Christ was twelve years old we find Him saying, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" And in the Garden of Gethsemane the prayer of the Son went up to the Father: "Father, if it be possible." Did He pray the Father in order that we should not pray the Father? No, surely; but in order that we might pray the Father in his name, through Him, like Him, and with Him, in the Spirit.

When we open the Gospel of John it becomes much clearer still. "I am the True Vine; ye are the branches." Who is it that takes care of the Vine and the branches? "My Father is the Husbandman." Who is to be glorified in the fruit we bear? "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples." In the "sacerdotal prayer," as it is sometimes called (John xvii.): we read "Father, the hour is come;" "Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom Thou hast given Me;" "Righteous Father;" "O righteous Father, I have known Thee, and these have known that Thou has sent Me. I have declared unto them thy name, and I will declare it." He will declare it in this convention too. The name, of course, is the name of the Father. "That the love wherewith Thou hast loved Me may be in them and I in them."

There is a passage, the most tender, perhaps, in the gospels, at any rate one infinitely dear to us: "Come unto Me, all ye that labour, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." How does Christ give rest? "All things are delivered unto Me of my Father, and no man knoweth the Son but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son shall reveal Him. Come unto Me...and I will give you rest." Come to Christ for rest. He will give you rest by revealing to you the Father. The heart of man

YEARNS FOR THE FATHER.

We are sometimes treated as if we were orphans shut up in some kind of asylum, with good people watching over us, I daresay. We are not orphans. Christ said: "I will not leave you comfortless; I will come to you." He not only says that; He says of him who keeps his commandments that "the Father will love him"; "We," he adds, "will come and make our abode with him." Ye shall know the Son; ye shall be possessed by the Spirit; ye shall rest upon the bosom of the Father.

Read the parable of the Prodigal Son over again and say to yourself, "I will arise, I do arise, and go to my Father." You will find Him running to meet you, to embrace you, to fold you within the open arms of a Father's love.

* Notes of address at Glasgow Convention.

A Veteran and his Bible.

[Mr. George Müller, of the Bristol Orphan Houses, had engaged to address the yearly meeting of the British and Foreign Bible Society at the Town Hall, Birmingham, on October 26, 1897, but being prevented by indisposition from fulfilling his engagement, Rev. Aston Binns was requested to take his place. In consequence of this, Mr. Aston Binns requested Mr. Müller to give in writing his testimony regarding the inspiration of the Holy Scriptures, and to state how many copies of the Word of God he had circulated. This Mr. Müller did in the following letter]:—

DEAR SIR,—Most reluctantly I came to the decision not to attend the Bible Society meeting at Birmingham, but the weak state of my heart, in my ninety-third year, obliged me to attend to the advice of my medical advisers. Will you, therefore, have the kindness to read to the meeting that I have been for sixty-eight years and three months, viz., since July, 1829, a lover of the Word of God, and that uninterruptedly? During this time I have read considerably more than one hundred times through the whole Bible, with great delight. I have for many years read through the whole Old and New Testaments, with prayer and meditation, four times every year.

I also state, to the glory of God, as his witness, that in my inmost soul I believe that all the books of the Old Testament, and the Gospels, Epistles, and the Revelation of the New Testament, are written by inspiration. This I have to the full believed ever since my conversion in the beginning of November, 1825. Before that time, though brought up from my earliest days to be a clergyman, I cared nothing at all about the Bible, and from my fourteenth year to the twentieth never read a single chapter of it.

My great love for the Word of God, and my deep conviction of the need of its being spread far and wide, has led me to pray to God to use me as an instrument to do this and to supply me with means for it; and He has condescended to enable me to circulate, in all parts of the earth, and in various languages, 284,652 Bibles, 1,458,662 New Testaments, 21,350 copies of the Book of Psalms, and 223,500 other portions of the Holy Scriptures; and God has been pleased thus, simply through the reading of the Holy Scriptures, to bring thousands of persons to the knowledge of the Lord Jesus.

An especial blessing in this way has been granted in Spain, France, and Ireland, and in the spiritually dark villages of our own country, through Bible-carriages, which I supplied with Testaments at half-price, and with Bibles at three-quarters of the cost prices.

May the Lord's richest blessing rest upon the meeting in Birmingham.—Yours very sincerely,

GEORGE MÜLLER.

The All-pervasiveness of Sin. — Perhaps there is no thought more awful than this, that sin is all around us and within us, and we know not what it is. We are beset by it on every side; it hangs upon us, hovers about us, casts itself across our path, hides itself where our next footstep is to fall, searches us through and through, listens at our heart, floats through all our thoughts, draws our will under its sway and ourselves under its dominion, and we do not know what it is. It is a pestilence that walketh in darkness—nothing stays its advance; it passes through all barriers, all strongholds; the very air seems to waft it into our dwellings.—Bishop Atlay.

The Glasgow Convention.

[By Our Own Correspondent.]

MANY of the friends who attended the meetings for the deepening of spiritual life in Queen's Rooms, Glasgow, last week, must have sighed for the sunny skies and the pure ether of Keswick. Throughout the Conference days the city was continuously enveloped in a damp mist that intercepted the light, and certainly did not add to the exhilaration of physical existence. Perhaps, however, advanced Christians ought to rise superior to such mundane matters, and be all the more thankful that material fogs cannot dim the effulgence of the forthshining of the Sun of Righteousness when He comes with soul-gladness and healing in his wings.

In the matter of teaching, the Conference was well served. Dr. Elder Cumming and the other friends who arrange the Convention had secured the help of such well-accredited brethren as Messrs. Meyer, C. G. Moore, Houghton, Gregson, W. B. Sloan, and J. G. Govan. The presence and speech of Pastor Theodore Monod, of Paris, were specially welcome. The four addresses he gave to the Convention were, as usual with him, simple and striking in their beautiful setting forth of primal truths. He carried the hearers from the shifting sands of subjective experience to the rock-bed of first principles in the relation and work of the three Persons in the Godhead—the Object as well as the Source of all true spiritual life. We hope to reproduce these helpful utterances in our columns; the first appears on a preceding page.

One of the familiar watchwords on these platforms is "absolute obedience" to God in heart and life. This was the key-note that Rev. J. G. Gregson struck at the opening meeting on Tuesday forenoon. He proved by Scripture example and illustration the fatal results of half-hearted obedience to the commands of God, and went on to show how absolute obedience on the part of the Christian is only possible "in Christ," who perfectly wrought and fulfilled the Father's will. As good soldiers of Jesus Christ we were exhorted to be as faithful to our Commander as were the Gordon Highlanders the other day on the Afghan frontier, when at the Captain's order they gallantly carried a difficult position in the face of tremendous odds.

Rev. F. B. Meyer's line of teaching is too well known to need much description or comment. One of the addresses he gave was on the words in the Apocalypse, "There was war in heaven." Leaving aside the speaker's primary interpretation of the passage, which might provoke expository disagreement, it may be said that his application of the words to the soul-struggle of the believer with the opposing forces at work within him was very telling and impressive, in its call to the overcoming life through the indwelling power of Christ. Another address by Mr. Meyer was on realising and utilising the power and position we enjoy by virtue of our union with Christ.

Rev. C. G. Moore's words were exceedingly helpful in their sympathetic tone and their presentation of the ability of Christ to achieve the humanly impossible, and to carry the believing soul above enchaining and depressing circumstances. Rev. W. Houghton, too, was able to pass on many comforting messages in this line of exhortation; as well as to point out weaknesses and hindrances in the perfect following of the Master. Mr. W. B. Sloan spoke on the satisfying of soul-thirst; and on another occasion on Faith, taking the hearers away from the act and instrument of faith to Him who is its object. Mr. J. G. Govan gave a searching address one evening from the words of Paul—"To me to live is Christ." In his hypothetical applications of the passage he left out the closing word "Christ" and substituted such words as "business," "pleasure," etc., contrasting the many selfish schemes of life with the singleness of purpose that animated the great Apostle.

There were the customary early prayer-meetings and missionary gatherings, as well as a praise and testimony meeting on Saturday morning. One could not but feel disappointment at the meagre showing of Glasgow ministers on the platform or in the audience. Presumably they are all busy now with their winter work; or was their presence specially invited?

Rev. John McNeill.

[By Our Own Correspondent.]

THE mission in Dunfermline underwent no cessation of interest to the close, which, so far as Mr. McNeill is concerned, was on Friday last. The united committee resolved, however, to prolong the special nightly meetings for another week, to be addressed by the ministers of the town. They hoped that many who had been deeply stirred in spirit during the two preceding weeks would thus be led to decision and open discipleship.

Mr. McNeill's closing meetings on Friday were full of living interest. To a congregation which almost filled the Free Abbey Church in the afternoon he discoursed with remarkable power and effect from the last two verses of the 23rd Psalm. He had previously given two Bible readings from the same favourite psalm, but these closing verses formed the basis of a wealth of practical exposition and apt illustration that were immensely enjoyed, judging from the attentive demeanour of the hearers. Things new and old are brought by the evangelist out of the most familiar passages with such profusion and in such a natural sequence that the listener first marvels at the fecundity of the exposition, and then wonders that such beautiful and stimulating thoughts never occurred to him before.

The big Queen Anne-street U.P. Church presented a stirring spectacle for the closing meeting of all on Friday evening. In a competition for lengthy sermons Mr. McNeill would now and then stand a prime chance of winning the prize. On this evening, besides a twenty minutes' talk devoted to the continuance of the special effort and to some genial words of general farewell, he preached for over an hour and a half by the clock. The closely-packed crowd showed no signs of weariness, and were evidently prepared to listen for an indefinite period. The preacher's subject was the Passover, as a typical picture of Christ's atoning work. I scarcely ever hear the evangelist without thanking God for raising his gifted servant so manifestly as a messenger to this generation, which seems inclined to let go its grip on the vital doctrines so dear to our Puritan forefathers. Mr. McNeill, although he is so modern and up-to-date in many respects, is inflexibly firm in conserving and enforcing the teaching which has been so potent and fruitful in past seasons of revival. Sin, guilt, hell, and the Cross are to him as real as the paternal love and forgiving mercy of God. This address on the Passover affords a peculiar opportunity of restating the basic truths of the Evangelical faith, and it is done with such logical force that the caviller is left without a loophole of escape. So the last words of the evangelist to Dunfermline were a shutting up of the hearers to a personal acceptance of God's pardoning grace as revealed in the Saviour Christ. A veteran minister who sat near me during the evening, at the close of the final appeal whispered sotto voce to a fellow pastor, "Marvellous, marvellous!" And that must have been the verdict of all.

Mr. McNeill has well earned a week's rest before proceeding for a month's work to Montrose and Arbroath. The only other engagement he has made in Scotland for the present is a mission at Hawick in December. He will probably begin his London mission on Jan. 16, 1898, working for four months in different sections of the metropolis, with occasional periods of needed rest.

Sailors' Orphan Society of Scotland.—The report opens with mention of Sir C. W. Cayzer's gift of £10,000 to provide new homes. Earnest efforts are being made to raise another £10,000. During the past year 41 children were admitted into the Homes, making 508 orphans now under the care of the Society, while numbers of children, all over Scotland, are being provided for, although left in the care of their mothers. The secretary is Mr. R. H. Hunter, 2, Park-circus, Glasgow.

Scottish Notes.

Like many similar institutions, the Glasgow Poor Children's Dinner Table Society is anticipating exceptional demands on its funds this winter, on account of the strikes among workmen. Last year the number of meals supplied amounted to 197,972.

The Glasgow Home Mission Union is setting itself ever more earnestly to enlist all the denominations in the city in the work of evangelisation, and especially to arrange that by a careful division into districts no portion of the city shall be overlooked, nor overlapping take place.

Not for a number of years has so much interest centred in the annual meetings in Glasgow and Edinburgh in connection with the McAll Mission. Advantage has been taken of the presence of Pastor Theodore Monod in Scotland to bring the claims of this work more prominently before the Christian public.

Methodism is proving an undoubted success in Scotland, on the lines of the great "Missions" established some years ago in the Windsor Halls, Glasgow, and in the Albert Hall, Edinburgh. Rev. F. B. Meyer preached the annual sermon of the former organisation last week, and was the principal speaker at the annual meeting in the evening.

Considerable interest has been aroused in foreign mission circles by an address given by Lord Overtoun at Perth last Tuesday. He said he had met Mr. Cecil Rhodes recently, and had talked about the position of affairs in South Africa. Mr. Rhodes has given a large tract of land (100 square miles in extent) in a healthy valley, on which a Missionary Institute is being established. The Livingstonia Mission (of which Lord Overtoun is chairman) has now in the field twenty-five Scottish missionaries, with 112 native evangelists and 354 native teachers.

At the autumn meeting of the Free Synod of Dumfries, a conference was held on "The Training of the Young." Rev. Homer Young (Lochmaben) read an able paper dealing with the subject as far as the home is concerned, in the course of which he observed that if a revival of spiritual religion is to take place at all, and if it is to have any permanent effect, it must begin in the Church and in the family. Within the last twenty or thirty years the Biblical idea of the family, as a great converting and sanctifying power, had been almost wholly lost sight of. Rev. John Jameson (Canonbie) dealt in a very practical way with the subject in relation to Sabbath-schools and Bible-classes, strongly recommending the formation of Christian Endeavour Societies in all the congregations.

The City of Glasgow is again in the throes of a municipal contest. Last year the whole of the Town Council had to retire, and seventy-five gentlemen were elected by the twenty-five wards of the city as members of the Council. The Glasgow Progressive Union was last year organised to secure the return of Christian men to the Council; it represents all the leading Churches and temperance and philanthropic societies in the city. Out of fifty-six contested seats the Union were able to secure the election of forty-eight of its candidates. This year twelve of its representatives are unopposed, and out of the remaining contests it is expected that it will gain a majority of the seats. The Union is a great moral force in the city, and had made a good impression on the electors. Will other large cities please take note?

"Wait on the Lord; be of good courage, and He shall strengthen thine heart."—Psa. xxvii. 14.
"At evening time it shall be light."—Zech. xiv. 7.

Art sad, dear heart?
Do fogs and cloud
Thy soul enshroud?
Act still thy part;
Ere falls the night
Look up for light.

Expectant stand;
For God throws wide
At eventide,
With loving hand,
Heaven's glory-gate
To those who wait.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, November 7.

"Prophesy over these bones...Prophesy unto the wind."—Ezek. xxxvii. 4, 9.

THIS is our double office, as servants of God. We are to prophesy to earth and heaven, to man and God. There are some who forget the second of these injunctions, and their work fails of its highest result. When they speak bones "come together, bone to bone," there is a stir in the graves of death and corruption, a coming together of the people to hear the Word, and in many cases all the appearance of a new life. The flesh comes up and skin covers them above, but (and how fatal is the admission which this but introduces) there is no breath in them. It is clear that no amount of human persuasiveness or oratory can secure the true regeneration of the soul. That which is born of the flesh may be galvanised by the energy of the flesh into the appearance of spiritual life, but it will always remain flesh. The life of God can only come from God, it must be inbreathed by his blessed Spirit, and anything short of this is failure.

If you can do nothing else, prophesy to the Spirit, cry to the four winds, because He may come in the icy north wind of tribulation, or the warm west wind of prosperity; but speak with the certain assurance of, "Thus saith the Lord God, Come." There is a sense in which the believer has the privilege of commanding the Spirit of God. "Concerning the works of my hands, command ye Me." Even when you are speaking, let your heart be in the attitude of expectancy, and according to your faith, it shall be done unto you.

MONDAY, November 8.

"Behold, I am against thee, O Gog, prince of Rosh, Meshech, and Tubal."—Ezek. xxxviii. 3.

It is startling to meet with these three names, which are found in modern maps as Russia, Moscow, and Tobolsk, and to feel that we may be reading words that are shortly to come to pass. So far as we can see, they have not as yet been fulfilled. Within the hearing of the present generation, Russia may resolve to go up to the land of unwalled villages, such as those that abound in Palestine, and may be challenged by the merchants of Tarshish on the far West. Some have even found an allusion to the English standard in the reference to the young lions of verse 13.

The shrewdest among us cannot guess what may await the world in the near future. Peer as we may into the dim mist, we cannot descry the events which are coming upon the earth. But we may be thankful that we have this word of prophecy, to which we "do well to take heed, as unto a light shining in a dark place." It is like the illustrated railway-table, which contains a list of the stations through which we must pass ere we reach the terminus. And as the porters call out the names, and we find that they correspond to the route as detailed on the tables, we come to place more implicit trust in our guide-book, and to count with absolute certainty on our ultimate emergence at our destination. "When ye see these things coming to pass, know ye that He is nigh, even at the doors." In the meanwhile let your loins be girt, and your lamps burning, and ye as those that wait for their Lord.

TUESDAY, November 9.

"Now will I bring again the captivity of Jacob, and have mercy upon the whole house of Israel; and I will be jealous for my holy name."—Ezek. xxxix. 25.

All bringing again must originate in God. The sheep can only wander on, further and further from the fold, ever deeper into the dark mountains; it will never find its way back; if it shall see the fold again, it will be because the shepherd goes after it until he finds it.

We should never be surprised at the inclination of our nature from God. Our natural bias is away from Him. The pole of our life is aslant from the pole-star. Our natural tendency is to vanity, corruption, and chaos. If God were to withdraw Himself, however slightly, from the natural world, it would revert to the darkness and confusion of its earliest stages; and whenever God is absent from our moral life there is the natural and inevitable reversion to the original Adam-type. But God is rich in mercy, in neutralising the effects of our evil nature. He calls us back to Himself; nay, He comes after us, and brings again our captivity for his name's sake. Are you in captivity to evil habits from which you cannot break loose, to evil associations from which you cannot free yourself, to circumstances that shut you in as iron bars? Have you come to an end of your efforts for liberty, finding the more you struggle the more deeply you involve yourself in the close-woven meshes? Then look away to the Lord God, plead his promises, ask Him to remember his holy name, and He will bring you again out of your captivity.

WEDNESDAY, November 10.

"Son of man, behold with thine eyes, and hear with thine ears, and set thine heart upon all that I shall show thee; for to the intent that I might show them unto thee art thou brought hither: declare all that thou seest."—Ezek. xl. 4.

We are called to be God's witnesses, beholding the visions of God, and bearing witness to our brethren of what we have seen, tasted, and handled of the Word of Life. When the city is draped in mist and gloom, the artist takes his portfolio and climbs into the high mountain of vision. He beholds there the crystalline beauty of the unsullied snow, the roseate hues of sunrise and sunset, the heaped magnificence of the glaciers with their blue depth. Transferring his visions to his canvas, he returns to this lower sphere, and exhibits his picture on the walls of some public gallery, from which it silently witnesses to one of shy Nature's coyest moods. It is thus in Divine things also.

God often leads his children into startling and unexpected experiences. They are troubled on every side, bereft of dear ones, deprived of health or property, compelled to pass through the scorching fires of slander, misunderstanding, and temptation. There are times when they should set their hearts on all that is being shown, to see the way by which God is leading them, the comfort with which He is comforting them, the help in which He is environing them. They have been brought to these experiences that they may know themselves, and God, and his ways of dealing with his people; and may be able to declare what they have been taught, to the intent that unto the principalities and powers in the heavenlies may be known through the Church the manifold wisdom of God.

THURSDAY, November 11.

"And he brought me to the Temple and measured," etc.—Ezek. xli. 1.

This is the pattern of an Ideal Temple, which was presented in thought to the prophet's mind, as the pattern of the Tabernacle was shown to Moses on the Mount. It is interesting to notice the minute measurements and specifications—even to the ornaments of cherubim and palm trees. We cannot but remember that the plan of our life is also worked out before the face of God, and that we shall live to the best purpose, when we make all things according to the pattern shown us on the Mount of Prayer and Vision.

Our Master, speaking of his human life, said, "The Son can do nothing of Himself, but what He seeth the Father do; and whatsoever He doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise." Oh that we could ever remember to look upward to God's pattern, and do nothing except what He reveals as his will for us; whilst careful to omit nothing that has been prepared for us to say or do. Look up, child of God; look into the plan of your temple-building. The holy places of prayer, the altars of your sacrifice and consecration, the tables of your fellowship, the doors that lead out to work and open into chambers of pain and suffering, the length and breadth of each, the ornamentation to be chased upon your soul—all, all are fixed. Let your one aim be that God's will for you should be realised in you; and dare to believe that, if only you will yield to Him, He will work out in you that which is well-pleasing in his sight, to whom shall be the glory for ever.

FRIDAY, November 12.

"The priests that are near unto the Lord shall eat the most holy things."—Ezek. xlii. 13.

Every believer is a priest unto God. We are called, not to offer propitiatory sacrifices—there is no need for this, since Jesus offered the one sufficient oblation for the sins of the world when He died—but to present ourselves living sacrifices, to offer up a sacrifice of praise to God continually, and to do good and communicate of our substance to the help of others.

Are you near unto the Lord? Hath He chosen you to stand before Him, and know his will, and hear the word from his mouth? Then most certainly you will often enter into the inner chamber to eat of the most holy things. These are enumerated as the meat-offering, the sin-offering, and the guilt-offering. We must have fellowship with God in his joy over the spotless character and lovely human life of Jesus, which may be compared to fine flour We must have fellowship in the atoning death of our Substitute, feeding on all the sacred meaning of the wondrous Cross. We must avail ourselves of Jesus as our guilt-offering, making propitiation for our mistakes, negligences, and infirmities (Lev. ii. iv. v.).

If you would be near to God, feed on the work of Jesus; if you are near to God, you cannot live without it. To muse on the propitiatory aspects of the death of Jesus is as necessary for the strength of our inner life as food is to the body. Let us beware of imitating the mistake of Lev. x. 16-20; and let us be very careful to eat of the wave breast and the heave thigh, which stand for the love of Jesus for our affections, and the might of Jesus for our strength (Lev. x. 14).

SATURDAY, November 13.

"The glory of the God of Israel came from the way of the East...Behold the glory of the Lord filleth the house...And He said unto me, This is the place of my throne...where I will dwell for ever."—Ezek. xliii. 2, 7.

At the beginning of this book (chaps. ix. and x.) we beheld the departure of the Shekinah cloud from the doomed temple. But, now, to the new-reconstructed temple it returns. So will God shed the sense of his presence through our hearts. We may have grieved Him, and lost it by defiling his holy name, and by the abominations which we have committed. Perhaps there has been only a thin partition-wall between our service to Him and our yielding to impurity and sin. But if we will put away our unfaithfulness, our coquetting with the world, our tampering with the flesh, He will return and dwell in our midst for ever.

There is a very precious promise connected with the Divine return and indwelling. "I will dwell in the midst of the children of Israel, and they shall no more defile my holy name" (7). Be willing to admit God, and He will come. If any man open the door, I will come in. Whenever God comes He will make the old sin abhorrent and impossible; and his indwelling will not be transient and fitful, but permanent.

This is what we need. We cannot have holiness, apart from the Holy One. The attribute may not be divorced from its possessor. But to the soul that desires holiness, the holy God comes, and infills, and keeps; so that darkness cannot intrude on the domain of light, nor hate on love, nor death on life. Has the Shekinah left thee? Lo, it returns by the way it went, and thine earthly life shall shine again with his glory.

F. B. M.

H.R.H. Princess Mary, Duchess of Teck.

"I FEEL I am here to do a little good, and I will do it as long as I am able." These words, uttered by the Princess whose death, last week, is causing general mourning, give the keynote of her incessant activities on behalf of the poor and suffering. Spoken in response to a suggestion that she should restrict her engagements in view of her failing health, they reveal the spirit which animated her abundant labours.

Princess Mary Adelaide Wilhelmina Elizabeth was the second daughter of Adolphus Frederick, first Duke of Cambridge, the seventh son of George III. She was therefore the Queen's first cousin. She was born on November 27, 1833, at the Viceregal Palace in the city of Hanover. When she was not yet five, the little Princess accompanied her parents to England to see the coronation of Queen Victoria. Her childhood was spent between London and the Schloss of Rumpenheim, where the Princess of Wales spent a good deal of her youth. But the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge made a point of passing a large portion of each year in England.

The death of the Duke of Cambridge in 1850 threw a deep shadow over his daughter's girlhood, and the widowed Duchess and her children retired into the strictest privacy at Kew. Both mother and daughter, in these years before Princess Mary's marriage, occupied themselves systematically with those works of charity and mercy with which the Duchess of Teck's name was afterwards to be so notably associated. The announcement of Princess May's engagement to the Duke of Teck came as a great surprise to the British people, by whom her Royal Highness was already much beloved. The marriage took place in the parish church of Kew on June 12, 1866. The Duke and Duchess of Teck spent the first few years of their married life in Kensington Palace, where the Queen granted them a suite of rooms, and it was there that their four children were born.

The Duchess of Teck always fully accepted the responsibilities of her position, and never more so than during the quiet years which she spent at White Lodge, Richmond. There can be no doubt that her sudden decease is in a great measure owing to her extraordinary and unceasing personal service in the cause of philanthropy. She always spent in charity at least one-fifth part of the annual allowance of £5000 granted her by Parliament. Her philanthropic labours were unwearying, and those of us who met Her Royal Highness again and again know that her interest in good work was neither perfunctory nor formal, but of the most practical type. In real work, her exalted state seemed forgotten in the genial and thorough way in which she entered into the matter in hand.

It will be recalled that during the first visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey to London the Duchess of Teck was a frequent attendant at their meetings, and it is stated that she was deeply impressed by the evangelists' plain and fervid presentation of the Gospel.

At George Yard, Whitechapel, she was a very familiar figure, entering with the most careful precision into the details of the work and the sorrows of the children. The veteran George Holland was regarded as one of her personal friends, and he rejoices in numerous and continued marks of her kindness. Amongst his choicest treasures in his private room are mementoes from "the Duchess" and her daughter, Princess May.

The following reminiscence of a visit to the Home of Industry, penned by Miss Macpherson, reveals the Duchess of Teck as she really was when at home amongst workers:—

A few years ago Her Royal Highness entered my private room asking, "Is this the Home for Destitute Children?" She had been visiting George Holland that afternoon, and had come over to see us at Bethnal Green. She speedily put me at ease, sitting down and asking me to do the same. Soon, after a series of questions, her whole heart was in touch with both the hundred dear aged widows and the destitute children, tears of sympathy flowing freely from her loving heart. By this time Lord Radstock and half-a-dozen others were in the room, having walked to the Home of Industry from Mr. Holland's, while Her Royal Highness had driven. The Royal lady turned to Lord R., and said, "This is a story that will do us all good in the West of London. I will gather all the ladies I know; you arrange when and where we can meet, if Miss Macpherson will only come and repeat what she has now been telling me." Ere many weeks the gathering took place in Eccleston Conference Hall.

H.R.H. THE LATE DUCHESS OF TECK.

From photograph by Messrs. Elliott and Fry, Baker-street.

To return to the visit to the Home, the engagement that evening was to receive 200 starving men from the lodging-houses to a soup supper, and a score of boys from the Training Home stood in the hall ready to sing or recite to the men when admitted. The Royal lady spoke to the rescued boys. We detailed the sad circumstances of the last boy received from the West of London; when to our delight, with a true motherly heart, she stooped and kissed the brow of the motherless West-end waif; and, two years after, she recognised his photo among others sent from Canada, saying "That's my little Sam Smith," and in her own genial way put the photo in her pocket.

Miss Child, of the Sailors' Welcome Home, writes:—

With many others, we feel deeply the loss of Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Teck, who took such a great interest in the Lord's work under my care among our sailors. Her sympathy was shown not only by the frequent visits to the Home, but also by the sending of valuable gifts for our sailors.

These are but typical instances of the way in which she entered into good work among the poor—many other workers could give similar reminiscences of personal visits and genuine helpfulness. Among the movements which peculiarly enlisted her sympathy was that of ragged schools. She had caught from the late Earl Shaftesbury enthusiasm for this cause, and her labours in connection with the Ragged School Union were endless. Not only did she appear in public again and again on its behalf—as at the annual meeting, when she presided more than once, and distributed the prizes—but she worked constantly at home in stitching and making garments for the poor children. "One Who Knew Her" writes:—

Princess Mary's face was always alight with kindness and goodwill, but it was not in public where she was seen at her best. You had to see her at White Lodge, in the midst of the work that was so dear to her, to know her full worth. I have seen her stand, hour after hour, in a room at White Lodge, set apart for the display of thousands upon thousands of garments for the poor, showing them to one set of visitors after the other; repeating the story of the destination of those garments; taking up with evident affection and appreciation bundle after bundle of warm things; praising those who made them; telling of those to whom they were to be given, and occasionally telling an amusing story as to the way in which she had coaxed a gift of clothes out of the Prince of Wales or other male relatives.

The work of Mrs. Meredith also shared her sympathy, and indeed the Village Home at Addlestone is named after her, and has been frequently visited by her.

The secretary of the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children writes:—

It would be difficult to exaggerate the sorrow felt by the one hundred and thirty boys of Fortescue House, Twickenham, at the loss of the beloved Duchess, for Her Royal Highness had not only personally visited the Boys' Home, but also some time ago attended their musical and gymnastic display at the Surbiton Assembly Rooms.

Another institution for which she always had a warm corner in her heart was Dr. Barnardo's Homes. She travelled to Hawkhurst some few years ago for the purpose of inaugurating the work at "Babies' Castle," and the interest she displayed in the little ones was quite touching.

But, indeed, it would be impossible to enumerate all the charities which her Royal Highness assisted, both by her purse and by her presence at ceremonies, to say nothing of the enormous correspondence entailed by the multitudinous appeals to her well-known kindness of heart. The Royal Cambridge Asylum for Soldiers' Widows, founded by the late Duke of Cambridge, was one of her favourite charities. The Needlework Guild, founded by the late Lady Wolverton to provide clothes for the deserving poor, owes the vast extension of its operations in a great measure to the strong personal interest taken in it by the late Duchess. Her Royal Highness practically started the Home of Rest for poor London Working Women at Coombe, the training of young servants occupied much of her attention, and she devoted a singular amount of time and thought to the Society for the Relief of Distressed Irish Ladies.

Moreover, she was deeply interested in foreign missionary work, particularly amongst the women of India. She was patron of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, and on one occasion attended the annual meeting of the society. The Hospital and Medical Missions Department appealed strongly to her practical mind. The hospital at Patna bears her name. In short, the Duchess was a real friend to every good work, and no one knows how much she did privately to advance the cause of righteousness at home and abroad.

Three Missionaries.

WITH a growing interest in missionary work, there is an increasing supply of missionary biography. Of many worthies of the past little more than a name remains, over and above the work which God permitted them to do; their experience, often so dearly bought, has not been made available for the assistance of those who have come after them, and their example has not been influential in the degree which it might have been had their story been unfolded for the help and encouragement of others. From recent works of a biographical character, we have selected three for present notice.

IN EASTERN LANDS.

First comes one which brings before us a missionary with a record of forty years, who bears a name which one meets with in more than one part of the field. Dr. Gulick* has been particularly happy in his biographer. Lest these graceful memorials should seem to any to be over-partial, Mrs. Jewett, at the outset, disarms criticism by reminding us that "every human life has its stronger and its weaker side, but that a daughter writes this history; and though she has striven to be honest, her father is its hero." But indeed it does not need the sympathetic eye of a devoted daughter to discover in every outline of this unique figure a truly remarkable and lovable man.

From the early days when, in boyish characters, the records of the day were sedately and concisely chronicled in the pages of the square diary kept even at eight years of age, down to the April afternoon when the gate of life "opened noiselessly" to admit the veteran missionary labourer, it will be seen that Dr. Gulick's mind was no ordinary one; and this record of his life seems to us to have peculiar interest. Born in Honolulu in 1828, of missionary parents, his earliest associations were of a deeply religious nature, and in these lay days, when one hears so little of deep conviction of sin, it is particularly interesting to notice that, in the case of Halsey Gulick, the Christian training of his shielded childhood in no way lessened or superseded which sometimes comes to the sensitive conscience at the first discovery of sin, as sin appears in God's sight. A striking part of the volume is that which tells of his early spiritual experiences. At the age of fourteen or fifteen he wrote in his journal: "I believe I understand the way of salvation; yet there is something, I know not what, unless it is my wicked heart, which prevents me, and which I have reason to fear will be my ruin. .Not all my guilt subdues me, nor my great danger, nor yet the compassion of a Redeemer in dying, nor the unparalleled long-suffering of a merciful God. Oh, wretched man that I am! Nothing but the grace of God can save me...I do not realise the state I am in, or I could take no peace day or night."

THAT AGONISED AWAKENING

When at length the solitary young seeker (for he was now separated from his home and friends) had groped his way to God, and found the sweet secret of joy and liberty, the missionary instinct at once became strong within him; and his resolve, at fifteen years of age, "I will claim the whole heathen world as my countrymen," may be taken as the keynote of a life devoted to missionary toil and enterprise. Greatly did he rejoice that six brothers and one sister were stirred up to join the same service; and perhaps the crowning joy of their life was granted them when, years later, Dr. and Mrs. Gulick saw their own children turn to foreign missionary work.

For a full understanding of the varied labours of Dr. Gulick and his wife during a long and remarkable career, we must refer our readers to the book itself. The story of the early years of isolation and privation in their beloved Micronesia is a part of the history which cannot fail to interest.

Dr. Gulick's latest labours were in Japan and China, where, as representative of the American Bible Society, he did a great work in the way of distributing the Scriptures. As a missionary deputation he was well known and exceedingly popular.

A REMARKABLE TESTIMONY to the reward of missionary labour, even here and now, is that on page 180. "This missionary life makes no subtraction from life's happiness. It is all a superaddition, a reduplication, yes, more, of life's felicity. It is a real, substantial, eternal joy, to kindle light in darkness, to diffuse life amidst death, to convert a wilderness to gardens, to make men of brutes, angels of men. And this is nowhere so eminently possible as where light and life have never come."

A CENTRAL AFRICAN BISHOP.

Let us now notice another missionary nobleman, this time an Englishman—Dr. Chauncy Maples,* Bishop of Likoma. Many will remember the painful shock felt when, two years ago, the mournful tidings reached England that the newly-appointed Bishop of Likoma had perished in the blue waters of his beloved Lake Nyasa, only about two months after his consecration in St. Paul's Cathedral, and just before he could quite re-reach the scene of nineteen years' missionary labours in Central Africa—thenceforward to have been his diocese. It is not only the personal friends of Bishop Maples who will value the records carefully arranged by his sister. A less loving hand would have found in the strong personality of this pioneer missionary, in his indomitable energy, his cheerful self-sacrifice and humility, and, above all, in his spirituality, a subject worthy of a glowing pen, whilst the letters, which are numerous and characteristic, throw many a

SIDE-LIGHT UPON AFRICAN LIFE

in its various aspects, and especially from the missionary point of view.

Ruthless reviewers will undoubtedly complain, and not without reason, that too many letters are embodied in the volume. It must be conceded, however, that many of them are well worthy of preservation. Those to his mother, in particular, bear evidences throughout of that tender devotion to her who was one of the formative influences of a beautiful and beneficent life. The letters also contain interesting references to prominent persons, and to names which are already historic, as well as showing the writer's wide sympathies, varied gifts, and high degree of literary culture. His quiet humour gleams out continually, enlivening the pages. It is irresistibly funny as well as pathetic, to read of a "venerable archdeacon's" painful efforts to prepare wholesome and well-cooked bread for his sick fellow-labourers, the baking of which bread, he says, required watching during several of his busy, valuable hours. And then, elsewhere, one reads with sympathetic interest of the consternation caused to peaceable bachelor missionaries by the arrival of

A LARGE CONSIGNMENT OF DOLLS;

whereas his biographer explains that African children do not favour dolls!

It must be clearly understood that the late Bishop Maples was distinctly and avowedly in sympathy and connection with the "Anglican" Church, as he delighted to call it, and there are, as a matter of course, terms and allusions throughout these pages with which—as Evangelical Protestants—we cannot at all sympathise, and which especially grate upon us, as used in connection with missionary effort. These matters are not, however, obtruded in any large degree; and, notwithstanding grave doctrinal differences, we gladly recognise the steadfast, earnest efforts, and the evident conscientiousness and spirituality, of a man who, more than most men, realised, as he himself expresses it, that "human affection, even that between mother and son, is only holy and sanctified if it meets in the love of God; and our love for God can only be developed by our seeking to do his will always, and to sacrifice all things that that will may be also ours" (page 229).

If this history of a life so sadly terminated at the age of forty-four is less thrilling than some others, still it should have a hearty welcome. It is really surprising to see how much may be accomplished in a few short years, and by one whose health could never, we think, have been strong. The great personal affection of Bishop Chauncy Maples for the people amongst whom he laboured met with its appropriate reward in a devotion as genuine as it was general; and one of the most simple and telling testimonies in the volume is that borne by a native teacher, "He was

ONE TO MAKE PEOPLE HAPPY."

It strikes us, too, as a powerful comment upon the practical influence of his example and teaching that this same native teacher, on hearing that a small legacy had been left to him by the Bishop, went the very next day to the missionary in charge at Likoma expressing a wish to give a tenth of the legacy to God. Photographs and a map of Central Africa lend interest to this volume.

IN THE "SICK MAN'S" LAND.

The third work to be noticed is autobiographical, and brings before us one who has a world-wide reputation for his pioneer and varied work in Turkey*—Dr. Cyrus Hamlin. When an autobiography has reached its fourth edition, it may be said, without prejudice, that the writer has proved himself able to speak for himself. Little remains for us now beyond the expression of a hope that the fifth edition may speedily be called for. Dr. Hamlin comes of a Huguenot family, and as a traveller, a missionary, and an author the history of his life and times may well have interest for others outside the charmed circle of his own family, though it was for the latter that these records were, he tells us, originally written.

The scene of his missionary labours is one which has especial interest at this present time. For a long while all eyes have been painfully drawn to Turkey, and it will be seen from these pages, as clearly as it has been learnt from other sources, that the persecution of the Armenian Christians is by no means a thing merely of yesterday and to-day. Even to the cursory reader it will be evident that the relation of the peoples was strained all along, and as early as 1839 Dr. Hamlin records the haughty answer of Ambassador Boutineff to an appeal made by Dr. Schauffler on behalf of a promising and intelligent young Armenian student who had been seized and carried off to Siberia on a Turkish steamer:—

"I might as well tell you now, Mr. Schauffler, that the Emperor of Russia, who is my master, will never allow Protestantism to set a foot in Turkey."

We cannot but admire the courage and dignity of Schauffler, who, bowing low to the ambassador, made instant reply:

"Your Excellency, the Kingdom of Christ, who is my Master, will never ask the Emperor of All the Russias where it may set its foot."

Dr. Hamlin's labours, carried on with untiring zeal amid great difficulties, were largely directed towards providing for the people; and his trials and triumphs in connection with the Bebek Seminary, and finally the establishment of the Robert College, Constantinople, are somewhat fully described.

There are other things of interest in the volume, and Dr. Hamlin is a ready writer, so that his story is told remarkably well, although we must admit that some of the experiences appear to us too personal for inclusion in chronicles of a public kind. The chapters which most attract us are, nevertheless, those which tell so racily of the early life on the old home-farm, of the winsome widowed mother, etc., and afterwards, more gravely, of his earliest impressions and his decision for Christ. We tell in his own words the characteristic directness with which the claim of foreign missions was faced: "I think I always had a trembling apprehension that if I should become a minister of the Gospel I should have to be a missionary to the heathen. What reason could I give to God or to my own conscience why I should not be?...I said to my conscience and my Lord, 'Here am I, send me.'"

The chapters, fifteen in number, are readable throughout, and the illustrations are good and numerous, adding interest and value to the book.

Soul Winning and Prayer Union.—This Union lately commenced its eighteenth year. Many members write of having received great help and blessing since joining it. Passages of Scripture, which have come with power to anyone, are sent in for daily texts, and the Lord has very greatly blessed these in numerous instances to readers. A monthly paper (issued gratis), entitled The Soul Winner, contains requests for thanksgiving for mercies and answers to prayer; also requests for prayer, which are sent by the members from different parts of the world. Friends who desire to join the Union should write to Mr. J. C. Smith, Newport-on-Tay, N.B.

Oxford Letter.

[By Our Own Correspondent.]

The Bishop of Sierra Leone gave the address at the Missionary Union on October 19. It was encouraging to see Hannington Hall nearly full of undergraduates, and many hearts must have been stirred by the appeal of the Bishop. "The gaps are many: the workers few," was a quotation read from the letter of an Oxford missionary in West Africa. Referring to his own late experience at Coomassie, the Bishop urged men to volunteer if only to save the heathen from themselves; 600 were put to death on one festival day! An undergraduate had previously asked if there were any real Christians in West Africa. With some warmth the Bishop replied that the Gospel was as powerful there as in England. The native Christians compare favourably with those in the Church at home.

The annual meeting of the Oxford Branch of the British and Foreign Bible Society was held on Monday week, in the new Examination Schools, the Earl of Stamford in the chair. The Bishop of Travancore and the Rev. Arnold Foster were the deputation. The chairman emphasised the unifying influence of missions through the Bible Society. The testimony of the Bishop was that Rome never changes, the tyranny of the priests pursuing the natives in his diocese by their refusal to allow them the use of the Bible. Mr. Foster's speech was a powerful appeal for the giving of the Word of God to the Chinese in the vernacular.

A large number of University men assembled in Hannington Hall on Tuesday to hear Dr. Grenfell, of the Mission to Deep-Sea Fishermen. Having worked among the fishermen of Labrador for some years, he has an interesting story to tell. His facts were new, and he had a pleasant way of stating them. When he told us that 150,000 men live for five months of the year on the water, and that 900 sick people have been treated in ninety-one days, we felt what scope there was for Christian work, and what a boon the Medical Mission is.

A special meeting, organised by the Oxford branch of the British Women's Temperance Association, on behalf of the Colony for Inebriates at Duxhurst, Surrey, was held in the Assembly Room at the Town Hall on Tuesday, under the presidency of the mayor. When we hear that there are now three women inebriates to one man, little more is needed to give the effort a warm place in the heart of those who love the Lord Jesus Christ.

The Christian Endeavour Society held its fourth anniversary on Sunday and Monday last at the Methodist Free Church, New Inn Hall-street. Special sermons were preached by Revs. E. Packer and W. Downing. The report read at the meeting on Monday revealed an increase of fifty-one members during the year.

A Friendly Society's Convalescent Home.—Mr. J. Passmore Edwards has subscribed £6000 towards the building of a friendly society's convalescent home at Herne Bay. In a letter to Mr. C. J. Drummond, Mr. Passmore Edwards writes:—"I will provide a building with accommodation for about fifty beds at a cost of not less than £6000. My desire is that the home shall be dedicated to the perpetual use of the members of the principal registered friendly societies of the country." Mr. Edwards proposes to invest the home in the name of some of the chief officers of the friendly societies. The ground selected is about a mile from the town of Herne Bay, and comprises about seven and a-half acres. The trustees are making a further appeal for £3000 to secure the site and also additional land of about the same area adjoining that purchased, and for furnishing the home. Mr. Passmore Edwards will lay the foundation-stone on Saturday, Nov. 6.

"Unto Me."

BY MRS. HARVEY-JELLIE.

CHAPTER I.

"TABBIE, dear, whatever shall we do? You and I have got to say it you know—'Thy will be done'—and its awful hard, Tabbie;" and little Janie Brewster sat down on the stairs, hugging her cat. Aunt Brewster, with whom she had lived since her mother's death, had been ill for a long time, and Tabbie had been her only companion; every crust of bread she shared with her cat, and the fond creature followed her everywhere. If Janie cried, Tabbie would creep up, and put her paws gently up to her face as if to comfort her.

"I wonder where we shall go. I'll take you wherever I go, I shan't leave you to be kicked about, so there, you old pet"; and Tabbie purred and rubbed her face against her protector's hand.

They had turned her out of the room, the two women who went in to see about getting her aunt ready for her coffin, and the lonely girl felt unutterably miserable. She cried a little, and the cold wind came whizzing up the staircase. She was hungry, too, for auntie had been so bad all the morning, and she hadn't thought of asking for anything, and the neighbours were not kind.

"Oh, Tabbie, my head aches; you come close and love me, and we'll try and rest in this corner, dear," and, putting her face on the soft fur back, she fell asleep, and a miracle it seemed she did not fall headlong down the rickety stairs.

"Get up, you little monkey, will you? A good deal you care about your poor aunt, a sleepin' here. Throw that cat out, and come and see the poor thing," said one of the women.

"Oh dear, I didn't mean to go to sleep, but please let me keep Tabbie, she'll break her heart if you throw her out." And Janie followed the women, carrying Tabbie under her arm.

"Now, I s'pose, you must come with me, till we hear about the orphanage. Pity she hadn't sent you there afore, and not leave other people all the trouble."

Janie gazed on the face of the one she had loved, the one who had taught her of Jesus and heaven, and she was full of wonder and distress; and then she followed down the stairs, cat in arms.

"Here's a bit of bread-and-butter, and you can sit by the fire while I go and get what I want in."

Left alone, Janie warmed her feet and hands, and ate her frugal meal.

"Tabbie, I'm getting sleepy again, and so are you. I'd better say my prayers; you sit there, close to the fender; I'll be quick, before she comes back." And, kneeling down, she began, "Please, dear Lord, take care of Tabbie and me somehow; but you can't do anything for poor aunt, 'cos she's dead; only she told me to be good, and I can't unless you help me, for Jesus' sake, Amen."

"There, my pet, now come"; and the cat curled itself round against her, and they both lay asleep, though it was only afternoon.

. . . . . .

Muriel Claughton, amid all the comforts of her pleasant home, was beginning another day. It was the morning on which Mrs. Brewster passed away in that comfortless room. But all was bright and warm and cheerful at "Hazeldene," and Muriel had her schoolroom, where the governess came to teach her, and the many rooms where she could go for change, and the tender love of father and mother. Breakfast was over, and family worship; and Mrs. Claughton drew her daughter's arm through hers, and they walked into the conservatory to see the flowers, for on that wintry day flowers were blooming there.

"I must go and see that poor woman Mrs. Brewster and her niece to-day."

"May I go to, Mamma; I would so like to go."

"Yes, if you wish it, dear; it is sad to think of any one ill and lonely, and so poor; and Jesus said, 'Inasmuch as ye did it, ye did it unto Me.' We will gladly do anything for Him, will we not?"

"I don't want to be selfish, and I have so many things I could do without. Can I take anything, mamma?"

"When your lessons are over, after dinner, we will go and see."

It was nearly four o'clock before Mrs. Claughton was free to go; and when they reached the door and entered to go upstairs a woman stopped them. "She's dead, poor body, some hours, and her girl is in there," she said, passing out, leaving them.

No answer came to the gentle rap, and Mrs. Claughton ventured to open the door.

"Is that little Janie?" Muriel whispered, and they quietly approached the sleeping child.

"Poor darling! and see the cat for her only companion," said Mrs. Claughton.

Janie awoke and began to cry; she could not at first realise where she was.

"Come and tell me all about it. Are you all alone here?"

"Yes; Mrs. Knox has gone out, and I was so sleepy. Have you seen Aunt? She is so still!"

"No, but I want to hear about you. Aunt is safe with Jesus; and now we must think of you," said Mrs. Claughton.

"Please if I go to the orphanage, can Tabbie go? I think she must be an orphan too."

The door was pushed opened, and the rough Mrs. Knox came in, speaking loudly to the visitors, and grumbling about her trouble with the child.

"Give her a bed to-night, and I will see what is to be done to-morrow. I will come in the morning." And Mrs. Claughton spoke kindly to the poor girl. And Muriel stroked Tabbie, much to the owner's delight.

"Mamma, must Janie go to an orphanage? Oh, how I wish we could do something for her."

"What would you suggest, Muriel, as something to do for Jesus—'unto Me.'"

Silence for a little. Then she answered, "I know, mamma, I would like to take her home with us till someone very kind comes for her."

"But that will mean expense. What can you give up?"

"Papa is going to buy me a pony—I think I can—yes, I'll try and give that up. Will that do?"

There was much talk over the matter at home round the fire that evening, and Mr. Claughton said, "Muriel, Jesus is watching and listening, and He sees that lonely girl, to Him would be the deed of unselfish love. But the pony must be given up, and some of your indulgences. We will pray about it, and think well, and to-morrow decide."

There was a struggle, and Muriel thought of her one great wish for a pony. Then she thought of Janie and her cat, and the dead aunt; and then she went to sleep in her pretty bed, and over her the same God watched who also saw poor Janie on the comfortless bed, in the cold, bare room; and in dreams Muriel seemed to see the desolate girl with no friend. One seemed standing near, who touched her and pointed to the shivering child and said, "Will you not do it—Unto me?" and she woke and felt in haste to tell her parents. Then again she slept, and once more the poor girl was there, and beside her a lovely white pony, and then a voice said, "Inasmuch as ye did it"—that was all, and Muriel woke up, decided.

"Well, my daughter, which is it to be?" asked her father; "the pony and other pleasures, or this poor wee girl?"

"Papa, I saw One just like Jesus last night, and He looked at Janie sadly, and my pony, and all seemed nothing; everything seemed nothing—when he said 'Unto Me.' I will give up whatever you think I must; only fetch that lonely girl."

"God bless you, my child. Go yourself and tell her; go alone."

Alone she went up to the door; no one was there but Janie, and she sat disconsolate and sad.

"I think you are soon going away from here," she said, taking the thin, cold hands in hers, and looking into Janie's sad eyes.

"Where to?" and tears crowded into her eyes, and she caught up Tabbie in her arms.

"And Tabbie is to go with you, and you will be happy, ever so happy."

"Who says so? Is a man coming to fetch me? Oh, I feel afraid."

"No, mamma says I may take you home with me, and Jesus helped me decide. I know He wants you to go with me, and I'm going to love you, and Tabbie and ——" Here Mrs. Claughton, who had followed, came in, and Mrs. Knox, who was gossiping next door, saw her, and came too, and was quite pleasant when she heard the wonder of a lady taking the trouble to have such a child, and "nothing but the things she stood up in."

It was a snowy day, but, warmly clad in garments provided for her, Janie went hand in hand with Muriel to "Hazeldene," carrying Tabbie safely in a basket.

The dear aunt was carried to a respectable burial, and the lonely girl gathered into home love; and to prepare clothing, and see about her learning with the governess, was Muriel's delight, and as she gave up anything she would otherwise have had the joy of doing good seemed increased.

Christmas was near, and together they decorated the rooms with holly, and made glad preparation.

The day was cold and frosty, they had their games and enjoyed their fun After tea, the two girls were to have a time by themselves in the schoolroom, with the presents that had come to Muriel from relatives afar. They sat in their low chairs, amid festoons of evergreens and holly; on the rug, Tabbie luxuriated before the fire, with a scarlet ribbon round her neck.

"I can scarcely think it is all true even yet, and I nearly cry to think of Auntie, though she is happy now. How could you do it all for Tabbie and me," said Janie, tossing back her wealth of light hair which was now so well kept.

Muriel looked at her with her dark loving eyes, and said, "Perhaps, dear, I couldn't for you alone, only Jesus was behind, and He said, 'Unto me.' Now I am so very glad, we seem like sisters."

"Isn't it sad that lots of girls and boys have no homes, and lots of happy ones never think of loving and helping them?"

"Do you know, dear, I think if we are careful, and do without some things, we can look out and make someone happy, and it would be just lovely to be doing it for Jesus, because now He is gone away to heaven, He wants us to do it for Him."

"Oh, I would like to help you. I won't waste anything, and Tabbie shan't. When can we begin?" said Janie, putting her chair closer to Muriel's. And then and there began the spirit within them, that was to lead to loving deeds and Christlike work, of which another story must tell.
